FACTS.—The plaintiffs purchased privately from the defendant certain immoveable property which he had himself purchased in a Court auction in execution of a money-decree. There was an outstanding mortgage on the property which both the plaintiffs and the defendant were not aware of, as the same had not been mentioned in the proclamation of sale. Plaintiffs having been compelled to pay the amount of the mortgage, now sued the defendant for the reimbursement of the sum so paid. The Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs preferred this civil revision petition.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Petitioners:—The plaintiffs, being purchasers, are entitled to the relief claimed.

They are not bound by any fraud on the part of defendant's vendor, vide Alfatun v. Rao Karan Singh (1).

Mr. K. Bhashyam, for the Respondent:—The plaintiffs are not entitled to any relief. It has been held in Izzat-un-nisa Begam v. Kunwar Pertab Singh (2), that even if property is sold subject to encumbrances and the sale price which the auction-purchaser has to pay is diminished by the amount of that encumbrance, the purchaser and not the judgment-debtor mortgagor is entitled to the benefit of that amount, in case it turns out that the mortgage subject to which the property has been sold is bad. This case is the converse of it, but the principle applicable is the same.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar restricts his clients' claim to relief to the fact that they are purchasers. He concedes that the ground that there was a wilful suppression of the first mortgage when the mortgage to his clients was executed will not give him a cause of action to sue for the present relief. The plaintiff purchased the property from one who bought it at a Court sale in execution of a money decree against the mortgagor. It was not the duty of the mortgagor to mention in the proclamation of sale that a previous mortgage was subsisting. The purchaser took the property subject to all the encumbrances then subsisting. Consequently he was not entitled to claim from the mortgagor the money paid by him to the first mortgagee. In Izzat-un-nisa Begam v. Kunwar Pertab Singh (2), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that where a property was sold as being subject to previous encumbrances, and it was subsequently found that the encumbrances were unenforceable, the mortgagor was not entitled to claim from the purchaser the amount of the mortgages which the latter was absolved from discharging. The present case is the converse of that decision. The same principle governs both the cases, namely, that the purchaser takes the burden as well as the benefit, without liability to account to, or a right to claim compensation from, the mortgagor. Alfatun v. Rao Karan Singh (1), the principle underlying the applicability of section 69 has not been discussed. We must hold that the Subordinate Judge is right in his view that the plaintiff has no right to claim the benefit of section 69 of the Contract Act against the defendant.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (2), 36, 47—Decree—'Matters in controversy', meaning of—Orders dismissing application to sue in forma pauperis and awarding day costs, whether amount to decrees and are appealable.

The term 'matters in controversy' in section 2 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 must not be understood as relating solely to the merits of a case. It would cover any question relating to the character and status of the party suing, to the jurisdiction of the Court, to the maintainability of a suit and to other matters preliminary, which necessitate an adjudication before a suit is enquired into, in fact all questions concerning a pending suit. It does not, however, include an order passed on an application preliminary to the institution of the suit itself, such as an application for leave to sue, and proceedings passed in execution in regard to such orders as well as orders granting day costs are not appealable as they do not come within the scope of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, although such orders can be executed under section 36, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 393, col. 2; p. 394, col. 1.]

Narayan Balkrishna Kulkarni v. Gopal Jiv Ghadi, 23 Ind. Cas. 889; 38 B. 393; 16 Bom. L. R. 206; Secretary of State for India v. Jillo, 21 A. 133; A. W. N. (1898) 204 and Mozaffer Ali v. Hedayet Hosain, 34 C. 584; 5 C. L. J. 641, followed.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Kurnool, dated the 22nd August 1912, in Execution Petition No. 12 of 1912, in Original Suit No. 12 of 1909.

FACTS.—The appeal arose out of proceedings to execute an order for costs made by the High Court in an appeal against an order granting permission to sue in forma pauperis and another order awarding day costs in the same.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, for Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Respondents, raised a preliminary objection that the appeal was incompetent and relied on Secretary of State for India v. Jillo (1) and Mozaffer Ali v. Hedayet Hosain (2) He contended that the orders on question were not decrees, inasmuch as they were not passed in any pending suit, but only in proceedings preliminary to the filing of the suit itself.

Mr. S. Ranganadha Iyer, for the Appellant, argued contra and relied on Narayan Balkrishna Kulkarni v. Gopal Jiv Ghadi (3).

JUDGMENT.—An application was made in the Court below to execute two orders, one relating to the grant of costs by the High Court in a petition presented against an order granting permission to sue in forma pauperis, and the other relating to the grant of day costs to the plaintiff, when the defendant asked for an adjournment of the case. The District Judge dismissed the application. Hence this appeal. A preliminary objection is raised by Mr. Jayarama Iyer that no appeal lies. We think he is right. The orders referred to are not decrees. We are prepared to accept the extended definition suggested in Narayan Balkrishna Kulkarni v. Gopal Jiv Ghadi(3) regarding the meaning of the term "matters in controversy" in the definition section. That expression is not to be understood as referring solely to the merits of a case. Any question relating to the character and status of the party suing, to the jurisdiction of the Court, to the maintainability of the suit, and to other matters preliminary, which necessitate an adjudication before the suit is enquired into, will be covered by the expression. But there must be a suit pending. Taking first the application to sue in forma pauperis, it is only after the grant of the application that the suit begins. As pointed out in Secretary of State for India v. Jillo (1) the order rejecting an application to sue as a pauper will not be appealable as a decree. The application in such cases is analogous to a petition for leave to sue under Act XX of 1863. It has been held in Mozaffer Ali v. Hedayet Hosain (2) that orders passed on such applications are not decrees. The reasoning applies equally to the order passed in pauper application. We must, therefore, hold that proceedings passed in execution in regard to such orders do not fall under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, although the order itself can be executed under section 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This reasoning applies a fortiori to the order granting day costs. The preliminary objection is allowed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

(2) 34 C. 584; 5 C. L. J. 641.

Vendor and purchaser—Sale of land—Deficiency in extent—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55 (a)—Covenant for title, meaning of—Compensation for breach of contract—Claim made after execution of conveyance.

A covenant for title is only a contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that the seller has power to transfer the same. [p. 394, col. 2.]

Abdullah Khan v. Abdur Rahman Beg, 18 A. 322; A. W. N. (1896) 81; Doyal Krishna Naskar v. Amrita Lal Das, 29 C. 370; Tavala Nageswara Row v. Saripalli Sambasiva Row, 11 Ind. Cas. 337; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 361, referred to.

A suit to recover compensation for deficiency in the extent of land purchased is not a suit for damages for breach of a convenant for title, but one for part failure of consideration and for compensation for failure to perform the vendor's part of the contract in full. [p. 394, col. 2.]

Where under the contract the part unperformed bears only a small proportion to the whole of its value, a suit for specific performance with a claim for compensation would lie for the unperformed part. [p. 395, col. 1.]

The same rule also holds good even where the mistake as to the extent is discovered after the execution of the conveyance, as the vendee before that date has no right to inspect the land except with the vendor's permission. [p. 395, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 130 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Ellore, in Original Suit No. 846 of 1911.

Mr. R Narasimham, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Row, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

NAPIER, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam, allowing a claim for compensation by the purchaser of certain land in respect of a deficiency in extent. The District Munsif disallowed the claim on the authority of the case reported as Abdullah Khan v. Abdur Rahman Beg (1). The Subordinate Judge, relying on the case reported as Doyal Krishna Naskar v. Amrita Lal Das (2), where Abdullah Khan v. Abdur Rahman Beg (1), was dissented from, allowed the claim. The basis on which the claim is made is not stated in the plaint, but it was sought in argument to base it on the implied covenant for title relying on the case reported as Tavala Nageswara Row v. Saripalli Sambasiva Row (3). In my opinion that case does not apply. A covenant for title, is not a covenant that the land purported to be conveyed is of the extent stated in the sale-deed, but, as shortly defined in section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, a contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that he has power to transfer the same. Further, this suit is well known in English Law and has never been based on a covenant for title. In my opinion the suit is brought for part failure of consideration owing to a mutual mistake. Admittedly where a contract has been made and one of the parties is unable to perform the whole of his part of it, but the part which must be left unperformed bears only a small proportion to the whole of its value, a suit lies at the instance of the other party under section 14 of the Specific Relief Act, (I of 1877) for direction by the Court for specific performance of so much of the contract as can be performed with compensation in money for the deficiency. If, therefore, the parties had discovered their mistakes as to the area prior to the conveyance, the vendee could have brought a suit asking for compensation; and seeing that the Specific Relief Act is intended to give reliefs of a certain class where an injury has been suffered, it seems necessarily to follow that a legal injury is presumed by this Act to exist, for which the Act provides a remedy at one stage. I am, therefore, clear that there is a cause of action arising out of a legal injury. This is the view taken by the Courts of Equity in England : vide the leading case of Hill v. Buckley (4) and Dart's Law of Vendors and Purchasers, 7th Edition, page 675.

The only question that remains is whether this claim cannot be made after the execution of the conveyance. That point is expressly decided by Jessel, M. R., in In re Turner and Skelton (5). The learned Master of the Rolls says as follows: "No book can be produced to show that it was thought to be settled law that a purchaser loses his right to compensation by taking a conveyance, and on what principle should he do so? ..... The purchaser can only investigate the state of the property before completion by permission of the vendor, which permission the vendor is not bound to give. When the mistake is one which a purchaser could not by due diligence discover, why should he be held not to be entitled to compensation?" The learned Master of the Rolls followed an earlier decision, Cann v. Cann(6), and decided in favour of the vendee. It is true that a different view was taken in Jolliffe v. Baker (7), but I am prepared to follow the decision of this high authority as I find nothing in any Statute which makes the principle inapplicable.

The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree and have nothing to add.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—An application for setting aside an execution sale under section 47 and Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code was dismissed for default. The judgment-debtor made an application for setting aside that order under Order IX, rule 9. The learned Munsif rejected the application, holding that Order IX had no application to the case. This Rule was granted on the opposite party to show cause why the application should not be entertained either under Order IX or Order XLVII, or why such other order should not be made as to this Court might seem fit and proper. It is admitted by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that Order XLVII is not open to him, as the application was made to the successor of the trying Munsif. He relies upon Order IX or section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. I do not think he is entitled to rely on section 151. To allow him to do so would be to allow him to apply for a review which is expressly prohibited by the Code. He must stand or fall by Order IX. There is some apparent diversity of opinion as to whether the provisions of Order IX are applicable to matters arising in execution. In the case of Safdar Ali v. Kishun Lal (1), it was held that an application for re-hearing a matter arising in execution could be entertained under Order IX, rule 9. This is an express authority on the point. This case was distinguished in the case of Asim Mandal v. Raj Mohan Das (2) and it was held that all the provisions of Order IX were not applicable to execution proceedings. That was a case in which an application for execution was dismissed for default and it was held that a fresh application for execution would nevertheless lie as Order IX, rule 9, was not applicable to an application for execution. The matter came under discussion again in the case of Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (3) and it was held that Order IX, rule 13, was not applicable to a proceeding under rules 100 and 101 of Order XXI. Both these cases rely on the history of section 647 of the old Code in the course of its transformation into section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. Section 647 of Act XIV of 1882 was: "The procedure herein prescribed shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals." In consequence of some divergence of opinion between different High Courts as to whether the proceedings named in this section included execution proceedings, an explanation was added by Act VI of 1892: "This section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits". In 1894 the Judicial Committee held that even without the explanation the section did not apply to applications for execution of decrees, Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ulla (4). That was a case in which an application for execution had been struck off at the request of the decree-holder without any permission to apply again, and the question was whether sections 373 and 374 barred a fresh application. This objection was overruled by their Lordships. The result of this decision was that the explanation was held to be superfluous. Section 141 of the present Code runs as follows: "The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction." Supposing that the alteration in language is not material and adopting the construction given by the Privy Council to section 647 of the old Code, it will follow that section 141 does not apply to applications for execution.

An application for setting aside a sale under section 47 and Order XXI, rule 90, is not an application for execution. It is a miscellaneous proceeding in the nature of an original proceeding in which the auction-purchaser is the principal interested party. I do not think that a proceeding of this kind is excluded from the purview of section 141. I think, therefore, that Order IX, rule 9, is applicable to cases of this kind and the cases of Asim Mandal v. Raj Mohan Dass (2), Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (3) have not decided to the contrary. Both these rulings are careful in stating that all the provisions of Order IX are not applicable. Some of the provisions, therefore, may apply and the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (3) contains a clear indication that the interests of justice must have an important bearing in the matter: "It is not as though there was any necessity in the interests of justice that the provisions of rule 13, Order IX, should be applicable to proceedings in execution, because the order is not conclusive but is subject to the right of the person aggrieved to bring a suit." In the present case the order is conclusive: there is no regular suit and a review is impossible. The petitioner is, therefore, without any remedy other than Order IX, rule 9, to have an adjudication of her case. I may state that the Madras High Court favours the view contended for by the petitioner in this connection. See Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5). I would, therefore, make the Rule absolute with costs three gold mohurs and direct that the petition of the applicant should be dealt with in due course of law.

Mr. H. Balakrishna Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by a widow against her deceased husband's brother for maintenance. There was an agreement on on the 30th April 1906 by which the amount was fixed. The plea of the defendant is that since the date of the agreement, the plaintiff had been leading an immoral life and that consequently she is not entitled to claim maintenance. The Courts below have found that she did lead an immoral life, but that, at the time of the suit, she had reformed her ways and was living with her people. Mr. B. Sitarama Rao wanted to argue that she had gone wrong with a Sudra, that that entails upon her degradation from caste and that consequently she is not entitled to any maintenance. But there is no finding that the pregnancy which is found, was caused by cohabitation with the Sudra. We cannot allow that question to be argued in second appeal.

On the facts found by the Courts below the question for consideration is, whether the plaintiff is not entitled to what is called "starving allowance" from the defendant. It was argued in appeal that the fact that the maintenance was secured by a deed differentiated this case from Nagamma v. Virabhadra (1). We cannot accept this contention. The instrument is only evidence of the amount which is payable as maintenance. The basis of the claim against the defendant being the duty to maintain, the fact that it is secured by a deed in writing is not a reason for holding that subsequent unchastity would not work a forfeiture. The decision in Bhup Singh v. Lachman Kunwar (2) related to a compromise which was arrived at regarding the claim of the widow for possession of the property as heiress. It was held that the subsequent unchastity of the widow did not deprive her of this property. That decision has no bearing upon the present case. The right to maintenance is dependent upon texts which do not affect succession or inheritance.

(1) 17 M. 392.

(2) 26 A. 321; A. W. N. (1904) 13.

There is no direct authority upon the question. The text of Manu in Chapter XI, section 189, applies to all women entitled to maintenance. Under that text if a woman becomes unchaste, she is entitled to a starving allowance. The Prayaschitha Kanda of Yajnavalkya Smrithi, (verses 297 and 298) lays down the rules regarding provisions to be made for women who have misconducted themselves. It has been suggested by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the verses only apply to cases of women who have committed sins other than immorality; but the concluding portion of the commentary of Vijnaneswara on the Smrithi makes it clear that the two verses are intended to cover cases of unchaste women. The commentary is this: "To those women who though have suffered degradation (from caste) and for whom the rites of presenting (disconnecting) water libations, etc., have been performed accommodation, (that is), a small cottage built of straws and leaves should be given in the proximity of the main (building of the) house. Similarly food that is just sufficient for the maintenance of life and also raiment of a low description along with (the protection) of preventing her from being enjoyed again by another man should be given." This last sentence makes it clear beyond doubt that the commentator had in mind the case of fallen women. The text and the commentary, it is conceded, apply to all women alike whether they be wives, widows of co-parceners or mothers. Therefore, according to Manu and Yajnavalkya women who have gone wrong should be given some maintenance. The punishment for their unchastity is that they lose their right to the ordinary rate of maintenance. As against these two texts, the well-known text of Narada has been quoted which says that if a widow of a co-parcener is guilty of immorality, her maintenance should be resumed. This statement is quoted and commented upon by all the Smrithi writers (Mayukha, section 8, placitum 6; Smrithi Chandrika, Chapter XI, section 34, and Viramitrodaya, Chapter III, Part I, section 10). But in none of these texts there is any provision for a woman who had repented and was subsequently leading an honest life. It is not to be presumed from the omission to provide for such a contingency, that the presumption once made is to be irrevocable and that the fallen woman who had reformed is to be denied even a starving allowance. This question was raised in Visalatchi Ammal v. Annasamy Sastry (3) but was left undecided. In Nagamma v. Virabhadra (1) the learned Judges, following certain Bombay decisions, held that a widow who had misconducted herself was not entitled to maintenance. In the latest Bombay case, Parami Ramayya v. Mahadevi (4), the earlier cases are not approved. In the Madras case, the question whether subsequent reformation would make any difference was not considered. In Kandasami Pillai v. Murugammal (5), the learned Judges based the decision on the ground that the fallen woman had tried to foist upon her husband a child who had been born of adulterous intercourse and it was decided that such a woman was not entitled even to a starving allowance. This decision in Kandasami Pillai v. Murugammal (5) was considered by Miller and Sankaran Nair, JJ., in Subhayya v. Bhavani (6), and the learned Judges were of opinion that it should be confined to cases where the woman was continuing to lead an immoral life. In Chirukula Nagalakshmamma v. Chirukula Visvanatha Sastri (7), the wife was not shown to have repented of her misconduct. Mr. B. Sitarama Rao argued that the decision in Subhayya v. Bhavani (6) should not be extended to widows of co-parceners. As pointed out already, both the text of Manu and that of Yajnavalkya make no distinction between wives and other women, and we see no reason on principle why the widow of a co-parcener should be in a less advantageous position than the wife on the question of being allotted a starving allowance. There are observations in Roma Nath alias

The recent decision in Parami Ramayya v. Mahadevi (4), although it related to the case of a wife contains observations regarding the rights of other women to compassionate allowance. We see no reason for not applying the principle enunciated in that decision to the case before us. We think that the widow is entitled to some maintenance, although she is not entitled to the rate provided for in the deed. The Courts below have found that Rs. 24 a year may be awarded to her in this behalf. We accept that finding. We reverse the decrees of the Courts below and decree maintenance at Rs. 24 a year, from January 1911 till the date of suit. Each party will bear his or her own costs throughout.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22—Jat widow succeeding to her husband's holding—Re-marriage when new Rent Act in force—Life-interest in holding, effect on—Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856), s. 2, applicability of.

The Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act, XV of 1856, applies to the widows of those castes only among whom re-marriage was illegal before the passing of the above Act, and the widows of those castes in which re-marriage was prevalent at the time of the passing of the Act do not lose their interest in the property of their former husbands.

Therefore, a Jat widow who succeded to the holding of her husband while the Rent Act of 1881 was in force, does not lose by remarriage her life-interest in the holding.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 22nd July 1909, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Bijnor District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

PORTER, S. M.—The circumstances of this case are somewhat peculiar. The land in suit was the occupancy holding of one Mokha, who died in 1300 Fasli. He left a widow, the present appellant, who under the then Rent Act became entitled to a life-interest in the holding, but for some reason or another the name of the deceased's mother was entered and only after her death that of the present appellant. Appellant has since married again, and the respondent seeks to eject her on the ground that by re-marriage she has lost her life-interest.

The Commissioner has upheld this contention relying on section 2, Act XV of 1856. There are, however, several decisions by the Allahabad High Court to the effect that that section does not apply to the castes in which the re-marriage of widows was lawful before Act XV of 1856 was passed. There can be no question that among jats the custom of re-marriage of widows is of old standing. In these circumstances, I think this Court should accept the law as laid down by the Allahabad High Court and hold that appellant has not lost by re-marriage her life-interest in the holding.

On this ground I would set aside the Commissioner's decree and restore the decree of the Assistant Collector. Parties may be left to bear their costs in both Appellate Courts.

BAILLIE, J. M.—I agree.

—Drainage charge—Instalments, recovery of—Mistake —Limitation.

Section 44 of the Bengal Drainage Act is merely a permissive section and does not control the right of a land-holder or a superior tenant to recover the instalments under the two sections 42 and 44. [p. 400, col. 1.]

A mistake about the year of the instalment cannot save limitation. [p. 400, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Hughly, dated the 8th of July 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, first Court, Howrah, dated the 10th of June 1912.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Hari Charan Mukherjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Additional District Judge of Hughly, dated the 8th July 1913, affirming the decision of the Munsif. The suit was brought by the plaintiff to recover certain instalments in respect of the drainage charge. The facts which are simple appear to be as follows:—The defendants' father sold the property to the plaintiff. He concealed from the plaintiff at the time of sale the fact that the property was subject to the drainage charge. The plaintiff on his purchase granted a tenancy of the property to the defendants' father and he now sues the defendants in respect of the moneys that he has paid as such charge. As regards the claim, if it had been against the estate of the father of the defendants, apparently that would be barred under the provisions of the law of limitation, but the plaintiff claims to recover these instalments under the provisions of the Bengal Drainage Act. The only question that has been raised is as to whether, in order to enable the plaintiff to sue, it is essential that the mode and time of payment ought to be settled by the Collector under the provisions of section 44. The Collector has not been applied to in this case. But it seems to me that that is merely a permissive section and does not control the right of a land-holder or a superior tenant to recover the instalment under the two sections 42 and 44. The limitation on the right of the landlord or the superior tenant is that the tenant shall not be liable to pay more than 1/10th of the total amount in one year. It is not suggested that the amount sued for in the present case is more than 1/10th of the total amount.

The only point that has got any substance in this case is as to the instalment which became due in 1907. The learned District Judge has said: "It is conceded for the defendants that if the Bengal Tenancy Act regulates the question the claim for 1907 is in time." That concession might or might not have been made. But the gentleman who conducted the case in the Court below on behalf of the defendants was not authorised to concede anything that was not in accordance with the law, and, if it is shown that that is an error, we are bound to put it right. The fact is that the parties have got a difficulty in dealing with the European dates as compared with the dates of the Bengali Calendar. That is not an important thing. But what did really happen is that this instalment fell due on 30th Chaiyat 1313 B. S. That was the last day of the Bengali year. That date corresponds with the 13th April 1906. It was urged in the lower Appellate Court that the date was in 1907. That was clearly a mistake The last date on which the suit could be maintained for that instalment would be 1st Bysakh 1317 B. S. The Judge considered it to be 1318 If that is so, that instalment which was called the 1907 instalment but which was really the 1906 instalment, was barred by limitation.

Another question that has been raised in this appeal is as to interest. Interest was claimed in the plaint in a lump sum. It is not shown on what principle that sum was arrived at or what was the rate charged. Section 26 (1) of the Bengal Drainage Act provides that interest shall have to be paid at the rate of 4 per cent. No question was raised as regards this in either of the Courts below, and we must take it that the parties were content that the interest charged for had been properly arrived at, if payable. The question is not purely a question of law but a mixed question of law and fact, on which no finding has been made by the lower Appellate Court to enable us to consider whether the question has been purely considered or not. The result is that subject to the variation that I have stated, namely, as to the instalment that is called the 1907 instalment but which is really the 1906 instalment being barred by limitation, the present appeal stands dismissed. In the circumstances, as both parties have partly succeeded in the appeal, I think there should be no order as to costs of this Court.

Babuain SHEO RAJ KUAR—RESPONDENT.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 5—Occupancy rights—Mortgage, if loss of proprietary rights—Foreclosure, effect of—Loss of proprietary rights after annexation—Accrual of occupancy rights.

Under section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act, occupancy rights arise only when there has been a complete loss of proprietary rights and do not arise when the proprietor retains part of his proprietary rights, as in the case of a mortgage. In the case of a mortgage, complete loss of proprietary rights occurs only when a decree for foreclosure is obtained. [p. 401, col. 2.]

Occupancy rights arise under section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act, XXII of 1886, not only in favour of those proprietors who have lost their proprietary rights before the date of annexation of Oudh (13th day of February 1856), but also in favour of those who have so lost their rights between that date and 24th day of August 1866. [p. 402, col. 1.]

Akbari Begam v. Badri Prasad, 5 O. C. 176 at p. 179 and Suraj Bakhsh v. Bhagwandin, Selected Decision No. 7 of 1903, explained and discussed.

Second appeal from an order of the Additional Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 8th October 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Partabgarh District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(March 30th, 1915).—The mortgage of the proprietary rights of the appellant's ancestors took place in 1855, and there was a foreclosure some three years later, that is to say, after the year of annexation. It has been held by the Board in Suraj Bakhsh v. Bhagwandin (1) that a temporary mortgage would not give rise to an occupancy right under section 5 of the Rent Act, and in this opinion I concur. The wording of the section is "tenants who have lost all proprietary right", and in my view this does not apply to persons who retain part of their proprietary right. The respondent argues that section 5 is confined to loss of proprietary right by an act of law. His only argument in support of this contention is that section 7A is more specific, and I cannot accept it.

The facts of the present case are somewhat peculiar. The loss of proprietary right took place about a year after annexation, but some eight years before the 24th of August 1866 and some 10 years before Act XIX of 1868 by which rights of occupancy were created. Suraj Bakhsh v. Bhagwandin (1) lays down:—"The history of the section, which was enacted after discussion with the taluqdars of Oudh as a compromise in order to secure some concession in favour of village proprietors who had lost proprietary rights by the inclusion of their villages in taluqas and were not entitled to under-proprietary rights under Act XXVI of 1868, shows that it was intended to apply to those persons and those only who had lost their proprietary rights before annexation." The appellant's Pleader argues that this view goes further than the appeal before the Board warranted, and that at any rate, the section covers losses of proprietary rights between annexation and August 24 1866. In Akbari Begam v. Badri Prasad (2), which was followed in Bhoga Singh v. Pokhar Singh (3), Mr. Chamier wrote:—"Apart from its history the section itself is quite plain. On the face of it, it applies only to tenants who or whose predecessors had been in possession as proprietors at some time within thirty years next before February 13th, 1856, but who had lost their proprietary rights and had become mere tenants by August 24th, 1866".

One thing is clear, that section 5 was not intended to have prospective effect and extend to losses of proprietary right which took place after Act XIX of 1868 and probably not to losses which took place after August 24th, 1866. The Board in Suraj Bakhsh v. Bhagwandin (1) did not discuss a case of the nature now before me and the appellant argues that the Board have in consequence laid down a wider proposition than is justified.

(1) Selected Decision No. 7 of 1903.

(2) 5 O. C. 176 at p. 179.

(3) 8 O. C. 353.

The Board in Suraj Bakhsh v. Bhagwandin (1) do not appear to have had their attention drected to the opinion of Mr. Chamier, Additional Judicial Commissioner, in Akbari Begam v. Badri Prasad (2) decided in 1902, though they discussed an older decision of the Judicial Commissioner of 1885. Had their attention been so directed, possibly the Board would have modified the passage in their decision quoted above. Chapter IV of the Introduction of Syke's Compendium of Oudh Taluqdari Law gives a brief history of the recognition of tenants' rights of occupancy in Oudh, and I feel considerable doubt if the history affords any justification for refusing occupancy rights when the former proprietors lost their proprietary rights after annexation but prior to 24th August 1866, though it undoubtedly does when they lost their proprietary rights after that date. The arguments in Suraj Bakhsh v. Bhagwandin (1) are chiefly directed to the latter case. To refuse occupancy rights in the former case would necessitate reading into section 5 a limitation for which its plain language affords no justification.

I would, therefore, hold that the appellant has a right of occupancy in the land in suit and setting aside the order of the Additional Commissioner restore that of the Assistant Collector, respondent paying costs in all the Courts.

Mr. CAMPBELL, J. M.—I entirely agree.

Babus Provas Chandra Mitra and Surendra Madhab Mullick, for the Appellants.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee and Raghu Nath Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMWOOD, J.—These second appeals arise out of suits brought by the plaintiffs to set aside certain mortgage-decrees and sales held in accordance therewith, on the ground that they were tainted with fraud and that they were illegal and the sales were equally so, and that decrees which purported to be against their father did not bind the plaintiffs.

It is conceded that at the time the decrees were passed the plaintiffs were not in existence and, therefore, had no cause of action as regards setting aside the decrees. But the prayers of their plaint show that this is the main ground of their case, the sales being merely subsidiary. The first prayer clumps the decrees and sales together. The second is clearly based on the contention that the decrees being illegal, the sales held under them must also be illegal. On the plaint itself there seem to be many grounds on which the suit is not maintainable. The first we have already stated, that the plaintiffs were not alive at the time the decrees were passed. The second has been stated by the learned Subordinate Judge and not noticed by the Judge in appeal except in general agreement, namely, that on paragraphs 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the plaint it must be held that the reconveyance of the shares of Bhabhutar and Ganput, whom the plaintiffs claim to represent by means of the hiba-bil-ewaz, made the properties the self-acquired properties of Bhabhutar and Ganput and if it ever was ancestral property, which does not seem to be asserted, it ceased to be so. Then there is the ground taken in paragraph 4 of the written statement that the plaintiffs have not specifically mentioned any instance of fraud in their plaint. In dealing with this the learned Judge in the Court below has pointed out that the only allegation in regard to the decree is contained in paragraph 9, and on analysing that in the light of the fact that the plaintiffs were not in existence, he found that that refers to some parties who are not before the Court and it is not known who they are, so that there is substantially no allegation of fraud against the decree which was obtained after contest and which was never contested in execution by the plaintiffs' ancestor. If, therefore, the plaintiffs had no interest in the property at the time the decree was passed and the property was not ancestral property, it is difficult to see how they can seek to come in in execution.

It is argued on the authority of the case to which one of us was a party, the case of Debendra Nath Bhattacharjee v. Prasanna Kumar Chakravarti (1), that they can bring this suit on the basis of the alleged frauds in execution only, and that whether it be treated as an application under section 47 or as a regular suit is a matter of form and not of substance, as was pointed out in that case. In a passage at the end of the judgment which is obiter it was laid down, if there was fraud in the execution proceedings it will be open to the party affected by the fraud to make an application under section 244, Civil Procedure Code; if instead of an application he presents a plaint in the Court competent to deal with the matter, the defect is one of form rather than of substance and there is no real want of jurisdiction, and this is supported by a large number of authorities, and we have no desire to differ from it in any way, as it has nothing to do with the present case which is based essentially upon the prayer to set aside the decree. As the plaintiffs were not interested in the decree they cannot now come in in execution and that alone is sufficient to show that their suit is not maintainable.

The appeals are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree that the appeals should be dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

RAMESHAR SAHAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 134, 148—Mortgage · Mortgagee selling absolute interest in mortgaged property—Redemption—Limitation.

A mortgagor's right to redeem subsists until it has been extinguished by act of parties or order of a Court. Act of parties means act of parties to the mortgage transaction. No assertion of adverse title on the part of a mortgagee during the continuance of a mortgage can set time running against the mortgagor so as to deprive the latter of his right to redeem within a period of sixty years. [p. 406, col. 1.]

If a mortgagee sells the mortgaged property out-and out to a third person, the possession of the vendee does not become adverse against the owner of the equity of redemption from the date of the sale, and a suit for redemption would lie under Article 148 of the Limitation Act. [p. 405, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Moradabad, dated the 21st July 1913.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, (with him the Hon'ble Mr. Gokul Prasad), for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal (with him Mr. Gulzari Lal), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I have stated the facts of this case at some length in my remand order of July the 3rd 1914. The finding of the lower Appellate Court on the remanded issue puts it beyond question that the plaintiff is the successor-in-interest of the original mortgagor. The essential facts may, therefore, be recapitulated. On the 24th of January 1867 the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiff mortgaged by conditional sale a house in the town of Chandausi to one Hazari Lal and put him in possession. On June the 15th, 1873, Hazari Lal sold this shop to Panna Lal, the defendant-appellant. There had been no foreclosure of the mortgage by conditional sale. In the deed of June the 5th, 1873, Hazari Lal recited that the shop in question had come into his possession under a mortgage by conditional sale, but that he was now in possession as a full owner. He did not say that he had foreclosed the mortgage. He undoubtedly purported to sell the shop itself and not any mortgagee rights in respect of the same. The lower Appellate Court has found that the vendee, Panna Lal, did not in fact believe that his vendor had power to convey an absolute interest in the shop.

I must pause to note that this finding is challenged in argument on behalf of the appellant. It is contended that it was not fairly open to the lower Appellate Court to arrive at this finding. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the very recital in the sale-deed of 1873 was calculated to put the vendee on his guard, that the vendee made no sort or kind of inquiry but went into the transaction with eyes shut. He has, however, gone further than this. Relying partly on the wording of the document and partly on certain facts and circumstances regarding the location of the shop, residence of the parties and so on, and partly on certain oral evidence, he has come to the conculsion that, when the vendee chose to accept his vendor's assertion that he was in full proprietary possession of the shop, he had good reason for believing that this assertion was not true, and did not in fact believe it to be true. Sitting as a Court of second appeal, I am not prepared to hold that the lower Appellate Court had not before it materials on which it was entitled to arrive at the above finding.

If this finding cannot be disturbed, it seems to me that, according to a long course of decisions in this Court, this suit for redemption must succeed and the plea of limitation set up by the defendant-appellant must be overruled. I refer to Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1), Kampta Prasad v. Bakar Ali (2) and Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (3). It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that these decisions are inconsistent with later opinion in this Court itself. On this point reference is made to the case of Behari Lal v. Muhammad Muttaki (4). I have also been referred to a case decided elsewhere by one of the learned Judges of this Court, namely, Dal Singh v. Gur Prasad (5), and it has been contended that the same learned Judge has recently re-affirmed the view taken by him in Oudh in an unreported decision in Second Appeal No. 547 of 1914 pronounced by him on March 11, 1915. Further, I have been asked to consider that the current of decisions of this Court with regard to the application of Article 134 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) is inconsistent with the opinions pronounced by other High Courts. There would certainly appear to be a clear consensus of opinion to the contrary in the Bombay High Court, reference being made to Baiva Khan Daud Khan v. Bhiki Sabza (6), Yesu Ramji Kalnath v. Balkrishna Lakshman (7), Pandu v Vithu (8) and Ramchandra v. Sheikh Mohidin (9). Other cases to which I have been referred in argument may be found reported as Ram Kanai Ghosh v. Raja Sri Sri Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur (10) and Chettokulam Prasanna Venkatachela Reddiar v. Collector of Trichinopoly (11). Finally it was suggested that the latest decision of this Court relied upon on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, namely, that in Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (3), proceeds upon a view as to the effect of a mortgage by a trustee or a mortgagee amounting to a "purchase" within the meaning of Article 134 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act, or I should say to a transfer of the property in question within the meaning of the same Article as it appears in Act IX of 1908, and is inconsistent with the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (12).

With regard to a good deal of this argument I think it is sufficient to say at present that, although the Article of the Limitation Act in question refers to transfers both by trustees and by mortgagees, it may well be that by reason of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) different considerations may govern the application of this Article in cases where a transfer has been made by a trustee or by a mortgagee respectively. On this point I desire to add a few words presently. I mention it merely for the sake of noting that the Calcutta and Madras cases to which I have referred above were both cases of transfer by trustees. For the same reason I find nothing in the decision of Behari Lal v. Muhammad Muttaki (4) to conflict with the course of decisions of this Court governing transfers by mortgagees. All the older cases of this Court relied upon by the present respondent are not even referred to, much less overruled, by the Full Bench which decided Behari Lal v. Muhammad Muttaki (4). It seems to me, therefore, that I might content myself with saying that I have before me at least three reported cases, each decided by a Bench of this Court, in favour of the respondent's contention that the present suit is not, upon the findings arrived at by the lower Court, barred by limitation. Sitting as a single Judge of this Court I am bound by the decisions above referred to.

I desire, however, as the matter has been fully argued before me, to place on record my opinion that the decision which I propose to pass may be supported independently of the authorities above referred to, by a line of reasoning somewhat different to that which has been followed by other learned Judges of this Court. The suit as brought is against the legal representatives of the original mortgagee and against Panna Lal as transferee of the mortgagee rights. It is on the face of it a suit for redemption of a mortgage and governed by the provisions of Article 148 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908). Such a suit is undoubtedly maintainable within the prescribed period of sixty years, against either a mortgagee or any transferee of mortgagee rights. When, therefore, the defendant Panna Lal pleads that the suit as against him is barred by limitation by reason of the provisions of Article 134 of the first Schedule to the Limtiation Act, it seems to me that his pleading requires some further analysis. He must be taken to plead that he is not a transferee of the mortgagee rights, but a person who has somehow come into possession of the property in suit, and that his possession can only be disturbed by means of a suit for ejectment. Now it is quite conceivable that, in a case like the present, the original mortgagor (or his successor-in-interest) might have gone to the original mortgagee (or his successors) and redeemed the mortgage out of Court, receiving in return a full discharge of the mortgage-debt and the mortgagee's claims. If, after having done this, he found himself obstructed by the defendant Panna Lal in his attempt to enter into possession of the mortgaged property, any suit which he might bring against Panna Lal would clearly be a suit for recovery of possession of the kind contemplated by Article 134 already mentioned. Whatever view might be taken as to the meaning of that Article, it could not be denied that the suit was governed by it. In the present case the controversy in reality is whether Article 134 applies at all. The answer to this question must depend on whether Panna Lal is a transferee of the mortgagee rights or is simply a person who has come into possession of the property in suit under a title adverse to that of the original mortgagor.

I venture to suggest that on this view of the case three possible contentions are open: (1) It might be said that the Court will not go beyond the terms of Panna Lal's document of title. He holds what purports to be a sale-deed of the property out and out. Therefore, he cannot be treated as a mere transferee of the mortgagee rights. The suit as against him would, therefore, not be a suit for redemption at all, but a suit for recovery of possession. (2) It might be contended that the Court will not go behind the actual status of the parties to the transaction embodied in the sale-deed of June 5th, 1873; or the legal effect of the said deed. The vendor under that deed purported to convey something which he did not possess, namely, full proprietary rights in respect of the house in suit. He did, however, possess some rights in respect of the house, namely, mortgagee rights. The legal effect of the deed, therefore, would be to convey to the transferee whatever rights Hazari Lal possessed at the time of the transfer. Those rights being rights of a mortgagee, Panna Lal became in law a transferee of the mortgagee rights. A suit for redemption will, therefore, lie as against Panna Lal and the period of limitation for such a suit is sixty years. (3) The case may be looked at from the point of view which has been actually taken in the reported decisions of this Court which I am prepared to follow. If it had been found that Panna Lal entered into possession of the house in dispute under the sale-deed of June 5th, 1873, in the honest belief that he had obtained full proprietary rights in the said house by reason of that deed, and with the obvious and avowed intention to exercise the rights of a full proprietor, he would, under this view of the case, be entitled, as the learned Judges of this Court said, to the "protection" of Article 134 aforesaid. In effect, as it seems to me, this view of the case involves holding that Panna Lal's possession became adverse against the owner of the equity of redemption from the date of the sale in his favour.

On either of the last two views the suit as brought is within time. I do not desire to discuss the matter further, beyond remarking that, if the learned Judges who have accepted the first of the views set forth above with regard to the operation of Article 134 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act are right in the interpretation which they have put on the words of that Article, considered by themselves, it seems to me that a conflict of principles becomes involved between the provisions of that Article and those of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). A mortgagor's right to redeem subsists until it has been extinguished by act of parties or order of a Court. Act of parties must mean act of the parties to the mortgage transaction. I take it to be settled law that no assertion of adverse title on the part of a mortgagee during the continuance of a mortgage could set time running against the mortgagor so as to deprive the latter of his right to redeem within a period of sixty years. The sale by Hazari Lal in favour of Panna Lal was, so far as the vendor was concerned, simply an assertion of adverse title as against the mortgagor. This, I take it, could not operate so as to extinguish his right to redeem, or set time running against the mortgagor. If anything can be held to have set time running against him, it must be Panna Lal's entry into possession under the terms of the sale-deed in his favour. Now assuming for the sake of argument that the present suit had been brought within twelve years of the sale of June the 5th, 1873, it is worth while to consider what sort of suit the mortgagor would have been bound to bring. If he had sued Panna Lal for ejectment as a trespasser he would most undoubtedly have been met by a plea that if Panna Lal took nothing else under this sale-deed he had at least acquired Hazari Lal's rights as a mortgagee, and that the suit against him should be one for redemption and not for ejectment. Yet if the view which seems to have been taken by the Bombay High Court regarding the operation of Article 134 to the first Schedule of the Limitation Act is correct, it would seem to follow that, if the mortgagee in possession chose, even on the very day after entering into possession, to execute a deed purporting to sell the property itself, and not his mortgagee rights therein, to a third party, he could thereby compel the mortgagor to sue for redemption within twelve years of the sale, or to lose his rights by operation of the law of limitation. I find it very difficult to believe that this is either the intention of the Legislature or the effect of the provisions of the law which I have been considering. The result is that I dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

A High Court has concurrent jurisdiction with the District Judge to grant leave to appeal under section 46 of the Insolvency Act and if the District Judge refuses leave to appeal, the High Court is not debarred from granting it. [p 407, col. 1.]

In the matter of an application for leave to file an appeal to the High Court from the orders of the District Judge of Dacca, passed in Insolvency Case No. 125 of 1912 and dated respectively the 4th May, 10th June and 4th July 1914.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysack and Babu Bepin Chandra Bose, for the Petitioners.

Babu Prakash Chandra Mazumdar, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—The matter in respect of which an order for leave to appeal is sought, is a question whether the property described in the application should be re-sold. There is no appeal on the question whether the Court was right in refusing to set aside the order passed for default of the 10th June, except so far as the effect of that order was to affirm the order for sale. To make this matter clear, I desire to record the fact that the applicant states that he is prepared to argue this appeal on the materials now on the record without further evidence, oral or documentary.

The order of the 4th May was, in my opinion, an order under the Insolvency Act and though the Judge has refused leave to appeal under section 46, there is a concurrent jurisdiction in us to grant leave to appeal and I would accordingly do so. The appeal is admitted and there is no necessity to make a further application under Order XLI.

The Rule, therefore, is made absolute and the costs will be dealt with upon the hearing of the appeal.

COXE, J.—I agree.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 25th June 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Ballia District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 22nd, 1915.)—The Collector has found, as a matter of fact, that the occupancy land in suit has been part of the math property for a very long time, and the appellant urges that there was no evidence to support this finding. I have looked at the evidence and think there is. It is true that the land has been recorded in the patwari's papers as occupancy tenancy of particular mahants. The appellant urges that it was acquired originally by Mahant Budhram Gir, and that, when he was removed in 1903, the land ceased to be recorded in his name, although one would naturally have expected that the dismissed mahant would have clung to his own occupancy tenancy. Moreover, the appellant himself in the present plaint describes Sheolochan as occupancy tenant of the land, whereas he could not be occupancy tenant in his own right as he only held it for five years. I consider then that the mahants have been managing the land on behalf of the math. It is not necessary then to consider the question whether, when a mahant dies who has held an occupancy tenure, he is succeeded by his chela or not. The real question is that decided in Selected Decision No. 19 of 1912, whether or not an association like a math can be treated as a tenant having a right of occupancy in land under section 11 of the Tenancy Act. On the other side, I am referred to the High Court decision in Parmanand Singh v. Mahant Ramanand Gir (1), who happens to be the defendant in the present case, in which it was held that the manager of a math could acquire an occupancy holding on behalf of the math. Sir Duncan Baillie, in Selected Decision No. 19 of 1912, has given in considerable detail his reasons for his finding, whereas the learned Chief Justice has dealt with the question somewhat briefly. I am not convinced that Selected Decision No. 19 of 1912 has been wrongly decided I would, therefore, set aside the order of the Collector and restore the order of the Assistant Collector, respondents paying costs throughout.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—I agree with the Senior Member. If we follow Selected Decision 19 of 1912 the math cannot be treated as the occupancy tenant of the land, and if it is argued that the manager of the math should be considered the occupancy tenant, respondent, has no status, as by Selected Decision 8 of 1904 a chela cannot inherit the occupancy rights of his guru.

Second appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur, dated 27th February 1914.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Brij Nath Vyas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, now respondents, sued on a bond. The defendants pleaded payment. The matter in dispute was referred to arbitration; the arbitrator decided in favour of the plaintiffs. Objections were taken by both parties. The lower Court, after considering the objections, dismissed them and drew up a decree in terms of the award. From that decree an appeal was filed to the Court of the Additional Judge. The Additional Judge accepted the appeal and on the 16th of August 1912 entertained an application signed by one of the plaintiffs and the Vakil engaged for both plaintiffs on the one side, and by the defendant Ram Harakh and a Pleader who appeared for both defendants on the other. The application was to the effect that both parties agreed that the appeal should be accepted (manzur) and that the case should be decided on the merits. The Additional Judge ordered that the appeal is accepted and the case be decided on the merits. Some evidence was taken and the case remained on in the Court of the Additional Judge until the 4th of April 1913. Then, so far as the record shows, the case went automatically to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Basti. No doubt there must have been some order, but whether that was an order passed by the District Judge or by the Additional Judge does not appear. There remains the fact that on the 5th of April the case appeared in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Basti and he began to exercise jurisdiction upon it. It remained in that Court until the 21st of January 1914, when we are told that by an order of the District Judge of Gorakhpur the case was made over to the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur; that officer held that no appeal lay under the circumstances to the Court of the Additional Judge, that the admission or agreement of parties was on a point of law and was to the effect that a certain Court should re-try the case, that this agreement was not binding on the plaintiffs, and that it did not give that Court or the present Court any jurisdiction to hear the appeal. He accordingly dismissed the appeal.

It is obvious that the record is incomplete, that there are papers which ought to be on the record, which are not there now, and the absence of these papers has caused the waste of a whole day of time by this Court. I expect the learned District Judge to look into the matter and see to whom it is owing that this record has been drawn up in such an incomplete way.

The defendants have come here in appeal and have submitted a memorandum of appeal consisting of seven pleas. The first is to the effect that the learned Additional Judge had no jurisdiction to set aside the order of his predecessor dated the 16th of August 1912. I do not know, nor can I ascertain from the record, who the predecessor of the learned Additional Judge was. So far as the record shows Mr. Rose was the only Additional Judge who dealt with this case. The second plea is to the effect that the agreement of the parties dated the 16th of August 1912 was binding on both the plaintiffs and the defendants and the plaintiffs have no right to resile from the same. There is no doubt that the procedure adopted by the learned Additional Judge in passing that order of the 16th August 19 2 was very erratic. The order in question was a decree based upon an award. From that decree no appeal lay to the Additional Judge and he had not the least power to adopt the procedure which he afterwards did. The 3rd and 4th pleas are practically to the same effect. The fifth plea is to the effect that the plaintiffs were estopped from questioning the jurisdiction of the Court to hear the appeal on the merits. This follows my decision on the preceding plea. Then there is a plea to the effect that even if the appellants' Vakil made any admission on a point of law, it is not binding on the appellants. The last plea is that the Additional District Judge being seized of the case, the order of transfer to the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge was bad in law. I cannot find the order of transfer on the record and it is impossible to say what that order was. In the absence of the order it must be persumed to have been rightly made until the contrary is shown. A great deal of argument was addressed to me and several cases cited as to the power of the District Judge to withdraw an appeal from a Subordinate Court when that Court has gone to some length in the case. I quite agree with the contention that it is most inexpedient for orders of this nature to be passed, but I cannot say that such orders are illegal, specially when I am not satisfied as to the circumstances under which the order was passed.

The result then is that we are carried back to the appeal which was filed in the Court of the Additional District Judge, no appeal lay and everything that followed must be swept aside as without jurisdiction and I come back, though not quite by the same road, to the decree of the 30th of May 1912.

I dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

An uncle, if he shared in cultivation with his nephew at the latter's death, can succeed to the latter's holding. [p. 409, col. 2.]

Where a nephew died and was succeeded by his widow, who re-married and thus ceased to have an interest in the husband's holding but remained in possession, and the uncle thereupon claimed the holding:

Held, that the uncle should be recorded as an occupancy tenant. [p. 410, col. 1.]

Per Campbell, J. M.—An uncle is no heir to his nephew under section 22 of Act II of 1901. [p. 410, col 1.]

Third appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Meerut Division, dated the 27th October 1914, confirming that of the Collector of Bulandshahr District in a case of correction of jamabandi.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—(March 23rd, 1915). —The Collector and Commissioner have found that Khushia shared in the cultivation of his nephew Harsukh during the latter's lifetime, and this finding of fact cannot be disputed in revision.

But this application raises two interesting points of law which require consideration.

The first is, "can an uncle succeed to the rights of a nephew under section 22". I think the answer to this must be in the negative. The sub-section (e) says clearly and definitely that a collateral to succeed must be "the nearest male relative in the male line of descent" and the whole trend of section 22 is in the same direction. Paragraph (a) also refers to a lineal descendant in the male line of descent and a father is carefully excluded from inheritance.

I think that the section must be read literally and that this excludes Khushia from any right of inheritance.

The next point is whether the widow being in sole possession of the occupancy holding of her first husband and the other claimant Khushia being out of possession, any order could be passed, even if Khushia were recognised as entitled to succession, to record him as an occupancy tenant, with the widow as the sub-tenant, or whether the widow could not claim to be recorded as a non-occupancy tenant since her occupancy rights lapsed on re-marriage. In such a case I am of opinion that a collateral could claim to be recorded as the occupancy tenant, as there would be considerable danger of his rights, as a reversioner lapsing if he could not claim them until the widow died or was ejected. For the reasons above given, I would set aside the orders of the Commissioner and Collector and restore the orders of the Assistant Collector, to the effect that Khushia has no title to ask for the removal of the widow's name and the substitution of his own.

I would make him to pay the widow's and the zemindar's costs in all Courts.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 2nd, 1915).—I am unable to find any decisions which throw light on the question of whether a man can succeed to the occupancy holding of his brother's son under section 22 (e). The words "Nearest collateral male relative in the male line of descent" seem to me to mean the nearest male collateral in the male line of descent from a common ancestor. Line of descent means a line drawn from any person in a genealogical tree downwards and not upwards, so the words in section 22 must refer to the line of descent from a common ancestor. It is true that it is somewhat anomalous that in the case of a self-acquired occupancy tenancy the father could not succeed to it on his son's death, whereas the father's brother could, if he had shared in the cultivation. But an uncle is as much a collateral in the male line of descent as a cousin.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

As regards the second point raised by my colleague, I would leave it to the Collector to settle how the widow's name should be recorded, if she still remains in possession after her late husband's uncle has been recorded as occupancy tenant.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—The appeal stands dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 4 (12)—Grove—Improvement—Land—Plaint once admitted, whether can be rejected subsequently.

The planting of trees in holding is an improvement within the meaning of section 4 (12) of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 411, col. 1.]

Therefore, a grove is land within the meaning of the Tenancy Act. [p. 411, col. 1.]

A plaint once admitted cannot be afterwards rejected on the ground of any defect subsequently discovered in it. [p. 411, col. 1.]

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Agra Division, dated the 4th September 1907, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Farrukhabad District, in a case of assessment of rent.

JUDGMENT.

PORTER, S. M.—(May 2nd, 1908.)—This is a second appeal in a suit under sections 150, 156, Agra Tenancy Act, for the assessment of rent on certain rent-free land. In the Court of first instance defendant-respondent claimed proprietary rights in the land, and under section 199 of the Act defendant-respondent was required to institute a civil suit for the determination of the question of title. The Civil Court found that defendant-respondent had no proprietary rights in the land. The Assistant Collector then proceeded to assess the land to rent, and fixed the amount at Rs. 35 per annum.

On appeal the Commissioner held that as the land in suit had been judicially found in 1904 to be planted with trees, which constituted a grove, and as no change in the character of the land had been shown to have taken place since the date of that finding, the area in suit did not come within the definition of land in section 4 (2) of the Agra Tenancy Act.

The Commissioner, therefore, dismissed the suit.

I do not think the Commissioner's finding can be sustained. It is clear from the record that the land is cultivated. The planting of trees in a holding is an "improvement" as defined in section 4, clause (12), of the Act; and section 88 of the Act lays down the conditions under which trees may be planted by tenants. It would be absolutely inconsistent with these clear provisions of the Act to hold that a holding or part of a holding planted with trees is not "land" within the scope of the Act.

Further "rent" is defined in clause (3) of section 4 as "whatever is .....to be paid or delivered by a tenant for land held by him, or on account of groves", etc. The term 'grove' means a collection of trees standing on land. It seems to me impossible to hold that a land-holder may sue for the rent of a grove under the provisions of the Tenancy Act, but that the land on which the grove stands lies outside the provision of the Act.

The Commissioner also found that the plaint was inadequately stamped, but has not based his decree on this defect. It has been held by the High Court that a plaint once admitted cannot be afterwards rejected on the ground of any defect subsequently discovered in it. Plaintiff-appellant must be required to make good the deficiency, if this has not already been done.

Subject to the making good of the deficiency in the Court-fees, I would set aside the decree of the Commissioner, and restore the decree of the Assistant Collector with costs in this and lower Appellate Courts.

DARRAH, J. M.—I concur. I have recently come to the conclusion in another case that a grove must be considered to be "land" within the meaning of the Tenancy Act. I, therefore, hold the same view as the Senior Member.

Civil revision against an order of the Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 24th October 1914.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ishwar Saran, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application for revision arises out of a suit filed in the Court of a Munsif. The parties agreed to refer the matters in difference between them to arbitration and an order of reference was made accordingly. The time for completing the award was extended from time to time up to December 2nd, 1912. On the case being called on on that date, it was found that the award had not been filed. The Munsif then made an order superseding the arbitration and fixed December 10th for the hearing of evidence. On December 5th the arbitrators filed an award purporting to have been made on December 2nd, but the Munsif held that the award had not been made in time and he declined to re-call his order superseding the arbitration. Ultimately he tried the case out and dismissed it. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, and one of his grounds of appeal was that the award had been made in time, and, therefore, the arbitration should not have been superseded The Additional Judge held that the Munsif was wrong in holding that the award had not been made within time merely because it had not been filed in Court within the time limited, and that he should have enquired whether it had been made by the arbitrators within that time. Accordingly he remanded the case under Order XLI, rule 23. The Munsif after inquiry dismissed the suit again, holding that the award had not been made within time, and also that it was invalid on account of misconduct by the arbitrators. The plaintiff appealed and the Additional Judge found that the award had been made within time, and he remitted an issue on the question of misconduct The Munsif found on the issue in favour of the plaintiff. The Additional Judge agreed with the Munsif and passed a decree in accordance with the award which was in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant has applied to this Court for revision of the order of the Additional Judge, on the ground that the Munsif's second order holding that the award was invalid on account of misconduct of the arbitrators could not be interfered with by the Additional Judge. No appeal lies against the order of a Court under paragraph 15 of the 2nd Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure setting aside an award, and it is contended that the order cannot be challenged in appeal against the decree in the suit, because even if it is erroneous it does not affect the decision of the case within the meaning of section 105 of the Code. The applicant relies upon the decisions of this Court in Ganga Prasad v. Kura (1) and Kalyan Das v. Piary Lal (2). In the latter case Aikman, J., merely followed the former which was a decision by two Judges. The learned Judges who decided the former case profess to follow the decision of Banerjee, J., in Shyama Charan Pramanik v. Prolhad Durwan (3), but an examination of the judgment of Banerjee, J., shows that he was of opinion that an Appellate Court was entitled in an appeal against a decree to interfere with the order of the Court of first instance setting aside an award. He held that a second appeal lay against the decision of the Appellate Court and he sent the case back in order that certain evidence might be taken. The judgment of Banerjee, J., seems to us to give no support whatever to the view taken in Ganga Prasad v. Kura (1). The decision in the last-mentioned case and the decision in Kalyan Das v. Piary Lal (2), which follows it, seem to stand quite alone. They are inconsistent with several decisions of this Court beginning with the Full Bench decision in Nanak Chand v. Ram Narain (4) and ending with the decision of Knox and Griffin, JJ., in Ram Jiwan v. Nawal Singh (5), with the decision of the Bombay High Court in Damodar Trimbak v. Raghunath Hari (6) and with a long string of cases in the Madras High Court ending with Achuthayya v. Thimmayya (7). It seems to us that an order of a Court setting aside the award of an arbitrator and deciding that the case shall be tried by the Court is an order affecting the decision of the case within the meaning of section 105 of the Code. It has been held that the words "affecting the decision of the case" in section 105 mean "affecting the decision of the case on the merits," but even so we think that the order of the Munsif setting aside the award was liable to be challenged in appeal against the decree. As long ago as 1870 Sir R. Couch and Kemp, JJ., held that such an order affected the decision on the merits, see Mothooranath Tewaree v. Brindabun Tewaree (8). The weight of authority is clearly against the applicant and we are of opinion also that the order of the Munsif was liable to be challenged in appeal against the decree. It is not suggested that there is any other ground upon which we could in revision interfere with the order of the learned Additional Judge. This application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 1st of September 1910.

JUDGMENT.

SHARFUDDIN, J. This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 1st September 1910.

The learned District Judge decreed the suit of the plaintiff and hence the present appeal by the defendants. In order to understand the grounds urged against the judgment of the lower Court, it is necessary to refer to certain facts antecedent to the institution of the present suit.

The suit is to recover a sum of Rs. 10,243-6-0, principal and interest on a registered mortgage bond dated the 27th February 1902 executed by the defendant No. 1, Udit Narain Choudhury, as head and manager of a Hindu joint family of which the other defendants are members.

The plaintiff's mother, Musammat Moharani Bibi, inherited the property of her father, Brij Bhukhan Lal. While she was in possession of the property, she sold a share in Mouza Mohammadpore Bowari in 1884 to Nena Choudhury, father of Udit Narain. All the time the members of Nena's family were joint, but in 1899 there was a partition and the property in Mohammadpore Bowari fell to the share of Nena, who had originally purchased it as the manager of a joint family including himself and his brother and their issue.

Moharani Bibi died in 1890 and Ram Anugrah Persad, generally known as Polai Lal Mahta, became guardian of the plaintiff who at the time was a minor. In 1901 the plaintiff filed a suit for setting aside the kobala executed by his mother, Moharani Bibi, in favour of Nena Choudhury during his minority, on the ground that the sale was made without legal necessity and the property was conveyed for an inadequate price. At that time the plaintiff filed seven other suits of a similar nature to cancel alienations of property made by his mother in favour of other persons.

On the 27th February 1902 a petition of compromise with the permission of the Court was filed in the suit, in which it was stated that Udit Narain was to be allowed to retain the property which his father had bought from Moharani Bibi in consideration of a payment of Rs. 14,000. It was stated in the petition that Rs. 6,000 of this sum had been paid in cash and that Udit Narain on his own behalf and as manager of the joint family, consisting of himself and the other defendants in that case and in this, had executed a mortgage-bond for the balance, i.e., Rs. 8,000. This bond of Rs. 8,000 is dated the 27th February 1902, and is the bond in suit.

Udit Narain alleges that this bond was a sham transaction and it was never intended to be enforced. He gives a most absurd explanation why and with what object he subjected himself to a liability of Rs. 8,000. I do not think it is at all necessary to refer to his story, as the suit should have been decided on another ground.

One of the issues raised is this: "Whether the share of Mouza Kolooha Jairampore, Chakla Nai, does not belong to the defendants; if so, whether the bond in suit is invalid and inoperative for being registered in the Mozafferpore registration office."

It appears that in the bond for Rs. 8,000 executed by Udit Narain two properties were mortgaged, namely, Mohammadpore in the Darbhanga District and one kowri of Kolooha in the Mozafferpore District. The question is whether this small share of Kolooha belonged to Udit, and if it did not belong to him, whether the registration of the bond in the Mozafferpore District was invalid, and whether if invalid, the bond is enforceable.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged that this share in Kolooha was purchased by Udit from one Usman (P. W. No. 1).

This witness says:—"I sold a share of one kowri in Kolooha, a kobala was executed, but it was not registered. The price was Rs. 30. I do not remember who witnessed the execution. It was executed two or three days before the execution of the bond in suit. I do not remember if Polai was present. I sold the property at the request of Udit Narain, who wanted to register it in Mozafferpore in order to complete the transaction quickly and had no property in the district. He said if there was delay in registration the compromise might fall through."

It is apparent from the above statement that as Udit had no property in the District of Mozafferpore and as he was anxious to see that the bond was quickly registered, he asked Usman to sell to him a small share in Kolooha.

Under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act the sale of immoveable property of value less than Rs. 100 may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property.

The value of 1 kowri in Kolooha is said to be only Rs. 50 and the sale-deed admittedly was not registered and hence in order to effect a proper and binding sale, possession of the share should have been delivered to Udit. There is admittedly no evidence that any delivery ever took place. The sale, therefore, was not complete when the bond executed by Udit was registered. That being the case, he had no property in the District of Mozafferpore when the bond was presented for registration in the Mozafferpore registration office and hence the Registrar of that office had no jurisdiction to register that bond, and that bond, therefore, did not create any liability against Udit Narain. It was so held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Harendra Lal Roy v. Hari Dasi Debi (1). The facts of this reported case are these.—A property not belonging to a lady, alleged to be situated within the original jurisdiction of this High Court, was entered in the schedule of the mortgaged properties attached to a mortgage-deed for the purpose of securing registration in the Calcutta registry office. Their Lordships held "that the entry of such a property was a fictitious entry and represented no property that the mortgagor possessed or intended to form part of his security. Such an entry intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a district where no property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact existed, was a fraud on the Registration Law and no registration obtained by means thereof was valid." It appears that the High Court had passed a decree on the strength of the mortgage and their Lordships held that "the High Court had no jurisdiction to make the decree, and the deed not having been registered in accordance with the Registration Act the mortgagee had no title to maintain the suit."

As to the provisions of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, it was held in the case of Makhan Lal Pal v. Bunku Behari Ghose (2) that the transfer by the sale of tangible immoveable property of value less than Rs. 100 can be effected only by one of the two modes mentioned in section 54, clause 3, of the Transfer of Property Act, viz., by a registered instrument or by delivery of possession.

On the legal aspect of the transaction the appellant is bound to succeed, but we have no doubt that the defence set up by the appellant was a most dishonest defence. His story of the sham transaction in order to oblige Polai is a story which cannot be believed. In the above circum-

COXE, J.—I agree. The circumstances of the case leave no doubt that the parties never intended that the share of Kolooha should really be sold to Udit Narain or mortgaged to Polai Lal. The so-called sale was a mere device to evade the Registration Act.

Res judicata—Suit for ejectment of tenant—Previous suit for arrears of rent—Relationship of landlord and tenant not found to exist.

A mahant of a temple brought a suit for ejectment, on the ground that he was a muafidar of the land in question and the defendant his tenant paying him a cash rent. Defendant alleged that he was the pujari and held the land as such and had never paid rent. In a previous suit between the parties for arrears of rent, the Collector had decided that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties, as an agreement under which the defendant was alleged to have agreed to pay rent was not proved:

Held, that the former decision operated as res judicata.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 15th August 1911, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Allahabad District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

BALLIE, S. M.—(March 19th, 1912).—The plaintiff in this suit for ejectment claims to be the mahant of a temple. The defendant, whose ejectment is sued for, claims to be the pujari. Plaintiff alleges that he, as mahant, is muafidar of the land in question and that the defendant holds as his tenant paying him a cash rent. Defendant alleges that he holds as pujari, he does not and has never paid rent for the land and that he is not liable to ejectment at the instance of the plaintiff. The Court of first instance, with reference to an appellate decision of the Collector in an arrear of rent case, found that the matter was res judicata, that the Collector had decided that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not obtain between parties. On this ground he dismissed the suit.

The Commissioner, on the other hand, finds that the Collector's decision was simply that the agreement fixing the amount of rent had not been proved and that, therefore, it did not make the question now in issue res judicata. In this matter I agree with the Court of first instance rather than the Commissioner. Before the Collector, appellant made exactly the same claim as he now makes, that he held as pujari independently of respondent and that he had never paid rent. The respondent alleged to an agreement by the appellant to pay rent. The Collector found that the agreement was not proved. It was this agreement, and this agreement only, which, according to the plaintiff, now respondent, brought the relationship of landlord and tenant into existence. When it was found that there had been no agreement, it was also found that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist: defendant's claim was in fact supported. I consider that the matter was made res judicata by the Collector's decision and that the Court of first instance rightly dismissed the suit.

A few words may be said in regard to appellant's claim that a question of proprietary right was involved and that, therefore, the Commissioner's decision should be cancelled on that ground. The evidence on record in the case does not enable me to decide whether a question of proprietary title is or is not involved. A muafidar is not, as such, a proprietor. He may acquire a right to be declared a proprietor by prescription, but whether this prescription exists in the present case there is no evidence on record to show. It is, however, unnecessary to arrive at any definite conclusion on this subject, inasmuch as the appellant's appeal is upheld.

I would allow the appeal with costs on respondent throughout.

BROUN, J. M.—I concur.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 12, 25—Guardian of minor's person—Court's power to put minor in possession of guardian.

Where a person has been appointed guardian of the person of a minor, the proceedings cannot be regarded as complete until the guardian has obtained effective possession of the person of the ward. If the guardian is not in such possession, the Court should take action under section 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) to place the minor in his possession. [p. 417, col. 1.]

Sham Lal v. Bindo, 26 A. 594; A. W. N. (1904) 135; 1 A. L. J. 266, referred to.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 7th November 1914.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hamilton, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by a guardian lawfully appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act, VIII of 1890. The facts are peculiar. Musammat Utma Kuar applied to the District Judge of Azamgarh to be appointed guardian of the person and property of her minor daughter, Chandra Kuar. She stated in her application that the minor had been removed from her care and custody by her married daughter, Musammat Bhagwanta Kuar, sister of the said minor; but she did not ask the Court to take action under section 12 of Act VIII of 1890. Notice was issued to Musammat Bhagwanta Kuar, and certain matters having been inquired into by the Court, an order was passed on the 26th of August 1914 appointing Musammat Utma Kuar guardian of the person of her minor daughter, and a formal certificate of guardianship was issued to her dated 31st August 1914. On 15th September 1914 Musammat Utma Kuar presented an application to the Court, alleging that she was still unable to obtain possession of the person of the minor and asking the Court to take steps to cause the minor to be placed in her charge. This application was rejected by the learned District Judge, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to take any action in the matter under the provisions of Act VIII of 1890 and that Musammat Utma Kuar's only remedy was by way of a regular suit. According to the principles laid down by this Court in Sham Lal v. Bindo (1), with which we entirely concur, no regular suit for the purpose suggested could have been brought. We are satisfied that the minor Chandra Kuar became a ward of the Court from the date of the order appointing Musammat Utma Kuar to be her guardian and on general principles the District Judge became thereby empowered to enforce, for the benefit of the minor, all the provisions contained in the Guardians and Wards Act, VIII of 1890. One of these provisions is to be found in section 24, which lays down that a guardian of the person of a ward is charged with the custody of the ward and must look to his (or her) support, health and education. Musammat Utma Kuar was asking the Court to assist her to perform the duties imposed upon her by the section above quoted, and we are quite satisfied, on general principles alone, that she was entitled to the assistance of the Court. The matter has been argued before us on various technical grounds. An objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent that the order of the District Judge, whether right or wrong, is one against which no appeal lies under the provisions of section 47 of Act VIII of 1890. It has also been argued that whatever powers the Court possesses by way of controlling the possession of the person of a minor ward, its jurisdiction is limited by sections 12 and 25 of the Act itself. Neither of these sections, it has been contended, applies to the present case. Over the question whether an appeal lies or not we are disposed to pass lightly. If we are satisfied that the learned District Judge has in fact rejected the application of Musammat Utma Kuar upon wrong grounds, then he has refused to exercise jurisdiction in a matter in which it was incumbent upon him to exercise such jurisdiction. If we cannot interfere by way of appeal, we can interfere by way of revision, as laid down by section 48 of Act VIII of 1890. With regard to sections 12 and 25 of the said Act, we think it possible that either or both of these sections might be applied. On the whole, if the matter is to be dealt with as a technical question with reference strictly to the wording of Act VIII of 1890, the preferable view seems to us to be that the Court below could have taken action, and was bound to take action, under section 12 of the Act. In view of the provisions of section 24 of the Act to which we have already referred, the appointment of Musammat Utma Kuar to the guardianship of the person of this minor ward could not be regarded as complete until she had obtained effective possession of the person of the ward, so as to enable her to discharge the duties laid upon her by that section. It is quite true that section 12 of the Act provides for the temporary custody of a minor in the interim between application being made to the Court and the final conclusion of the necessary proceedings for the appointment of a guardian of the person of the minor, but as we have already pointed out those proceedings are really not complete until the guardian of the ward has obtained the custody of the minor. We think, therefore, that it was still open to the Court below to take action under section 12 of the Act. An alternative view would be for the Court to proceed on the assumption that what ought to have been done had been done, and that the custody of the minor had technically been made over to the lawfully appointed guardian from the date of such appointment, in this view the provisions of section 25 would apply. From any point of view we are satisfied that the Court below was wrong and its order cannot be sustained. We set it aside and remand the case to the Court below with directions to re-admit the same to the file of pending applications and dispose of it according to law. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause and can be dealt with by the Court below when finally disposing of the matter.

Case remanded.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Meerut Division, dated the 17th September 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Muzaffarnagar District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—This case raises a point, upon which the different members of the Board have held divergent opinions for some time past. The question is whether a distant collateral, who admittedly shared in cultivation with his relative, a deceased occupancy tenant, can claim occupancy rights in succession, when he was not the nearest collateral relative to the deceased.

Mr. Baillie in Nakched Upadhya v. Ram Sabhat Ram Tiwari (1) expressed the view that the "nearest male relative" means the nearest male relative who shared in the cultivation: and that the contrary view appeared to him entirely irrational. Mr. Reynolds, however, pointed out that this was an obiter dictum, as the question was not then in issue, and declined to express an opinion. The question came directly in issue in Marama v. Mahra (2), an unreported decision, a copy of which has been filed in the present record.

Mr. Tweedy then wrote that "It has been held by the Board and the High Court that nearer a male collateral who does not share in the cultivation does not exclude a more remote collateral who does share:" and wished to follow what he thought was the established case-law governing the matter. Mr. Reynolds, however, in a carefully reasoned judgment strongly dissented. And there the matter rests. I have not been referred to any rulings by the Board and the High Court in support of Mr. Baillie's and Mr. Tweedy's views and the only High Court ruling shown to me, Shankar Lal v. Dalip Singh (3), is entirely opposed to them. This judgment admittedly referred to Act XII of 1881, but it is, I think, equally applicable to the present Tenancy Act.

(1) 9 Sel. Dec. 1910.
(2) Petition No. 6 of 1910-11.

I am entirely in accord with Mr. Reynolds' reading of section 22 of the Tenancy Act: and think with him that that section must be read strictly and literally, as it makes such important alterations in the ordinary law of succession. Section 22 says clearly that failing the other heirs mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (d), the nearest collateral male relative shall succeed to an occupancy holding, provided that no such collateral relative shall be entitled to inherit who did not share in the cultivation of the holding at the time of the tenant's death.

I consider that it is a deliberate misinterpretation of clear words to read into this section any collateral relative other than the nearest. This the appellant admittedly is not. Agreeing with the Commissioner in his interpretation of section 22, I uphold his order and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 15th January 1913.

Mr. Bajpai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Abdul Majid, (with him Messrs. Hamidullah Khan and Haribans Sahai), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal in a suit for possession which arose out of certain previous litigation. There was a zemindari share of a 4 anna 8 pies belonging to one Harnam Singh. There were two incumbrances on this share, one was a mortgage of Rs. 931 in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents now before us. The other was a charge of Rs. 1,200 due on account of a premium lease in favour of the present defendants-appellants. Harnam Singh sold this share, and a suit for pre-emption was brought in which both parties to the appeal now before us appeared as joint plaintiffs. The result was that their right of pre-emption was decreed and it was held that a sum of Rs. 3,300 represented the sale price, apart from incumbrances. The Court, therefore, passed a decree for pre-emption of the entire share, jointly in favour of all the plaintiffs then before it, on payment of Rs. 1,169. In view of the fact that the incumbrances on the property were unequal in amount and different in nature, the pre-emption decree as passed was calculated to lead to difficulties in the execution department, and it is clear that it did so. One set of plaintiffs, who are the plaintiffs-respondents now before us, paid into Court the entire sum of Rs. 1,169 and asked for possession. Objections were raised by the other set of plaintiffs, the defendants-appellants now before us, and eventually a petition of compromise was presented to the Court executing the pre-emption decree. That petition was to the effect that possession over a share of 2 annas 8 pies should be given to one set of plaintiffs (the respondents now before us), and over a share of 2 annas to the other set of plaintiffs, the appellants now before us. It was further provided that the payment of Rs. 1,169 should be treated as having been made on behalf of all the decree-holders, pre-emptors, and that the holders of the premium lease should give up their rights under the same. The order passed on this petition was that the parties should be considered bound by it and the decree executed accordingly. Unfortunately at a later stage the Court executing the pre-emption decree seems to have felt some difficulty about duly carrying out its own order. It had directed possession over a share of 2 annas 8 pies to be given to one set of plaintiffs, the present respondents. An objection was put in by the other set of plaintiffs (the present appellants) to the effect that, though proprietary possession might be given, the executing Court was not entitled to eject them from their possession as lessees. On this the Court said that all it was concerned with in executing the decree was to give proprietary possession to the parties in accordance with the terms of the compromise, and it passed orders accordingly. The present suit as brought by the plaintiffs-respondents was to recover possession of a share of 2 annas 8 pies. As it happened, the lease in favour of the opposite party covered a share of 4 annas 3 pies only, and it has been finally decided by the Courts below that the present plaintiffs are, as a matter of fact, in actual possession of a share of 5 pies and had no need to sue in respect of the same. The question, however, remains as to the claim of the plaintiffs to obtain actual possession over the share of 2 annas 3 pies, in respect of which the defendants-appellants are asserting their rights to continue in possession under the terms of their lease. The case went to trial in the Courts below on a number of issues, all of which have been decided in favour of the plaintiffs. An important question of fact was whether the sum of Rs. 1,169 paid into Court by the present respondents actually came out of their pockets, or whether some portion of the same was contributed by the defendants-appellants. This point has been found in favour of the plaintiffs on the evidence, and if the finding is correct, there is certainly no equity in favour of the defendants-appellants. The one contention on behalf of the latter which we have to consider is as to the admissibility in evidence of the compromise filed in the execution Court. Undoubtedly that compromise has been admitted in evidence by the Courts below and has been made the basis of many of their findings. It has been contended before us that, if this document were ruled out as inadmissible, even the finding with regard to the payment of Rs. 1,169, though proceeding on the face of it upon other evidence, would require to be re-considered. We have been referred to a great deal of case-law on the subject, which we do not propose to discuss in detail. The position of the parties before the execution Court was that of joint holders of a decree, which on the face of it merely entitled them to recover possession of a certain zemindari property on payment of a certain sum. The decree, as it stood with reference to the litigation out of which it arose, was an imperfect decree, and apart from the compromise entered into by the parties it is quite possible that the decree could not have been executed without an application to the Court which passed it to amend it or to bring it into conformity with the judgment. The joint decree holders were undoubtedly entitled to enter into a compromise amongst themselves as to the manner in which that decree should be executed, and their petition of compromise presented to the execution Court did not as such require registration. It was a petition to a competent Court and in so far as it was submitted to and was acted upon judicially, it was undoubtedly binding upon the parties, vide Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (1),

(1) 20 A. 171; 25 I. A. 9; 2 C. W. N. 129.

The petition was so far acted upon that proprietary possession was given to the two sets of decree-holders in accordance with its terms. To this extent, at any rate, the document was admissible in evidence, and if it was admissible in evidence, it was not possible for the Courts to take into consideration one part of it and exclude another part. Moreover, we are of opinion that, on the facts of this particular case, the question of the manner in which the joint decree-holders were entitled to enjoy the fruits of their decree was so intimately connected with the question of the satisfaction or extinction of the charges which the two sets of decree-holders severally held on the property, the subject-matter of the decree, that the one question could not be dealt with without the other. We are, therefore, of opinion that this petition of compromise, although unregistered, was admissible in evidence and binding upon the parties, by reason of the order to that effect which was passed upon it by the Court executing the decree. In principle the case is closely analogous to a case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (2), and on principles of equity we have no doubt that these defendants-appellants ought to be held bound by the terms of the compromise, of which they have already taken advantage by obtaining proprietary possession over a share of 2 annas in respect of which they paid no money into Court. For these reasons we are of opinion that this appeal must fail, and we dismiss it accordingly with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876), ss. 3, 12, 22—Manager, order of, effect of—Civil Courts, jurisdiction, of while estate held by Revenue Authorities—Interest, accumulation of, rendering estate insolvent—Deputy Commissioner's work—Manager, power of, to render interest on original debt.

Where the Manager of an encumbered estate is the principal necessary party and there is no allegation that he, in making the order he did in pursuance of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, was not acting bona fide:

Held, that section 22 of the Act will alone bar the suit. [p. 420, col. 2]

It is clear from the provisions of sections 3 and 12 and other sections of the Act that during the time that an estate is held by the Revenue Authorities under the Act, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere on a suit brought by the creditors. The creditors have their remedy against any order of the Manager before the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner. [p. 421, col. 1.]

Where the Manager finds that the accumulation of interest, whether under a Civil Court decree or under any other kind of debt, would render the estate insolvent, he must at once get the Deputy Commissioner to release the estate. [p. 421, col. 1.]

If, therefore, the Manager does not possess the power to reduce the interest on the original debt as contracted, the operation of the Act would not only frequently but in every case prove infructuous. [p. 421, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

HOLMWOOD, J.—We have considered every section of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act VI of 1876, and the rules made thereunder, and we are clearly of opinion that this suit is not maintainable. The Manager is the principal necessary party and there is no allegation that he, in making the order he did in pursuance of the Act, was not acting bona fide. Section 22, therefore, will alone bar the suit. But it is clear from the provisions of section 3 and section 12 and other sections that during the time that the estate is held by the Revenue Authorities under the Act the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere on a suit brought by the creditors. The creditors have their remedy against any order of the Manager before the Deputy Commissioner and before the Commissioner. As a matter of fact in this case they went to the Deputy Commissioner and got the only grievance, which they had urged, removed. The Deputy Commissioner allowed them to retain possession of the portion of the property which they had purchased under a decree for Rs. 1,100.

The other question, which was raised before the Commissioner and which is practically the question before us was that the Manager had no jurisdiction to reduce the interest to 3 per cent. This objection was not pressed before the Deputy Commissioner, who held that the reduction of the interest to 3 per cent. was the only possible means of saving the estate from insolvency. Now it is obvious that the decree of the Civil Court could not have exceeded the principal of the original debt, except by the accumulation of interest. It was, therefore, the only question that had to be decided, whether the interest which had merged in the decree must be taken to be a part of the principal. That point was apparently argued, but not precisely in that form before the Deputy Commissioner, and it was agreed on all sides that 3 per cent. interest was the only possible basis upon which the creditors could get any relief. If he had not accepted this, the estate would have had to be restored to the owner and then the jurisdiction of the Civil Court undoubtedly would have revived; but, as the Judge points out, that would be flying in the face of the Act and undoing the benefits which the Act has intended to confer, and it is obvious that in every case this must be so; for, if the Manager finds that the accumulation of interest, whether under a Civil Court decree or under any other kind of debt, would render the estate insolvent, then he would have at once to get the Deputy Commissioner to release the estate. If, therefore, he did not possess the power to reduce the interest on the original debt as contracted, the operation of thl Act would, as the learned Judicial Commissioner has pointed out, not only frequentey but in every case prove infructuous.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

No appeal lies to the District Judge from an order of the Record Officer. [p. 421, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge of Etawah, dated the 3rd of March 1914.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Abdul Raoof, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint in this case sets out that certain land is held by the defendants as a muafi grant from the zemindar. The plaintiff says that he is no longer willing to allow the land to remain rent-free and he asks that a decree be passed for recovery of the muafi land. The plaint was instituted, as the description shows, in the Court of the Record Officer, District Etawah. The Record Officer heard the case and passed orders for resumption of the land and the ejectment of the defendants. The defendants went into appeal in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Etawah. That officer held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the grant was a resumable grant at the pleasure of the grantor; further, that the defendants had acquired proprietary rights therein.

The plaintiff comes in appeal here and says that no appeal lay to the District Judge from the order of the Record Officer. This plea appears to be a good plea and must prevail. The appeal is decreed, but the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court will be sent back to that Court for return to Mahabbat and others, if they apply to the same, in order to be presented to the Court having jurisdiction.

Where an agreement between a debtor and the creditor, that a credit in the latter's book of a certain amount in favour of the former should be treated as "payment of interest" by the debtor, is relied on to save the bar of limitation, the evidence must show that the debtor was a party to the arrangement and the accounts charging interest sent to the debtor from time to time were accepted by him. Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 264 of 1911.

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar and K. Raja Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT. This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad dismissing the plaintiffs' suit to recover a certain sum of money which was advanced to the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 by the 1st defendant's father who is said to have undertaken subsequently to pay the money to the plaintiffs in case of default by defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The Subordinate Judge found that the suit against defendants Nos. 5 and 6 was barred by limitation and as far as defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are concerned, there was no consideration for their father's undertaking to pay. The date of the loan is 7th July 1901. The suit itself was instituted only on the 3rd August 1911.

The plaintiffs' case in effect is that as the interest fell due, a sum was advanced to the debtor equivalent to that interest, which was discharged with that amount, and the defendants thus became indebted to the plaintiffs in two principal sums which must be treated as a new loan, though it clearly represented the original amount and its interest. There was in this case really no loan advanced, but what happened is described thus by the plaintiffs' 1st witness:

"Every 6 months or one year interest statements are prepared in the case of loans advanced to other firms. The interest is entered in the accounts. Even if no payment is made, the amount is credited and debited in the accounts. Copies of these accounts are sent to the firm owing money. Such accounts were in this case sent to defendants Nos. 5 and 6." There is no evidence that these defendants either acknowledged receipt of these accounts or that they accepted the liability to pay the consolidated amount. It is argued that in order to save the bar of limitation no actual payment is necessary and that the evidence shows an agreement between the parties intended to have the effect of discharging the interest that was due, and that this has the same effect as payment of money. The answer to this argument is that the arrangement or agreement must be one to which the debtor was a party, and the creditor cannot by an unilateral act without the assent of the debtor save the bar of limitation. In the case relied on by the appellants, Kariyappa v. Rachappa (1), there was a mutual settlement. The accounts had been gone into by the parties and the balance struck. This constitutes payment of the smaller debt. It is not the mere existence or a statement in writing of a demand that constitutes a payment. It is only the striking of the balance when there are debts due on both sides that constitutes it. In In re Tricumdas Mills Co. Ltd. (2), as also in the other cases cited, there was an arrangement entered into between the parties at the time the accounts were struck whereby the interest was added to the capital and the whole was treated as a new loan. In this case no such arrangement has been proved and we cannot, therefore, hold that these entries, adding interest to the capital made only by the creditor without the consent of the debtor, constituted a new loan. We, therefore, find that the plaintiffs' claim to recover money from defendants Nos. 5 and 6 is barred by limitation, and had become barred on 2nd February 1906, the later payments not reviving it. The next question is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the amounts from defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The plaintiffs' case is that 1st defendant's father, Chokalingam Chetty, was appointed as their agent in May-June 1901, and that he, as their agent, lent a sum of Rs. 10,068-4-6 on their behalf to the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 without the plaintiffs' consent. The debt has been discharged in part and part of it still remains unpaid. When Chockalingam Chetty's connection with the agency ceased in 1906 plaintiffs' new agent, Raman Chetty, insisted that "this debt which was advanced without the plaintiffs' knowledge and in order to oblige debtor, should be excluded from the accounts as an old one uncollected or that the said person should pay it up in cash. Thereupon the plaintiffs and the said Raman Chetty (the new agent) agreed and (thereupon) the said amount was debited as Nadappu account in the name of the A. Rm. A. M. S. shop of the 5th and 6th defendants in the said Raman Chetty's new account on the 29th Jhai of Visvavasu year (11th February 1906) as for 21st instant (3rd February), showing therein (also) the suretyship of the said Chockalingam Chetty. A letter was also obtained from the said Chockalingam Chetty on the 1st Masi of the said Visvavasu year (12th February 1906) in the name of the said Raman Chetty in his capacity as agent of the plaintiffs' shop specifying the particulars of the said suretyship." It is not proved in this case that on the date of Chockalingam Chetty's surety-bond the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the account from Chockalingam. The release of a claim or the compromise of a doubtful claim would, no doubt, have been a sufficient consideration for the undertaking by Chockalingam Chetty to pay, but in this case the plaintiffs did not give up their claim against defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The persons who were entitled even after this agreement to recover the money from the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were the plaintiffs and they have now sued to recover that amount. The money was not advanced to the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 on any guarantee given by the 1st defendant. On the date of Exhibit A the claim against defendants Nos. 5 and 6 was barred by limitation.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the Subordinate Judge is right in holding that there was no consideration.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Atibunnissa and her husband, Hossein Ali, jointly executed a deed of wakf on the 4th of Sravan 1270. Certain properties mentioned in schedule ka to the plaint were the subject of dedication. Under this deed Hossein Ali was to be mutwalli for his life and Atibunnissa after him for her life. After their death without children the nearest relative, who was also dianutdar or honest, was to succeed as mutwalli, but on his death the successor would be not necessarily his heir-at-law but one amongst the near relatives of the dedicators who was dianutdar.

Hossein Ali died in 1279 and in 1282 Atibunnessa executed another deed of wakf in respect of the properties in schedule ka and additional properties in schedule kha. This towliatnama was revoked and in 1284, 1289, 1291, 1297, she executed different towliatnamas, but none of them came into operation and she continued to act as mutawalli until 1894, when she executed three documents one after another in favour of Abdul Gafoor, father of defendant No. 1. The first document was dated the 25th March, and relinquished some of the wakf properties in favour of Abdul Gafoor. The second document was a towliatnama in favour of Abdul Gafoor in respect of ka and kha properties and the third document was an ekrarnama, dated the 27th September, confirming the towliat, and agreeing that neither she nor her heirs or representatives would object to the same. In 1899 she applied for permission to sue as a pauper for setting aside the documents of 1894 as procured by fraud and undue influence. The permission was refused and she died in 1905 without bringing any suit. In 1907, Khoka Mia, the father of the plaintiff, brought a regular suit for declaration of his title to the wakf properties and recovery of possession. To that suit defendant No. 1 pleaded, saying he was in lawful possession as mutwalli under the towliatnama of 1894. Khoka died pending suit and the plaintiff and his brothers, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were brought in as his heirs. The suit was decreed by the first Court, but was dismissed by the High Court on the ground that all the heirs of Khoka Mia could not be mutwallis. A fresh suit by the person who would be the mutwalli was permitted, and accordingly this suit has been brought.

The pleas of the defendant, amongst other things, were that Khoka Mia was not the step-brother of Atibunnissa and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The first Court decreed the suit in respect of the properties in schedule ka, holding that Khoka was the step-brother of Atibunnissa and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

Defendant No. 1 appeals and on his behalf it has been argued (1) that the suit is incompetent as not in compliance with the provisions of section 92 of the Civil Procedure, Code, (2) that Khoka Mia is not proved to be the step-brother of the wakif, Atibunnissa, (3) that the suit is barred by limitation.

As regards the first point, it was not taken in the Court below, and even if it had been taken, the plaintiff does not claim any of the reliefs under section 92. He does not ask the Court to appoint him a mutwalli but to declare that he is the rightful mutwalli and that defendant is not, and for recovery of possession.

As regards the second point, we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that Khoka Mia was the son of Naziruddin and the step-brother of Atibunnissa. We are not prepared to believe the document called shafeenama as a genuine document. It never saw the light of day before it was produced in this case; the entry of its being filed in a previous case is suspicious. In any case it was not filed in the previous suits of Khoka Mia in which it would have been very cogent evidence. Nor are we very much pressed by the application made by Hossein Ali and Dost Ali ignoring its existence, or by the petition of Atibunnissa for drawing the pension of her father. Khoka was admittedly illiterate and Hossein Ali and Dost Ali were influential men. They succeeded in keeping him in the background as if he were nobody. It is proved, however, by the evidence of respectable relatives that he and his family lived in the family residence at Shahpore, until in consequence of an open rupture he had to leave the place. The most potent evidence, however, in his favour is the kobala executed in his favour by Atibunnessa Bibi on the same date on which she executed the wakfnama of 1282. The two documents are executed on the same date, attested by many of the same witnesses and registered by the same am-mukhtar, this kobala describing Khoka as the son of Khondkar Naziruddin. There is no explanation why he was so described and why the relative witnesses attested the document containing such a description. There is a rent-decree which described Khoka as the son of Moyez, but assuming that the same person is meant, this was after the rupture and even then it is not made out that he was so described to the knowledge of Atibunnissa. It is quite possible, as is suggested at the Bar, that his mother was not of the same rank with the father and he was not, therefore, looked upon as the equal of Atibunnissa, but there is no evidence of that even and the admission of Atibunnissa cannot be got over.

The next question is limitation. It is contended that as Abdul Gafoor was put in possession under the towliatnama of 1894, his possession became adverse from that time or at all events from July 1898 when, according to the application of Atibunnissa for permission to sue as a pauper, he set up a title in denial of her rights.

It is said that a mutwalli cannot renounce and appoint another mutwalli. That may be so in respect of a mutwalli who is not himself the appropriator. Atibunnissa in the towliatnama of 1894 expressly says that she was acting in her double capacity. She renounced in her capacity of mutwalli, but appointed Gafoor in her capacity of the wakif. It is laid down in the Kunyah: "If the mutwalli appointed by the founder says, 'I resign my mutwallishíp' this declaration has no effect unless the declaration is made in the presence of the founder or the Cadi, who would thereupon remove him:" Fatawa Mahdiya, Volume II, page 575, quoted in Nawab Khajeh Salimulla Bahadur v. Abdul Khayer Mohammad Mustafa (1). Here the founder herself made the renouncement to herself and made the appointment herself; such an appointment by the founder is quite distinguishable from an appointment by one mutwalli of another without the intervention of the founder or the Cadi. This appointment, however, cannot enure against the express terms of the original deed of wakf, and must terminate with the life of the wakif. This case is, therefore, clearly distinguishable from the case of Nawab Khajeh Salimulla Bahadur v. Abdul Khayer Mohammad Mustafa (1).

So far as the wakf of 1270 was concerned, i.e., in respect of the ka properties, the vacancy occured on the death of Atibunnissa in 1905 and the plaintiff was quite within time in 1910.

As found by the learned Subordinate Judge the plaintiff is quite eligible for the post of mutwalli and his brothers do not compete with him.

We, therefore, agree with the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs. Hearing fee Rs. 150.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal from a decision of the Sessions and Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur, dated the 28th of May 1913.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff has been found to be an ek-jaddi co-sharer with the vendor. We may assume, (although it was not admitted in the Court below) that the defendant-vendee is a co-sharer in the mahal but not ek-jaddi. The defendant pleaded, amongst other pleas' that the right of pre-emption only arose in the case of a sale to a stranger and that in any event the sale had taken place after the plaintiff had refused to purchase. The Court below has decided against the defendant, hence the present appeal.

In the entry in the wajib-ul-arz a number of words are left to be understood. The meaning, however, seems to be pretty clear. It may be literally translated as follows:—

"The right of purchase at the price which a stranger may give shall be prior (in favour of) the ek-jaddi co-sharer, after that with the co-sharers in the mahal, after they refuse the property may be sold to a stranger." The only reason for holding that this limits the right of pre-emption to a case where the property is sold to a stranger, is the introduction of the words "at the price which the stranger may give". The clause appears to us to be very similar to the clause in the wajib-ul-arz referred to in the case of Gurdial v. Mathura Singh (1). In that case the wajib-ul-arz extract was translated as follows:—

"If any co-sharer should wish to sell or mortgage his property, then first he shall transfer it to a co-sharer in the patti and after that to other pattidars of the mahal and after that to the owners of the other mahals and in case of their refusal, he is at liberty to transfer it to an outsider at the same price as a stranger would be willing to give". In this case it was held that the words "at the price a stranger would be willing to give" were introduced for the purpose of regulating the price. It seems to us that where the custom, (as proved by the record in the wajib-ul-arz) is that the co-sharer desirous of selling his property must first offer it to his co-sharer in the patti and after him to other co-sharers and that if they refuse he can sell to a stranger, it can hardly be said that a co-sharer who has sold to a stranger after he has offered to sell to the persons entitled one after the other according to the priority of their right, has violated the custom merely because he has not concluded his bargain with the stranger before he made the offer. Of course the offer must be a bona fide offer and if the persons having a right of pre-emption wanted to know the price or any other particular, they would be entitled to be informed. We need hardly say that the vendor would not be entitled to sell the property for a less price than the price he mentioned to the pre-emptors.

It is contended on behalf of the defendant that in the present case the vendor offered the property to the plaintiff before the sale-deed was executed and that the plaintiff refused to purchase. It is contended that the Court below in finding this issue against him had in its mind that it was necessary that the whole contract should have been communicated to the plaintiff, and that his (the plaintiff's) refusal to purchase was of no consequence until the entire contract was so communicated. This no doubt might have been the view taken by the Court below. We have, therefore looked at the evidence of the witnesses on this part of the case. The vendee said that when he had arranged to buy, he told the vendor to call the other co-sharers including the plaintiff, that they were called and that he asked them if there would be any dispute about the property, that they said "no," that he might have that sale-deed executed. Another witness stated that he and some of the other co-sharers happened to be passing by the place where the vendee spread his bricks, that they went over when the vendee called them and they were informed about the sale and that they said they did not want to purchase,

(1) 6 Ind. Cas. 920; 7 A. L. J. 610;

It is quite clear that the Court below disbelieved this evidence and did not decide the issue merely on the ground that the price had not been fixed. The two witnesses, it is to be observed, do not tell quite the same story. We must consider the finding of the Court below to be a finding of fact that the plaintiff did not refuse to purchase the property. In this view the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Tenant goes away on pilgrimage—Cousin cultivates and manages holding—Tenant does not return—Presumption of death—Co-sharing explained—Co-sharing possible, though tenant absent.

An occupancy tenant went away on a pilgrimage after arranging with his cousin for the cultivation of his holding and the payment of rent. During the absence of the tenant the cousin collected rent for the portion held in sub-tenancy and cultivated the remainder of the holding himself:

Held, that these facts amounted to a sharing with the tenant (though he was not present in the village), whose death must be presumed after a lapse of seven years from his leaving the village.

Sharing does not necessarily imply cultivation by two or more persons.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 30th November 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Budaun District in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—Only one point is argued. The facts of the case are fairly clear. The name of Tara Chand was recorded as occupancy tenant up to 1314 Fasli, in which year he was recorded as mafkudul-k'abar, and his cousin, Lochan, as in possession. About a couple of years ago, the patwari struck out Tara Chand's name altogether as he had heard that he had died. As Tara Chand, when he went off on pilgrimage, had arranged for his cousin, Lochan, to carry on the cultivation, the patwari should not have entered him as mafkudul-khabar under the rules. There was no presumption of death until Tara Chand had not been heard of for seven years. The only question for decision is:—Did Lochan, the defendant, share in the cultivation of the holding at the time when Tara Chand was presumed to have died? It is clear that during Tara Chand's absence Lochan undertook the whole management of the holding, collected rent for the portion held in sub-tenancy, and cultivated the remainder of the holding himself. The appellant's point is that, as Tara Chand in his absence had nothing to do with the cultivation of the holding, there could be no sharing which implies cultivation by two or more persons. This is a somewhat narrow and distinctly inequitable view to take. I am inclined to think that a share means any share up to the entire cultivation of the holding.

I agree then with the Commissioner's view and dismiss the appeal with costs.

HOLMS, S. M.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Anubhavam tenure—Denial of landlord's title, whether works forfeiture of tenancy.

Where land is held on anubhavam tenure, the denial of the landlord's title not directly addressed to the landlord does not work a forfeiture of the tenancy. [p. 429, col. 1.]

Thikkillath Tarawad Karnavan v. Vadakka Chattibikath Manchu Nair, 27 Ind. Cas. 863; 2 L. W. 102;

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 329 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Chowghat, in Original Suit No. 42 of 1910.

FACTS.—The plaintiff, a jenmi, sued to evict the defendant from the plaint holding which had been granted so far back as 1814 by a predecessor of the plaintiff to an ancestor of the defendant on a service tenure, known as anubhavam in Malabar. The cause of action alleged was the denial of the plaintiff's jenmi title by the defendant in a recent mortgage deed. The lower Court held that it was forfeited by the said denial of title, and decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendant preferred this appeal to the High Court.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellant, contended that the tenure was similar to the adima jenm of Malabar, and was not forfeited unless the stipulated services were discontinued or their performance refused inspite of notice. See Malabar Gazetteer, Volume I, page 307, and Thikkillath Tarawad Karnavan v. Vadakka Chattibikath Manchu Nair (1). Denial of title did not entail forfeiture in such cases. The English doctrine of forfeiture embodied in section 111, Transfer of Property Act, was inapplicable to tenures created before the passing of that Act. See Abbakka Shethi v. Seshamma (2).

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondents:—The tenure was not the same as adima jenm but was only a species of saswatham which would be forfeited on denial of title like any other ordinary permanent lease. See Moore's Malabar Law, pages 308, 309. The decided cases showed that non performance of service was not the only ground on which forfeiture could be effected.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 10th March 1914, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court says in paragraph 12 of its judgment that under Exhibit I, Chathunni's right was coupled with an obligation to perform certain services. But we do not find in Exhibit I, which was produced in a mutilated condition, any such obligation imposed. In Exhibit B produced by the 5th defendant, as a copy of Exhibit I in its unmutilated state, such a condition appears, but the District Munsif has given prima facie good grounds for treating it with suspicion. The Subordinate Judge has not referred to Exhibit B at all.

Before disposing of this second appeal, we think it necessary to obtain definite findings from the lower Appellate Court on the following issues:

1. Is Exhibit B a true copy of the original deed, Exhibit I, in its unmutilated condition? Were any conditions attached to the anubhavam grant made under Exhibit I? (In coming to a conclusion on this question, the lower Appellate Court will also consider whether there is any explanation for the use of the word adima in the course of the recitals in Exhibits II and XI).

2. Was any rent paid or service rendered to the 5th defendant's family by the original grantees and their descendants and their alienees at any time after date of Exhibit II, and when were such services or payments of rent discontinued? (This issue will arise only if on the 1st issue, it is decided that there were such services to be rendered or rent payable).

Fresh evidence may be adduced on both sides except as regards the genuineness of Exhibit B. The findings should be submitted within four months from date of receipt of records by the lower Appellate Court and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above order the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut submitted the following FINDINGS.—I have been directed by the High Court to submit findings on the following issues:

"1. Is Exhibit B a true copy of the original deed, Exhibit I, in its unmutilated condition; were any conditions attached to the anubhavam grant made under Exhibit I?

"2. Was any rent paid or service rendered to the 5th defendant's family by the

5. According to the plaintiff, the conditions were payment of 1 fanam and 1 bunch of plantains in the shape of rent, and the rendering of some service on occasions of marriages and deaths in the grantor's family. There is no evidence that any service was at any time rendered. As to the payment, there is the evidence of the 1st defendant (plaintiff's 1st witness), and of the 5th defendant (defendants' 3rd witness). The former states that he and his father paid rent up to 1067. This statement, which was made in examination-in-chief, was withdrawn by him in cross-examination as being incorrect. The 5th defendant speaks to having received rent from the 2nd defendant from 1067 up to 1075. This is denied by the 2nd defendant. In these circumstances the evidence of the 1st defendant and the 5th defendant cannot be considered to be trustworthy. I find the 2nd issue in the negative.

This second appeal coming on this day for final hearing on receipt of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge.

As the Munsif points out (and it was in fact admitted before him), this suit is based solely on the alleged forfeiture of the defendant's tenancy on account of his denial of the landlord's title.

Following Thikkillath Tarawad Karnavan v. Vadakka Chattibikath Manchu Nair (1) and Abbakka Shetthi v. Seshamma (2), we hold that the acts of the 3rd defendant relied on in the plaint have not worked a forfeiture of the tenancy as alleged.

The lower Appellate Court's decree is set aside and that of the Munsif restored with costs in all Courts on plaintiff.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

IN APPEALS NOS. 120 AND 183 OF 1911.

The two suits out of which these two appeals arise (Suits Nos. 331 and 332 of 1909) relate to 650 bighas of coal lands in Mouza Barora appertaining to Pergannah Nawagarh, Kismat No. 3. The zemindari Nawagarh, Kismat No. 3, belongs to Giridhari Singh Thakur, defendant No. 5, he having succeeded to that estate as the eldest son of Joy Nandan Singh Thakur. It appears that many years ago Pergannah Nawagarh was divided into four kismats, each of which formed a separate estate, and each of which appears to have descended, according to the rule of primogeniture, on the eldest sons. The accompanying genealogical table will show the relationships in the family of the zemindars. The family is governed by the Mitkashara School of Hindu Law. 8 annas of Mouza Barora was vested in Chhatradhari Singh, Nagar Singh, Dukhit Singh and Amrita Kumari as kho-poshdars. What their precise interests in the land were, we will discuss later. By a mourusi mokarari patta, dated 23rd March 1895, these four persons settled the sub-soil rights in 500 bighas of land comprised in the 8 annas share of Mouza Barora with Surendra Mohan Ghose, defendant No. 1, and by a similar patta of even date, they settled another 150 bighas comprised in the same 8 anna share of the mouza with defendant No. 2, Jogmaya Debi, wife of Nilmadhab Bajpai. By a lease dated 19th May 1901, the defendant No. 1 made a dar-mokarari settlement of the sub-soil rights in the 500 bighas with defendant No. 36, Dina Nath Gorain, and, by a similar lease dated 14th January 1901, the defendant No. 2 made a dar-mokarari settlement of the sub-soil rights in the 50 bighas with the same person. In the mourusi mokarari pattas, the property is described as "our long-possessed 8 annas share in Mouza Barora". The salamis paid by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were Rs. 1,250 and Rs. 312-8-0 respectively, the rents for the 500 and 150 bighas being Rs. 562-8-0 and Rs. 140-10-0. By his dar-mokarari patta the defendant No. 1 took from Dina Nath Gorain a salami of Rs. 6,500, reserving an annual rent of Rs. 3,000, while the defendant No. 2 by her dar-mokarari patta took a salami of Rs. 1,800 and reserved an annual rent of Rs. 900. The salamis under the dar-mokarari pattas were duly paid; but it does not appear that the lessee even received actual possession of any of the lands demised. Plaintiffs claim to be entitled to the benefits of these dar-mokarari pattas as members of the Gorain family, Dinanath having taken the leases and paid the salami as benamidar of the whole family. This is not now disputed and the Gorain family is here represented by the plaintiffs on the one side and defendant No. 36 and the sons of defendant No. 37 on the other. On 29th December 1895, Giridhari Singh, defendant No. 5, purported to execute in favour of defendant No. 1 a chhar sanad, admitting all terms of the patta which had been granted in favour of defendant No. 1 in respect of the 500 bighas of land. For this he received Rs. 500; on the following day, 30th December 1895, he executed a deed of release in favour of Nagar Singh, Chhatradhari Singh, Dukhit Singh and Amrita Kumari, whereby he purported to release to them the absolute right in 8 annas of Mouza Barora, stating that it was their "ancestral lakhiraj matratran property." On 15th April 1902, defendant No. 5 executed a mourusi mokarari patta in favour of his eldest son, Ram Bahadur Singh, defendant No. 6, of the surface and sub-soil rights of the whole Mouza Barora; and the defendant No. 6 thereupon, by several leases, let out the underground rights to different persons; among others, he made a lease in favour of defendant No. 35 of 919 bighas. That lease is dated 28th January 1908 and was given in the name of Gopi Nath Gorain, the eldest son of Nanda Lal. Among other persons claiming to be lessees of this property was Jagannath Marwari, defendant No. 34, who brought two suits which are the subjects of appeals Nos. 51 and 121 of 1910 with which we shall presently deal. It should be stated that, though the total area leased out to the Gorains was said to be 650 bighas, the entire area of Barora, as measured, is only 1,113 bighas, so that, in any case, the plaintiffs would not be entitled to the sub-soil rights in more than 556½ bighas. As defendant No. 5 and also defendant No. 35 had, according to the plaintiffs, infringed their rights, the plaintiffs brought these two suits to have it declared that they were entitled to a 10-anna 5-gunda share in the 650 bighas of Mouza Barora and that possession might be given to them by demarcation by metes and bounds jointly with the defendant No. 35. They asked, in the alternative, that, if it were found that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had no title to the sub-soil beneath any portion of the 650 bighas, a decree might be passed for reduction of the rent in proportion to the area to which they might be found to have no title and for a refund of a proportionate amount of the salami. They claimed khas possession of such of the lands as might fall to their share and asked for mesne profits. As a further alternative, they asked that if it were found that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had no title whatever to the sub-soil in the 650 bighas, a decree might be passed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for a return of the salami which they (plaintiffs) had paid and any rent which had been recovered against them, such amounts to be refunded with interest.

On the suits coming on for hearing, the learned Subordinate Judge found that the lessors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were khorposhdars of the property, that they held under a maintenance grant made to their ancestor Kumar Bishnu Singh, such grant being heritable in the male line and determinable only with the failure of male issue. He decided, however, that the defendant No. 5 was estopped from denying the right of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the plaintiffs as conferred by the leases in question. He accordingly decided that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for partition of the sub-soil of Mouza Barora and separate possession of the coal lands falling to their shares. The decrees, in the form in which they have been passed, cannot be supported and, moreover, are not acceptable to any of the parties except defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiffs have appealed and their appeal is supported by the other members of the Gorain family, who are represented by defendant No. 36 and the sons of defendant No. 37. The respondents, who oppose the appeal, are defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who are anxious to have the decrees of the Subordinate Judge in these two cases maintained. There is, third party in this case who may be described as the Mahato defendants. They are in possession by virtue of certain leases and if no relief is given to the plaintiffs by way of possession they do not desire to contest the matter. If, however, the plaintiffs are given anything by way of possession, the Mahato defendants object, and desire to press the cross-objections which they have filed.

In this Court the plaintiffs have maintained that the decrees of the Subordinate Judge are based on a wrong assumption of law and, to some extent, of fact. They, therefore, now desire to give up their claim for possession of the coal lands in Mouza Barora and to fall back upon their alternative claim for a return of the salami and the rents which they have paid to defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The first question to be considered is, what were the precise rights of Nagar Singh, Chhatradhari Singh, Dukhit Singh, and Amrita Kumari in the lands which they purported to lease out to defendants Nos. 1 and 2? The evidence on this point is somewhat meagre, but we think that it is sufficiently clear that the several kismats of Nawagarh descended, by the rule of primogeniture, on the eldest sons, maintenance grants being made to the younger branches of the family. Each kismat was, to all intents and purposes, regarded as an impartible estate. Kismat No. III, for instance, has descended to the eldest sons since the time of Bishnu Singh on no less than four occasions; and Giridhari Singh, defendant No. 5, now holds it on those terms. With regard to the character of the khorposh grants, we think that the learned Subordinate Judge has correctly found that these grants were made for the maintenance of the junior branches and were heritable in the male line and ended only with the failure of male heirs. Though Nagar Singh in his evidence has declined to admit it, there can be no doubt that that is the nature of the grant. We have an instance of resumption on the death of Bhowani Singh, the great uncle of Giridhari, without heirs. There is one instance of a sanad granted to Nagar Singh by Giridhari Singh on 19th March 1868. That merely states that the grantor executes the khorposh sanad to the grantee, his sons and grandsons, moghali rent of Re. 1 having been paid in respect of a 4-anna share in Mouza Barora thus granted. The most important document in this connection is Exhibit D9, a decree in Suit No. 62 of 1852 dated 24th July 1852. From that the history of these khorposh grants clearly appears. There are other documents (Exhibit D to D3 & D5 to D7) also indicating the nature of these grants. These purport to be sales but are rather leases of khorposh lands, two by Nagar Singh and five by Bhimlal Singh to the Mahatos, and were executed on various dates from 4th December 1867 to 2nd April 1876. They were clearly granted for purposes of cultivation, and in several of them that is expressly stated. We must hold on the evidence before us that these khorposh grants were to the grantee and his descendants in the male line, terminable with the failure of such descendants. That the khorposhdars did not possess the sub-soil rights in the lands granted to them is conceded by all the parties other than defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and they did not very strenuously contest the point. The interest of a khorposhdar though more than an interest for one life was nevertheless a limited interest, liable to be defeated at any time by the failure of heirs, and thereupon resumable by the proprietor for the time being. This would not be an interest sufficient to carry with it the sub-soil rights. We hold, therefore, that Nagar Singh and his co-sharers had no right to make the settlements of the sub-soil rights with defendants Nos. 1 and 2, which they purported to make.

For defendants Nos. 1 and 2 it was argued, first, that the plaintiffs having been granted decrees could not prefer these appeals against them. There is, however, no provision of law to prevent them. It was open to them, as they had claimed alternative reliefs, to say that the relief granted was not in accordance with law and that they would prefer the other. It is of the less importance in this case, as there are cross-objections by the Gorain defendants in which the whole matter would be open to review. Moreover, Order XLI, rule 33, confers on the Appellate Court the power to pass such decree as ought to have been passed or to pass such further or other decree as the case may require.

The next argument for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was that defendant No. 5 was in some way estopped from disputing the title which Nagar Singh and his co-sharers had purported to confer on defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It was said that the chhar sanad of 29th December 1895 and the releases of the following day debarred him. No question, however, of estoppel really arises as between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 5. The sole question is: had Nagar Singh and his co-sharers a title to the sub-soil rights in 8 annas of Mouza Barora as khorposhdars or otherwise, which they could pass on to defendants Nos. 1 and 2? As khorposhdars they clearly had no such title. The chhar sanad and releases could not perfect any such title in them, for the simple reason that from 20th November 1876 until 1st July 1901 the estate of Giridhari Singh was being managed for him under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, VI of 1876. By section 3 of that Act during the period mentioned and, therefore, at the date of the deeds in question, Giridhari Singh was wholly incompetent to make any such disposition of his property. It was not a case of a merely voidable agreement as the Subordinate Judge appears to think. The chhar sanad does not purport to effect an alienation, but as an admission it could not in any way bind the estate to that end. The learned Pleader for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 laid much stress on the letters, Exhibits A15, A13, and A14 said to have been written by Giridhari Singh to defendant No. 1 on 3rd and 22nd February and 10th March 1902. The Subordinate Judge has found these letters to be genuine. We have doubts as to the correctness of that finding, but even if they be genuine in the sense that Giridhari Singh wrote or had them written, they do not carry the case much further. They were evidently written with a purpose to make out that he, at any rate, was not putting obstacles in the way of the Gorains getting possession. As an assertion of that fact they are palpably false, as the other evidence shows. It follows then that the plaintiffs' lessors having had no title whatever to the sub-soil and being incapable of conferring such a title on the plaintiffs, the suit so far as it claimed possession in any form must necessarily fail. We have then to consider the alternative claim for refund of the salami and the rents paid. They do not stand on precisely the same footing. So far as the refund of salami is concerned, the plaintiffs' claim is, in our opinion, barred by limitation. This is not a case of there having been a consideration for the contract which afterwards failed. If it were, Article 97 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877, would apply and the period would be three years from the date when the consideration failed. Here there was never any title in defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the plaintiffs were never put in possession. There was never any consideration at all for the contract. In that view of the case the Article applicable is Article 62 and the period is three years from the dates when the money was paid, i.e., on 19th May 1901 and 14th January 1901 respectively. As these suits were not filed until 13th August 1901, the claim for refund of the salami is clearly barred. The claim for refund of the rents paid appears to us to be equally unsustainable though on somewhat different grounds. It appears that in respect of the 500 bighas three suits were filed against the plaintiffs and their co-sharers by defendant No. 1 and decrees obtained on 18th March 1905 for rent for 1309 and 1310, on 12th September 1906 for rent for 1311 and 1312 and on 15th January 1909 for rent for 1313 and 1314. In the case of the first decree the claim is barred by limitation. The other two are within three years before suit filed. Similarly in respect of the 150 bighas defendant No. 2 filed two Suits No. 27 of 1905 and No. 32 of 1907 and obtained decrees. These amounts, even if paid within the period of limitation, cannot be recovered, being moneys paid by compulsion of legal proceedings. The principle laid down in Marriott v. Hampton (1) is applicable to this country. The plaintiffs had an opportunity of reasoning this question in those suits, and not having done so they cannot successfully maintain this action for refund on the very same ground. Moreover, the facts of the case point to the conclusion that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were fully aware of their lessors' want of title, and entered into the leases with their eyes open.

The result is that except for a declaration that they are no longer liable to pay rent under the leases of 19th May 1901 and 14th January 1901 to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 respectively, the plaintiffs' suit must fail. We accordingly modify the decree of the Subordinate Judge and confine it to the declaration just mentioned. The cross-objections both of the Gorains and of the Mahatos have become unnecessary and are dismissed. Under the circumstances we leave the several parties to bear their own costs in both the Courts.

IN APPEAL No. 51 OF 1910

This appeal arises out of Suit No. 365 of 1908 which was decided by the Subordinate Judge of Purulia just a year before he decided Suits Nos. 331 and 332 of 1909, with which we have dealt in Appeals Nos. 120 and 183 of 1911. The plaintiff in this suit, which has been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, is Jagannath Marwari, defendant No. 34 in the two later suits. He filed this suit to establish his title to and recover possession of the sub-soil rights in 500 bighas out of a moiety of Mouza Barora by virtue of two leases for 551 years executed in his favour, one on 24th September 1904 by Nagoar Singh and the other on 2nd December 1904 by Chhatradhari Singh, each for 250 bighas. The plaintiff in this case further claimed under a lease for 999 years, dated 17th February 1908 and granted to him by defendants Nos. 19 to 21, the successors-in-interest of Bhagi Mahato, who, the plaintiff alleged, had on 27th May 1884 purchased from Nagaor Singh a one-anna share of the said mouza and certain land called "Dhab". The Subordinate Judge in this case held that Nagaor Singh and Chatradhari had no right to the sub-soil in Mouza Barora; that they were khorposhdars, the grants for maintenance being tenable for the life of the grantee only, and that the plaintiff had accordingly taken nothing by the pattas of 1904 or 1908. The suit was dismissed and the plaintiff has appealed. In order to avoid the expense and trouble of printing a number of papers and a mass of evidence, the plaintiff applied to this Court to dispense with such printing and obtained an order to that effect on his undertaking to accept and be bound by the findings of fact of the Subordinate Judge. The appeal has proceeded on that footing.

This appeal is analogous to Appeals Nos. 120 and 183 of 1911 and this judgment should be read with reference to our judgment in those appeals.

It was argued for the appellant that the findings should at least be consistent in all the cases. The same Subordinate Judge has in this suit held that the khorposh grants were only for the lives of the grantees. In the other two suits he held that they were heritable in the male line and determinable only on the failure of male heirs. The second view is, in our opinion, the correct one. It does not materially affect this case, inasmuch as in neither view would the khorposhdars possess the sub-soil rights or have the power to alienate them. Then it was urged that Nagaor Singh and Chhattradhari both being alive at the date of suit, the suit could not be dismissed as regards their interest. The leases to the plaintiff, however, were only of sub-soil rights, the surface rights being expressly reserved to lessors. The leases, therefore, conveyed nothing whatever to the plaintiff. For the reasons given in our other judgment no ques tion of estoppel arises which can assist the plaintiff. The plaintiff having taken nothing by his leases whether directly from Nagoar Singh and Chhatradhari or indirectly through the defendants Nos. 19 to 21, is not entitled to any relief in this suit. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, one set to be divided between the defendants-respondents who have appeared. The rights of the various defendants as between themselves will not be affected by this judgment.

IN APPEAL NO. 121 OF 1910.

The Suit No. 366 of 1908 out of which this appeal arises relates to certain coal lands in Mouza Pipratarh and Mouza Attalis. The plaintiff-appellant is the same as in Appeal No. 51 of 1910 and he has given a similar undertaking in this case to be bound by the findings of fact of the Subordinate Judge. As the finding in this case is that the title-deed on which the plaintiff's suit is based is a forgery, it follows that the plaintiff's suit must necessarily fail. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, one set to be divided between the defendants-respondents who appeared.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, in Original Suit No. 30 of 1912.

FACTS.—A suit was filed by the next friend of the minor Raja of Karvetinagar, as trustee of the Tirutani Devastanam, for specific performance of an agreement to sell certain villages in the Samastanam entered into by one K. Venkataraya Reddi, with the Regulation Collector of Karvetinagar Estate. Venkataraya Reddi died and the suit was filed against the surviving members of his family. The Subordinate Judge of North Arcot dismissed the suit, on the ground that the agreement not having fixed any time for performance of the contract offended the rule against perpetuities contained in section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act, following the decision in Kolathu Aiyer v. Rangavadhyar (1). This appeal is against that decree and judgment.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decree dismissing his suit for specific performance of a contract of sale in favour of a temple of which he is the trustee, entered into between the Regulation Collector of Karvetinagar who was at the time the Dharmakarta of the temple and the late Venkataraya Reddy who was then the managing member of the family of the defendants. Under the agreement of sale the plaint lands were to be conveyed to the temple for a sum of Rs. 16,000, whenever the trustee pays that amount from the Devastanam funds. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaint contract is void as offending the rule against perpetuities; and the only question before us for decision is whether his judgment on this point is right. A suit, Original Suit No. 40 of 1902, was filed against the late Vekataraya Reddy as the managing member of his family for the recovery of the village of Veeraraghavapuram, which was in the possession of his family. Venkataraya Reddy defended the suit, and the suit was eventually compromised by the registered agreement which is now sought to be enforced. Venkataraya Reddy died in December 1905, and the defendants are the members of his family. The defendants were asked by the plaintiff to receive the sum of Rs. 16,000 and convey the suit lands to the temple, but they have not done so.

The material part of the agreement is as follows: "We both . . have entered into a compromise and I have agreed under that compromise to sell . . . these five villages and all my rights therein for Rs. 16,000 to the Devastanam of the said Subramaneswara Swamiar. Whenever the said price of Rs. 16,000 is paid to me from the said Swamiar Devastanam funds, I agree to execute a sale-deed for the said five villages at that very time for the said Subramania Swami Devastanam and deliver possession of the said villages to the said Devastanam." The Subordinate Judge is of opinion that as this plaint agreement fixes no time for its performance but leaves it indefinitely to the promisee to choose his own time and as it provides that the promisor shall convey the properties whenever the price happens to be paid out of the funds of the temple and the suit has now been brought after the death of Venkataraya Reddy against he surviving members of the family, such a contract is invalid and unenforceable as infringing the rule against perpetuities, and he relies on the case of Kolathu Aiyer v. Rangavadhyar (1). We are of opinion that his decision cannot be supported. Under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act a contract for the sale of immoveable property does not by itself create any interest in the property. Such a contract does not run with the land and is not binding upon a purchaser unless he takes with notice. It does not create an interest in the land, and is not, therefore, within the scope of section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act. If this contract created an interest in the land, then even a purchaser without notice would have been bound by it. In the case of Kolatha Aiyer v. Rangavadhyar (1), the learned Judges Benson, and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., say that there is no substantial difference in the law to be applied in India and in England, as the Specific Relief Act lays down that an agreement for the sale of land may be specifically enforced against any person claiming under the vendor, except against a bona fide purchaser for value without notice (section 27), and the Indian Trusts Act also lays down that a transferee taking with notice of a prior contract in favour of another must hold the property obtained under his transfer as trustee for the previous promisee (section 91). We are unable to agree with this view. It is opposed to the Full Bench judgment in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (2). The judgment of the learned Chief Justice in that case fully explains the law, and he points out there that section 54 was intended to prevent the question being raised as to whether the law of England as to the legal effects of a contract of sale of land applied in this country. The same view was also taken in a subsequent judgment [Avula Charamudi v. Marriboyina Raghavalu (3)] by Aiyling and Tyabji, JJ., who disagreed with Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ. All the authorities are considered in these two judgments and we do not think it necessary to refer to them in detail.

It is also clear that Venkataraya Reddy entered into the contract as the managing member of the family, and we are of opinion for the reasons above stated that the decision of the Subordinate Judge holding that the contract cannot be enforced for the reasons assigned by him, cannot be sustained.

We reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and direct him to restore the suit to his file and dispose of it in accordance with law. The costs will be provided for in the revised decree.

Lease—Lease of house at Mussoorie for "season", when terminates.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary a lease of a house at Mussoorie for the 'season' continues to the end of the year.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 21st February 1914.

Mr. Wallach, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claims possession of a house at Mussoorie, called "Oak Bush." The Courts below have given the plaintiff a decree. The defendant appeals. In the plaint the plaintiff alleges that the defendant was his tenant during the season of 1913 either from month to month or for the season, and that on the 14th of October 1913 he gave him notice to vacate the house on the 31st of October 1913 as the tenancy would expire on that date. The suit was instituted on the 19th of November 1913. It is said that the defendant had a lease from the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title covering this very period, that this document could not be given in evidence because it was unregistered; the defendant is said to have another lease which will entitle him to possession of the house from the 1st of January 1915. It seems to us that the defendant must be deemed to have been at least a tenant for the season. Having regard to the way in which the rent is paid, it is quite clear that he was not a tenant from month to month. If the defendant was tenant for the "season," he could only be put out at the end of the season of 1913, and it lay upon the plaintiff to prove by clear evidence that the "season" at Mussoorie terminated on the 31st of October. It is quite clear that the plaintiff never proved that the season terminated on the 31st of October. We are not, of course, called on to decide questions of fact, but it seems to us that the "season" would ordinarily continue to the end of the year, and we think that this ought to be the assumption in the absence of evidence to the contrary. If the "season" did not terminate before the 19th of November 1913, then the suit was premature. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that this ground was not taken in the written statement. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff could not terminate his tenancy at the time he alleged and, in our opinion, this clearly cast the onus on the plaintiff of proving such facts as entitled him to possession of the house on the date on which the suit was brought. We allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Backerganj, varying the decree of the Munsif.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff to recover certain arrears of rent in respect of a piece of land situate in the limits of a Government khas mahal. The plaintiff obtained from the Government what is known as a settlement of a portion of the land within the khas mahal. That settlement, or lease, expired in the year 1313; and then, in accordance with the usual practice, apparently the Government proceeded to re-settle the property with the tenants, and when that was done they granted a fresh settlement to the plaintiff. The settlement to the defendants, who are the tenants, was for an increased rent, and the tenants were entered on the Record of Rights as tenants of one holding. Now the plaintiff in 1316 instituted against the defendants a suit to recover arrears of rent down to 1313. That suit was decreed; then the present suit was instituted in 1318 to recover rents from the date when the re-settlement with the plaintiff from the Government took place, namely, 1314, down to the date of the suit.

The Munsif decreed the suit in full.

On appeal to the learned Subordinate Judge, he varied the decree of the Munsif in two ways. First of all, he held that the rent that had accrued due up to the year 1316 formed part of the same cause of action as that sued for in the other suit for rent, and that, therefore, under the provisions of rule 2, Order II, of the first Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff must be taken to have abandoned his right to sue for that portion of the rent. He further held that there were, in fact, two different tenancies in respect of the land and that the plaintiff was only entitled to recover from the defendant No. 1 the proportionate amount of the rent.

Against that decision the plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

I have no doubt that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong on both points. What is called the re-settlement, that is, the new contract of lease, contemplates that there was a new obligation and a new contract to pay new and increased rent. That, clearly, is not the same cause of action as the rent which became due under the original contract for letting which expired in 1313. I am unable to agree with the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge with regard to that.

Then, on the second point, the appellant before us has urged, and I think rightly urged, that it was not open to the Subordinate Judge to go behind the Record of Rights prepared in this case. That Record of Rights was prepared during the settlement of the Government revenue; and, under the provisions of section 104H and under section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, subject to the right of the tenant to bring a suit, as mentioned in section 104H (3), the Record of Rights is conclusive. I think the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong when he went behind the Record-of-Rights to ascertain what, in fact, was the true nature of the tenancy between the parties. In my view the variation made by the learned Subordinate Judge in the decree of the Munsif is wrong, and I think we ought to allow this appeal and restore the decree of the Munsif with costs in all the Courts.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Execution second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Azamgarh, dated the 23rd December 1914.

Mr. Ishwar Saran (with him Mr. Perm'shwor Dyal), for the Appellant.

Mr. Shafiuzzaman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Ambika Pershad, the appellant, has obtained a decree against Salamat Khan, the respondent. This was based upon a compromise arrived at between the parties, according to which the appellant was entitled to redeem the property, if he paid Rs. 2-8. Regarding the payment of Rs. 2-8 the decree says in one place that it is to be paid on Phagun Sudi purnamashi. In another place it is said that Rs. 2-8 was to be paid at the time of obtaining possession. The date Phagun Sudi purnamashi had passed when the decree-holder came into Court with an application to execute the decree. He, however, brought Rs. 2-8 with him and prayed that they might be made over to the judgment-debtors. The Court accepted Rs. 2-8, but does not seem to have passed any definite orders about it. The Court of first instance, however, recognising that Rs. 2-8 had been paid before proceedings in execution commenced, granted the application. The judgment-debtors objected that the time for payment had passed and money could no longer be received and the application for execution should be dismissed. The Court of first instance did not accept this contention and allowed the proceeding to continue; but on appeal the learned District Judge set aside the Munsif's decision and ordered that the execution case should be dismissed. The case has come here in appeal and the contention is raised that inasmuch as the decree had not been made absolute, the appellant was entitled to redeem the property on payment of Rs. 2-8.

This plea appears to me to be a valid one and prevails. I set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and direct that Court to replace this case upon its roll of pending appeals and to determine it according to law. Costs will follow the event.

Order set aside.

The principle of section 43 of the Transfer of Property, Act applies equally both to sales and mortgages. [p. 441, col. 2.]

Under Muhammadan Law, it is essential for the validity of a gift that there should be a transfer both of ownership and possession. What this possession is, is a question of fact in each case. Where the donor is the de facto guardian of the minor donee, a mere declaration of intention to hold the property on behalf of the minor is quite sufficient. But it is necessary that the person in whose possession the property is must be in a position to act on behalf of the owner; where he is not, the declaration would be of no effect. Everything depends upon the intention with which possession was held by the donor subsequent to the gift. [p. 443, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the property gifted is land, which can be enjoyed by receipt of its produce, possession will be deemed to be in the minor, only when it is shown, that after the gift, he was in receipt and enjoyment of such produce also. [p. 444, col. 1.]

In order that a gift in favour of a minor should be valid, it is not necessary that possession to complete his title must be given to his guardian alone; it is sufficient if there is a trustee who can act on his behalf. [p. 445, col. 1.]

Fakir Nynar Muhamed Rowther v. Kandasawmi Kulathu Vandan, 14 Ind. Cas. 993; 35 M. 120 at p. 126. referred to.

Where the donor himself is in possession of the property gifted, there must be some act of his, which must show that he intended to hold the property on behalf of the minor; where there is no such act the presumption is that he never intended to make any gift. [p. 445, col. 2.]

It would be inequitable to allow the visible means of a man to be narrowed down by a transaction not evidenced by a contract. [p. 446, col. 1.]

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 13th and 14th August 1914 and having stood over for consideration till the 16th September 1914, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment of my learned brother. As regards the applicability of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, in case the gift should be held invalid, I entirely agree with him.

The validity of the gift under Muhammadan Law is a more difficult question regarding which, even if I saw reason to disagree with him, I should do so with extreme diffidence. I see no reason to differ, and agree to the finding for which he proposes to call.

TYABJI, J.—The plaintiff sues to enforce a mortgage, Exhibit A, executed by the 1st defendant on 2nd December 1907. The property mortgaged did not belong to the 1st defendant but solely to his father, the 2nd defendant.

The 2nd defendant died before the suit came on for hearing.

On the death of the 2nd defendant all his estate devolved on the 1st defendant under Muhammadan Law, the defendants being Muhammadans.

The plaintiff contends that under section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgage purported to be made by the 1st defendant will operate on the 1st defendant's interest in the property mortgaged. The reply is:—

(1) that the property did not belong to the 2nd defendant at his death, and that consequently it has not devolved on the 1st defendant;

(2) that even if it has devolved on the 1st defendant, section 43 does not apply. These were not the contentions on which the suit was instituted, and do not appear on the pleadings.

The facts leading up to these contentions are as follows:—

According to the case of all the parties the 2nd defendant was, prior to 2nd December 1907, the owner of the property in dispute. On that day the mortgage, Exhibit A, was executed by the 1st defendant describing himself as "son . . . . . of Fakruddin (the 2nd defendant), Muhammadan by caste, living by cultivation and resident of Vempalli village." The operative part is to the following effect:—

"On account of my necessities I have borrowed from you . . . . in all Rs. 300. I shall pay on demand the said sum of Rs. 300 with interest thereon." Then the lands in question are described and the document proceeds:—"These lands bearing this assessment are mortgaged by me. I shall not alienate the said fields in favour of others by way of gift, sale, etc., till the above said amount and interest is paid. This is the deed of mortgage executed and given with my consent." The deed is signed by the 1st defendant and his signature is attested. No one else executes the document. It is duly registered.

When the plaintiff instituted the suit, the 2nd defendant was living and section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act was not available to him even on his own allegations. The allegations contained in the plaint were that the 1st defendant was "the manager of the family," that the mortgage was executed by him for family purposes, and that he acted both for himself and as agent for the other defendants, i. e., for his father, the 2nd defendant, and for his son and daughter, the 3rd and 4th defendants.

The 1st defendant's written statement is as follows:—"The suit debt is true. It is what I contracted."

The 2nd defendant's written statement contains categorical denials of the 1st defendant being manager or agent. It also refers to a gift by the 2nd defendant to the 3rd defendant, under which the property is stated to have been delivered into the possession of the 3rd defendant. "Since then," the written statement continues, "the 3rd defendant himself is enjoying the said property." It is on this gift that the contentions of the defendants above referred to depend. For, if the gift was valid and effective, the property became the 3rd defendant's prior to the death of the 2nd defendant, and did not devolve on the 1st defendant as the 2nd defendant's heir, nor was it affected by any of the acts of the 1st defendant under section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Before the suit came on for hearing the 2nd defendant died, and section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act became available to the plaintiff. His contention, that apart from that section the property was subject to the mortgage because the 1st defendant acted as manager and as agent of the 2nd defendant (though it was the primary case of the plaintiff and the subject of an issue), was not considered by the Courts below. Both Courts held the gift to be invalid, and that section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act applied.

It was argued before us in the first place that even if the gift was invalid, section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act would not avail the plaintiff. The argument was that to hold so would be to hold that the 1st defendant could validly transfer his "chance of succeeding to an estate as an heir-apparent," and reliance was placed upon Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetti (1) for the contention that section 43 should not be so construed as to nullify section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, by validating a transfer initially void under section 6 (a). This argument, however, neglects the distinction between purporting to transfer "the chance of an heir apparent," and "erroneously representing that he (the transferor) is authorised to transfer certain immoveable property." It is the latter course that was followed in the present case. It was represented to the transferee that the transferor was in præsenti entitled to and thus authorised to transfer the property. In Ramasami Naik's case (1) what the transferors "purported to transfer, were mere possibilities of succession with the prohibition in section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act".

The other cases cited on this point for the appellant have also no application. In Nurul Hossein v. Sheosahai Lal (2), there was no erroneous representation : both parties knew what the facts were. In Rashmoni Dasi v. Surja Kanta Roy Chowdhry (3), the parties had contracted to sell subject to the sanction of the Court, which could not be obtained. In Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (4), the objection taken and upheld was that though there was an erroneous representation, the transferee was not misled by it and that unless the transferee is so misled, section 43 does not apply.

None of these objections apply in the present case. On the contrary the illustration to section 43 seems exactly in point, except that the transfer is here by way of mortgage and in the illustration it is a sale. Here, as in the illustration, the son represented that he was authorised to transfer property which in fact was not his property but his father's: and if, therefore, the son subsequently "as heir obtained the property" of his father, the transferee "may require the son to deliver it to him"—in this case to have it declared subject to the mortgage. Whether the son (the 1st defendant) "as heir obtained the property", depends upon whether prior to the 2nd defendant's death he had made a gift of the property to the 3rd defendant.

The validity of the gift under Exhibit I must, therefore, be next considered. The District Munsif held against the validity of the gift apparently on the grounds, (1) that the execution of Exhibit I was not legally proved as, though "it was spoken to by its writer," no attestor was called to prove its execution. The only ground of appeal with reference to this manifest disregard by the District Munsif of the provisions of section 72 of the Indian Evidence Act was that he "erred in thinking that the writer of a deed is not an attestor and proof thereof by him is no proof." No reference to this is to be found in the judgment of the District Judge or in the grounds of appeal to this Court; and it was not questioned before us that the execution of Exhibit I was satisfactorily proved.

The District Munsif further held (2) that assuming Exhibit I to be proved, it was not valid because there was neither acceptance nor delivery of possession of the gift; as to possession he refers to and apparently accepts the plaintiff's evidence that the 1st defendant has been and is in cultivation and possession of the properties, and that the 1st or 2nd defendant has been paying the assessment.

He also casually says: (3) "It is clear from the very wording of Exhibit I, that the gift was simply intended to defeat the plaintiff's claim."

In appeal to the District Judge it was argued that formal transfer of possession was unnecessary, as the donor and donee were living together. The District Judge considered this contention to be supported by the authority of Humera Bibi v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi (5). He was of opinion, however, that though transfer of possession may be unnecessary, acceptance of the gift was necessary; and he held that there was no acceptance, and so the gift was ineffectual. The result is sufficiently startling. It would appear that according to the decision of the District Court, though the donee (or the person representing him) may take possession of the subject of gift, yet this is not sufficient to imply an acceptance of the gift by or on behalf of the donee. The District Judge arrived at this conclusion apparently without realizing the inconsistency to which it leads, because he misapprehended the principle that underlies the decision in Humera Bibi v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi (5). In that case everything had been done to transfer possession, except that the donor had not left the premises (forming part of the subject of gift) on which she was living jointly with the donee. It was there held that the donor having emphatically manifested her unequivocal intention to transfer possession, and having done everything else to transfer possession, the fact that she did not vacate the house forming part of the subject of the gift but continued to live in it, was sufficiently explained and it did not vitiate the transfer of possession which was otherwise complete and effectual.

In the view that the District Judge took, he asked for a finding on the issue "whether 2nd defendant was or was not de facto guardian of the 3rd defendant at the time of the execution of the deed of gift, Exhibit I." The object of this issue appears from the judgment of the District Judge delivered when he accepted the finding returned by the District Munsif. On reading the District Munsif's finding, however, it is difficult to understand what exact significance the issue had for the District Munsif, and in what way he conceived the matters contained in his judgment to be relevant to the rights and liabilities of the parties. Their Lordships of the Privy Council had occasion in Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (6) to encounter the notion that by the use of expressions taken from English Law especially, it may be added, if they include some Latin words such as the expression "de facto guardian"—parties can be clothed with legal powers which they do not otherwise possess.

In the present case too it seems that under some similar notion the lower Courts have not considered the case on the broad principles of the law, but have strayed into questions which do not materially aid the final decision. Had the general principles been applied in a plain common sense manner, the case would have admitted of a much more satisfactory and intelligible method of decision.

Under Muhammadan Law (1) a transfer by way of gift must be completed by the donor. He cannot be forced to complete a gift which he has not completed. Transfer of ownership includes a transfer of the right of possession, and of enjoying the benefits arising from the property. When, therefore, transfer of ownership is purported to be made, it is not complete unless transfer of possession is also made. (2) It follows that if the donor has not given possession of what is alleged to be the subject of the gift, the alleged donee cannot, on the strength of the declaration of gift, claim to be the owner of the property and, as owner, obtain possession of it through the Court or otherwise without the consent of the donor or his successor-in-title. The donee cannot say: "I have had the ownership transferred to me, give me possession." The answer to this claim would be: "The complete ownership is not in you. One part of ownership is the right to possess. That right has not been transferred to you. It is the donor alone that can transfer that right to you and thus complete your ownership." In short, unless the donor transfers possession, the transfer of ownership itself is not complete. (3) If, however, the subject of the gift is already in the possession of the donee at the time of the declaration of gift, its possession cannot be transferred to him any more. All that is then needed for transferring the ownership, is that the donor should transfer to the donee the residuum of the rights making up the complex notion of ownership. This he can do by declaring that thenceforth the subject of the gift shall be possessed by the donee as his own property. (4) Where the donee is a minor who, though capable of owning property, is not able to be in possession of it, his place is taken by the person who in accordance with law is in charge and possession of the minor's property. (5) If a person, therefore, declares his intention to make a gift to a minor, the donor cannot be forced to carry out his intention. He may do so of his own accord, but the declaration of the intention to make a gift does not of itself give the minor donee a right to insist that the declaration shall be given effect to. (6) No doubt in this case also if the subject of the gift is already in the possession of that person whom the law entrusts with the care of the property belonging to the minor, the gift can require no further completion by a transfer of possession, indeed it would admit of no such transfer. The change would be in the mind with which possession would be held, and not in the person who has actual physical possession of or control over the subject of gift.

There is no difficulty in understanding these propositions. The facts of any particular case may, it is true, sometimes make them somewhat difficult of application, but not on that account abstruse or dissociated from what is referred to in the Indian Evidence Act as the "common course of natural events and human conduct." Where, for instance, the person in actual care of the property of a minor donee is other than he who in accordance with law is under the obligation (and who is clothed, therefore, also with the corresponding right) of being in possession of the minor's property—in other words where the person actually in possession of the minor's property is not the legal guardian of the minor's property—in such a case if the property is transferred to the possession of the legal guardian, it may be objected that the facts were such as to show that the property intended to be given to the minor would not ordinarily be placed in the possession of the legal guardian: the person actually in possession of such property being another. If, on the other hand, possession is in such a case transferred to the latter (i.e., to the de facto guardian) it may be objected that the transferee is not legally entitled to hold possession of the property on behalf of the minor, and that the possession of the transferee is not in law the possession of the minor.

It must, however, be always remembered that the question of possession is primarily one of fact and it must refer to "possession of that character of which the thing is capable." Lord Advocate v. Young (7). There may, it is true, occasionally be some difficulty in determining whether or not possession of the property was held by or on behalf of the donee after the declaration of gift. But the difficulty can seldom be lessened by attention being primarily directed not to the salient facts of the case, not to the question who or on whose behalf acts of ownership were exercised over the property after the gift and who was deriving the substantial benefit from it, but to other speculative aspects supposed to have some juristic connection with these questions of fact. The difficulty may be enhanced by trying to determine the question, with reference to the existence of relations which are still more obscure.

In the present case it is admitted that the 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants lived together in the same house. The subject of the gift consisted not of the house in the common occupation of the donor and donee, [as in Humera Bibi's case (5)] but of a field and in the words of Domat, "one possesses lands by cultivating them, reaping the fruits, going and coming through them, and disposing thereof at pleasure." Attention should, therefore, have been directed in this case to the person for whose benefit these acts were performed. As the alleged donee was a minor, he could not perform them himself. The question of the de facto guardianship, i. e., the question as to which inmate of the house was in the actual care of the minor, could not materially affect a gift of this kind; for it is not as though a gift of moveable property capable of being in direct and personal control had been transferred to a person other than the guardian of the minor, either by error as to the person to whom the transfer should according to law be made or because such transfer would immediately and more effectively provide for the subject of gift being utilised for the benefit of the minor; nor has this question arisen in the endeavour to discover the destination of the actual produce of the land. In the arguments before us the finding that the 2nd defendant was not the de facto guardian of the minor was recognised to be irrelevant, and not relied upon by either party.

The real question in this case, whether after the gift the donee was given the benefit of the subject of the gift or whether its produce continued to be taken and dealt with by the donor and applied to his own benefit just as he had done before making the gift, has been lost sight of. The second appeal had, therefore, to be argued without having had the case considered by the lower Courts in its real and substantial form, but through an endeavour to find a mode of decision irrespective of a finding on that essential question.

In this endeavour the case has been presented before us in two aspects.

First, it was argued that the intention of the donor was to defraud creditors and it could not, therefore, be lawfully effected. The objection that the gift was in fraud of creditors (though it was casually alluded to by the District Munsif as stated above), was not referred to in the plaint. The gift is specifically set up in the written statement of the 2nd defendant, yet the contention was not made the subject of an issue. The words of Peel, C. J., in Doe Dem Ramtonoo Mookerjee v. Bibee Jeenut (8) seem, therefore, to be directly applicable. He says: "This deed then being of a prior date, the subsequent purchaser must impeach it for fraud; all those grounds on which a deed is generally impeached are, however, wanting in this case. There is no evidence before us that the donor was in debt at the time of making this gift, nor is there any evidence to show that he executed it in contemplation of insolvency, or with a view to defraud creditors."

On the other hand, on behalf of the appellant and in support of the gift it was argued that the gift being from a grandfather to his minor grandson, no transfer of possession was necessary and that, therefore, proof of Exhibit I was sufficient to establish the gift.

In connection with this last contention, it must first be considered whether the rule is available to the 3rd defendant and if so, to determine the effect of the rule by a consideration of its scope.

It is urged that the 3rd defendant cannot rely upon the rule, because a gift to a minor must be transferred to his father if the father "is alive and present" (Baillie's Digest, first Edition, Vol. I, page 530) and in the case under consideration no such transfer is alleged but that on the contrary the written statement of the 2nd defendant alleges (paragraph 4) that the possession was delivered to the 3rd defendant himself.

(8) (1843) Fultan 152 at p. 154; 1 Ind. Dec. (o. s.) 736.

That allegation taken literally is meaningless: a boy seven years old cannot take possession of a field. It is explained, however, that possession was taken on behalf of the minor by the grandfather, or in other words that transfer of possession was unnecessary. This explanation is inadequate to bring the gift within the scope of the rule. That rule is concerned with one special aspect of the general rule, that transfer of possession is necessary for completing a gift—that special aspect having reference to the fact that the guardian of the property of a minor is the donor, and the minor the donee. The present case is not such.

The question is always whether the requirement of the law, that the donor shall do everything to transfer all the rights making up ownership (including transfer of possession), has been complied with either by placing the subject of gift in the immediate personal control of the donee or by some act which operates to bring about the same result. The rules of law relating to possession appear abstruse and complex, owing to the failure to direct the inquiry to the ultimate use to which the subject of gift has been put and to determine whether or not it was the donee who has derived benefit from the property after the gift. The law is not made up of unmeaning technicalities. It is not abstruse and removed, from the common course of events and human conduct. The 3rd defendant has failed to come within one particular rule (that gifts to minors shall be transferred to their guardians). His failure arises from the fact that that rule is not applicable to the circumstances of this case. But a gift to a minor which in all essentials has been completed, cannot fail merely because the person who has taken charge of the subject of gift on behalf of the minor is not his father. This would be contrary to all principle and authority. The donee can authorise a third person to take possession of the gift on his behalf. Conversely the donor can give possession to a 3rd person on behalf of any donee. If any authority were needed for these propositions, it may be found in the 11th Chapter of the book on Hiba in the Fatawa Alamgiri. A person accepting possession in such circumstances would, in the majority of cases, occupy a position not distinguishable from that of a trustee on behalf of the donee.

These provisions cannot be applied less favourably to a minor than to one of full age; and it has been held by a Bench which included Abdur Rahim, J., that where a lady purported to make a gift to her minor paternal grandchild and "stated in the deed of gift that she would remain in possession of the property as guardian of the minor, and on his behalf," it was necessary to have a finding as to whether the grandmother was at the time of the gift in possession, on the assumption that if she was, her possession might be transformed by her own acts into possession on behalf of the donee though as the father of the donee was alive, (he was the 2nd defendant) the paternal grandmother could not by any act on her part make herself the guardian of her grandchild [Fakir Nynar Muhamed Rowther v. Kandasawmi Kulathu Vandan (9)]. The decision in that case was ultimately against the validity of the gift as the finding was that the donor was not herself in possession.

Had the donor been found to have been in possession, the validity of the gift would still have depended on the further question whether after the declaration of gift, the donor had transformed her possession on her own behalf into possession on behalf of the minor as his guardian by applying the benefits of the subject of gift to the donee, or whether she had continued to apply them to her own use. For, if she had continued to apply the gift to her own use, the gift would have been liable to attack from two directions.

First, it would be very unreasonable to hold, in the absence of some explanation, that the transaction is real or that there is any intention to make a gift, when it is found that as a matter of fact the person who purports to hold himself forth as the donor, and as having ceased by his voluntary act to have any interest in the property, has continued without interruption to use the property exactly in the same way as before the gift, and has not permitted the donee even at the moment of the gift to have any more benefit from the subject of gift than before. The ostensible object of the gift is that the donee should take all the benefit and the donor should cease to take any. There being on the one side the words of the donor, and on the other his acts, there would seldom be any difficulty in deciding which represents his true intentions. And the legal result of the fact that there is no intention to make a gift, coupled with the fact that the donee has not derived any benefit from the subject of the gift, is that the donor is entitled to continue, as he has been continuing, in possession and enjoyment: and that the previous declaration of gift is nugatory, because it has not been followed by a transfer of ownership which implies a transfer of possession. This result is strictly in accordance with the theory of the law of gift, as appears from Rahiman Bi v. Mahomed Fatima Bibi(10), where the question was whether the rule, that gifts to minors from the guardians of their property are complete by the declaration of gift (provided that the subject of the gift is under the control of the guardian at the time of such declaration) was in itself a sufficient answer to the objection that the gift had never been completed. The donor there was the father of the donee, and had purported to reserve to himself what in effect was a life-interest. The facts of that case were, therefore, very different from those with which we have to deal here. The considerations referred to in that case, however, in so far as they affect the decision of the questions (1) whether the donor did in fact intend to transfer the ownership from himself to the donee and (2) whether he effectuated such transfer, are of general application.

Secondly, even if the Muhammadan Law were otherwise, it would, to adopt the words of Holloway, J., be very inequitable to allow the visible means of a man to be narrowed down by a transaction not evidenced by contracts [Husain Khan Bahadur v. Nateri Srinivasa Charlu (11)]. Holloway, J., was dealing with the converse case. But the principle to which he referred is applicable.

It is obvious that the rule should not be so applied that in the changed circumstances of modern life, it should be manipulated to such inequitable purposes. The object of the rule is to prevent a minor from being rendered incompetent to receive a gift from his guardian. It is not the intention of the rule to enable a minor to insist on a gift being completed in his favour, which was not in fact completed by the donor and which was perhaps never intended to be completed. Still less is it the object of the rule to enable the guardian of a minor to continue in possession and enjoyment of property, and yet as against third parties to set up a gift in favour of the minor. In such circumstances the third parties may reasonably claim that the property must be dealt with on the basis that it continued to belong to the alleged donor, who exercised all the rights of ownership over it after purporting voluntarily to part with his rights over it.

It is necessary for these reasons to have a finding on the question whether at or after the date of Exhibit I and as the result of the gift referred to in it, the produce or the income or other benefit derived from the alleged subject of the gift was applied to the use of the donee, so as to show that a transfer of ownership had been made, or whether it was continued to be applied in the same way as it was before the alleged gift.

The finding should be submitted within six weeks and seven days are allowed for objections.

In compliance with the above order, the District Judge of Cuddapah submitted the following

FINDING.— * * * * * * I, therefore, find on the issue on which finding is called for, that the produce of the land or the income or other benefit derived from the alleged subject of the gift was not applied to the use of the donee, so as to show that a transfer of ownership has been made, and that it was on the contrary continued to be applied in the same way as it was before the alleged gift.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the District Judge of Cuddapah on the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.— We accept the finding and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 79—Grove-holder—Grove brought under cultivation—Grove-holder, whether becomes a tenant ipso facto—Wrongful dispossession.

If a grove ceases to be the grove land and the grove-holder brings it under cultivation, he is not entitled to remain in possession as a tenant at all until he comes to some arrangement with the land-holder as to the payment of rent.

If, therefore, the ex grove-holder is dispossessed by the land-holder, he cannot maintain a suit under section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act, as he is not a tenant.

Harbhajan v. Bihari Bakhsh Singh, Selected Decision No. 8 of 1903, applied.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 25th June 1914, in a case of possession and compensation, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Ballia District.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 22nd, 1915).—The Commissioner has written a careful judgment in the case, but there is one point in which I think he is wrong on a question of law. There seems to me no doubt whatever that the land in question was until recently groveland and not agricultural land, and that after the grove was cut the respondent was not entitled to remain in possession as an occupancy tenant, nor was he entitled to remain in possession as a tenant at all, until he came to some arrangement with the land-holders and they allowed him to remain in possession as a tenant. The subsequent compromise of the present case by some of the defendants has nothing to do with the matter. In Harbhajan v. Bihari Bakhsh Singh (1) it was held that a person occupying land without the consent of the landlord was not entitled to recover possession under the corresponding section of the Oudh Rent Act, if ejected by the landlord. The circumstances were not dissimilar. In that case the plaintiff formerly held the land as the khud-kasht of his zemindari, but he ceased to be a zemindar and continued to hold the land without coming to any agreement with the land-holder. This is very much the same as in the present case. So long as the trees existed he had the rights of a grove-holder, but when the trees were cut down, he had no right to remain in possession without the consent of the land-holders. Following that ruling then, a suit under section 79 cannot lie in the present case. I would set aside the order of the Commissioner and restore the order of the Assistant Collector, respondent paying costs throughout so far as the share of the present appellants is concerned.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 66—Benami purchase—Purchase by one of the decree-holders—Suit by at her decree-holder against purchaser, maintainability of.

In execution of a simple money-decree held by two persons jointly, a certain zemindari property of the judgment-debtor was put up to sale and was with the permission of the Court purchased by one of the decree-holders in 1902. The purchaser was put in formal possession of the property in 1903. In 1913, the other decree-holder brought a suit against the purchaser and claimed possession of a share in the property, alleging that in accordance with an oral agreement the purchase was for the benefit of both the decree-holders:

Held, that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 448, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Jhansi, dated the 14th February 1914.

Mr. Girdhar Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. C. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case, Salle, and the defendant, Mohan Lal, were joint holders of a simple money-decree for Rs. 70-12-0 against one Khet Singh. A zemindari share belonging to Khet Singh was attached in execution of the decree and put up for sale. It appears that at one stage both the decree-holders had obtained permission of the Court to bid; but this permission lapsed in consequence of the postponement of the sale. Later on Mohan Lal alone applied for permission to bid and, having received it, he became the certified purchaser of the share in question, at an auction-sale held on the 21st of July 1902, for a sum of Rs. 60. He seems to have certified to the executing Court the receipt of Rs. 60 in part satisfaction of the decree. Formal possession was delivered to Mohan Lal on the 28th of July 1903. In the present suit, filed on the 23rd of July 1913, Salle claimed possession of the share in question in accordance with an oral agreement set up by him, to the effect that Mohan Lal's purchase was to be for the benefit of both the decree-holders. He admitted that Mohan Lal had from the first refused to give him possession over any share in the property in suit. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on various grounds. Primarily it held that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure; further that, supposing the suit was maintainable in any form, it was barred by limitation and, finally, that no oral agreement of the nature alleged in the plaint was proved. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge and his appeal has been dismissed. The form of the judgment passed by the learned District Judge is assailed in the memorandum of appeal to this Court. As a matter of fact the lower Appellate Court has set out clearly enough the points for determination, but has disposed of the appeal upon findings sufficient to warrant the dismissal of the suit, although they do not cover all the points before it for determination. The learned District Judge says, in effect, that the suit as brought does offend against the provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure and should be dismissed on that ground. He suggests, however, that if the plaint had been differently worded, and if the plaintiff had contented himself with asserting that the purchase made by Mohan Lal had been effected with the joint funds of Mohan Lal and the plaintiff and for the benefit of both, he might perhaps be permitted to maintain a suit for a declaration on the principles laid down by a Judge of this Court in Achhaibar Dube v. Tapasi Dube (1); but the learned District Judge remarks that the period of limitation for a declaratory suit, such as was contemplated by the learned Judge who decided that case, is six years, so that even from this point of view the present suit must fail. It is contended before me in second appeal that the suit was one for the recovery of possession, governed by the twelve years' period of limitation, and that such a suit is maintainable on the facts set forth in the plaint. I am of opinion that the learned Munsif was right in holding that the suit as brought contravenes the provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure and should have been dismissed on this ground alone; from any point of view, the facts of the case are distinguishable from those of Achhaibar Dube v. Tapasi Dube (1), where the decree was a mortgage-decree and was exactly satisfied by purchase of the mortgaged property. The judgment in that case proceeded on its own facts and cannot, in my opinion, be relied upon as authority in the plaintiff's favour in the present case. Moreover, the learned District Judge is right in saying that, if any form of declaratory suit were maintainable on the facts alleged in the plaint, the period of limitation for such a suit would be six years. What the plaintiff in fact claims in the present case is that the defendant, Mohan Lal, is bound to hand over to him one-half share in the property in suit, unless he can produce evidence after an interval of ten years to satisfy the Court that the plaintiff, Salle, as a joint decree-holder, did receive one-half share in the sum of Rs. 60 bid by Mohan Lal as auction-purchaser of the property in suit. I am satisfied that the suit is not maintainable and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Acting District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal No. 457 of 1910, preferred against that of the Acting Head Assistant Collector of Narasapur, in Summary Suit No. 4 of 1909.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following Order of Reference made by Sankaran Nair and Tyabji, JJ.:—

Under section 192 of the Estates Land Act, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are made applicable to suits and appeals filed under the Act. Section 26, Civil Procedure Code, enacts that all suits shall be instituted by the presentation of a plaint, and under Order IV, rule 1, the plaint is to be presented to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf. In the case before us, the plaintiff took his plaint to the office of the Head Assistant Collector to whom it had to be presented. That officer was absent from head-quarters and in camp, and the plaintiff accordingly requested the chief ministerial officer of the Court to receive his plaint, but that officer refused to do so, as he was not authorized to receive such plaints; it was presented to the Head Assistant Collector on his return from camp. The suit is barred, if it is held to have been presented only after the return of the Head Assistant Collector. It is not barred, if presentation to the Head Clerk was a valid presentation of the plaint according to law. The question is one of general importance, and we think it desirable that there should be a final decision. We accordingly refer to the Full Bench the question whether, on the facts stated above, the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondents.

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

We think the words "all suits, appeals and other proceedings under this Act," in section 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, may be construed as including the institution of a suit by the presentation of a plaint. The result is that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to the presentation of a plaint in a suit under the Estates Land Act. Under section 121 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the rules in the first Schedule have effect as if enacted in the body of the Act. Order IV, rule 1, provides that every suit shall be instituted by presenting a plaint to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf. It is, therefore, open to the Collector to appoint an officer to whom plaints may be presented, but this, we understand, has not been done.

It is clear that rule 14 of the Civil Rules of Practice does not apply to proceedings before a Revenue Court, and we cannot accept the contention that, when the plaintiff sought to present his plaint in this case, the Court was closed within the meaning of section 4 of the Limitation Act.

We must accordingly answer the question in the affirmative.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—My learned brother has stated the facts. It is only necessary to refer to the exact finding arrived at by the District Judge. He finds that the settlement come to at the time of withdrawing the first suit was to substitute a different piece of land for the one which was originally agreed to be conveyed. The consideration was to be the same, and there was to be no change in the parties to the contract.

Mr. Devadoss contends that section 62 of the Contract Act does not apply to such a case. On the finding as stated by me, there has been no breach of the contract, but only a variation with the consent of the parties in one of the essential terms. The suit, which complained of default in the performance, ended in this adjustment. There is no finding that the contract was really broken. If Mr. Devadoss' premises are correct, namely, that there was a breach of the first contract, I would have agreed with him that section 62 will not help the defendant. The case of Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das Naskar (1) will then be directly in point. Mr. Muthukrishna Aiyar has not convinced me that this decision is wrong. Section 62 contemplates that the original contract subsists and that the parties have agreed to re-place it by a new contract. The language suggests that the contract is to be put an end to with the consent of both the parties when the substitution, rescission or alteration takes place. Section 63, on the other hand, deals with cases where there has been a breach of the contract. No doubt, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Subramanania Aiyar in the case of Davis v. Cundasami Mudali (2), this section refers to unilateral acts, whereas under section 62 the concurrence of both the parties is required. That is not the only distinction between the two sections. It is pointed out that both the sections find place under the heading "Contracts which need not be performed." I do not think this can afford any assistance in the construction of the sections. The English authorities which recognise the distinction between promises made before breach and those after breach, must have been present to the minds of the framers of the Contract Act. As at present advised, I am not prepared to dissent from the view taken in the case of Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das Naskar (1). But it is not necessary to discuss this subject any further.

I think the judgment of the District Judge can be supported on another ground. To the claim for specific performance made by the plaintiff, defendants' reply is that there has been a subsequent agreement to vary one of the terms of the contract by substituting another piece of land for the one already agreed upon. This defence is covered by section 26 (e) of the Specific Relief Act. That clause does not permit of a plea which sets up the abandonment of the first contract. It can be availed of only in cases of variation and, as I said before, the pleadings and the finding of the District Judge show that this is a contract of that description. I am unable to agree with the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant that section 26 (e) will not apply, if one of the parties to the contract has been complained against for default. There is no warrant for such a contention. It is open to argument that even if there has been a breach, section 26 (e) of the Specific Relief Act would apply, although section 62 of the Contract Act may not.

The decree of the District Judge is right and this second appeal is dismissed with costs.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The plaintiffs, who are the appellants, sue for specific performance of a contract by the defendants to sell the land described in the plaint and for damages. The plea of the defendants was that by an agreement between the parties certain other land was substituted for the land they originally agreed to sell, and both the lower Courts found that the plea was proved and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, on the ground that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a conveyance of the land claimed.

It is argued for the appellants that, inasmuch as the variation set up was after the breach of the contract, the plaintiffs are entitled to sue on the original contract without any reference to the variation agreed to by them, and reliance has been placed on Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das Naskar (1). There can be little doubt from the evidence that, after the plaintiffs filed a suit to recover the advance paid and damages alleging breach of contract by defendants, there was a mediation, as a result of which it was agreed between the plaintiffs and the defendants that land bearing Survey No. 153 (b) was to be sold instead of the land originally agreed upon. This appeal was argued on both sides on the footing that the variation was after the breach of contract.

I am of opinion that the present case falls within section 26, clause (e), of the Specific Relief Act and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to enforce the contract sued upon without the variation set up by the defendants. The section is clear and enacts that where a plaintiff seeks to nforce specific performance of a contract n writing to which the defendant sets up a variation, the plaintiff cannot obtain the performance sought except with the variation so set up where the parties have, subsequently to the execution of the contract, contracted to vary it. I see nothing in the section or illustrations to limit its operation to variations prior to the breach of the contract. It is, no doubt, true that under the English Common Law, there should be some independent benefit, actual or contingent, which is the consideration for varying a contract not under seal and that after breach, the only plea that would be valid defence would be accord and satisfaction where a party seeks to set up a variation of the terms of the contract. With all deference to the learned Judges who decided Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das Naskar (1), I am unable to see any grounds for introducing the same rule in construing either section 26, clause (e), of the Specific Relief Act or sections 62 and 63 of the Contract Act, which are general in their terms. The observation of the learned Editors of Smith's Leading Cases on Cumber v. Wane (3) and the view of Lord Blackburn on Foakes v. Beer (4) show that the rules of English Law as to consideration for variation are not founded on any sound principle. The Legislature has not adopted the principles laid down in Foakes v. Beer (4), when it enacted section 63 of the Code and so far as the Madras High Court is concerned, it has been held that no consideration is necessary for a contract to extend the time for performance of a contract: Davis v. Cundasami Mudali (2). There seems to me to be no reason why after breach the parties should not agree to vary the terms or why a plaintiff who consents to such variation should not be held bound by the terms of his agreement. As a matter of practice, it is very common in this country for mediators to interfere after quarrels have arisen between the parties and effect a compromise between them, and I see nothing inequitable in holding the parties to the variation agreed to, irrespective of whether the variation was before or after breach. I do not think that Courts should engraft on the plain meaning of the provisions of Madras enactments limitations founded on technical rules of English law and pleading, especially in cases where such limitations are not suited to the conditions prevailing in this country. The observations of Sir Frederick Pollock (in his Genius of the Common Law, page 92) as to the undesirability of the blind following of English precedents, which have been referred to with approval by Justice Mookerjee in Manjuri Bibi v. Akkel Mahmud (5) may well be borne in mind in considering this question.

I am of opinion that the decrees of the Courts below are right and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Pre-emption decree—Vendee applying to withdraw money, whether estopped from appealing—Appeal.

In a pre-emption suit decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff deposited the money to be paid to the vendee in Court. The vendee applied to withdraw the money so deposited but did not, as a matter of fact, withdraw it:

Second appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated 28th January 1914.

Mr. Iswar Saran (with him Mr. Parmeshwor Dayal), for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the Court of first instance the plaintiff, who is here respondent, instituted a suit for pre-emption, stating that he was entitled to pre-empt both under the Muhammadan Law and the village custom. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff was entitled to pre-empt and gave him a decree accordingly. The date on which he granted the decree was the 20th of August 1913. From that decree the defendant filed an appeal on the 3rd of November 1913. That appeal was within time as the vacation intervened. Upon the Court proceeding to hear the appeal, a preliminary objection was taken on the part of the plaintiff, to the effect that the defendant had accepted the decree and could no longer appeal from it. The acceptance was said to be on this wise, namely, that on the 5th of September 1913 which was within the month of the period granted to the plaintiff to deposit the pre-emption money, the defendant applied to withdraw the money which had been deposited. Along with the application to withdraw the money, he filed an application stating that he was willing to accept this money and asking that it be given to his Pleader, Munshi Wajid Ali. Upon this application the Court passed an order that the money should be paid; but before it was actually paid the defendant had filed a second application stating that he had changed his mind, would not now accept the money and had in fact on the 3rd of November filed this appeal. The lower Appellate Court held that the defendant could not be allowed to blow hot and cold and that by his first application he had accepted the decree, and dismissed the appeal. The defendant now comes to this Court and says that by what he did he had not lost his right to appeal.

No authority has been cited to me either one way or the other, except the case of Anant Das v. Ashburner and Company (1) and that of Moonshee Ameer Ali v. Maharanee Inderjeet Singh (2). Neither of the cases cited appears to be in point. The facts which govern them are quite distinct from those which govern this appeal. There was no agreement in the present case on the part of the defendant by which he is precluded from filing an appeal. This being so and the appeal having been disposed of by the lower Appellate Court on a preliminary point which is now reversed, I remand the case to the lower Appellate Court with directions to re-admit the appeal under its Civil Rule against the decision of the Munsif, Iswarganj, exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Petitioner.

Babu Kali Kinkar Chakrabarty, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was issued under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, on an application by the plaintiff in the suit, who is a Pleader by profession. His case is that he was engaged to resist the claim in a mortgage suit instituted against the defendant. He successfuly defended the suit, which was dismissed with costs on the 3rd February 1911. He alleges that the defendant paid him Rs. 5 only on account of fees and has refused to make any further payments. He consequently instituted this suit on the 29th January 1914 for recovery of such sum as the Court may adjudge reasonable, and values the relief at Rs. 45. He states incidentally in the plaint that Rs. 50 would be a fair measure of remuneration, as that was the sum decreed in favour of the defendant as against his opponent in the mortgage suit. The defendant pleaded that the suit was not maintainable and, further, that the plaintiff had been paid whatever was lawfully payable to him. The Small Cause Court Judge did not investigate the case on the merits, but dismissed the suit on the authority of the decision of Kamini Moni Debi v. Khettra Mohan Ganguli (1). We are now invited to set aside the decree of dismissal, on the ground that the case mentioned is distinguishable and section 28 of the Legal Practioners Act, rightly construed, does not bar the claim.

Section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act is in these terms: "No agreement entered into by any Pleader...with any person retaining or employing him, respecting the amount and manner of payment for the whole or any part of any past or future services, fees, charges or disbursements in respect of business done or to be done by such Pleader...shall be valid, unless it is made in writing signed by such person, and is, within fifteen days from the day on which it is executed, filed in the District Court or in some Court in which some portion of the business in respect of which it has been executed has been or is to be done." It is plain that the agreement thus invalidated is an agreement respecting the amount and manner of payment of fees, charges and disbursements. In the case before us, there is no allegation that there was any agreement touching either the amount or the manner of payment of the fees. According to the plaintiff, the defendant asked him to act as his Pleader; nothing was said as to the amount of fees or as to the time when the fees should be paid. The very fact that the defendant asked the plaintiff to conduct his case necessarily implied that he would reasonably remunerate the plaintiff. The relation between the parties is contractual and the case is not governed by section 70 of the Indian Contract Act, which finds a place in the fifth Chapter devoted to certain relations resembling those created by contract. That section, besides, defines the obligation of a person who has enjoyed the benefit of a non-gratuitous act. Here the defendant is bound to remunerate the plaintiff, who acted at his request, even though the act might not have been beneficial to the defendant; for instance, the defendant would have been bound to remunerate the plaintiff, even though the latter had been unsuccessful in his defence. It is plain that if A requests B to do a piece of work for him, and B does it, not intending to act gratuitously, he is bound to pay B, even if he is not benefited thereby. The request implies a promise to pay reasonable remuneration. In this view, no question consequently arises as to the effect of section 65 of the Indian Contract Act, which treats of the obligation of a person to make restitution or compensation for advantage received by him under an agreement that is discovered to be or becomes void. But it is worthy of note that if there had been an agreement as to the amount or manner of payment of fees, which was void because made in contravention of section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act, section 65 of the Indian Contract Act would have been of no avail, inasmuch as the agreement was void ab initio and on the face of it, and could not be aptly described as an agreement which has been discovered to be or has become void. To sum up the position: as the defendant employed the plaintiff without any agreement as to the amount of fees or the manner of payment thereof, the plaintiff is entitled to recover on an implied promise of reasonable remuneration, and the case is not touched by the principle embodied in section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act. This view is not opposed to the decision of Kamine Moni Debi v. Khettra Mohan Ganguli (1). There the Pleader claimed fees due under an agreement for professional services rendered; it was ruled that the agreement was void, as the requirements of section 28 had not been fulfilled. In the case before us, there was no agreement between the parties either as to the amount or as to the manner of payment of fees. We need not, consequently, consider the question whether, if there had been such an agreement, which was void because contrary to the express provisions of the Statute, the Pleader could yet have claimed reasonable compensation. Upon that question, there has been a conflict of judicial opinion, as is clear from the decisions in Raghunath Saran Singh v. Sri Ram (2); Razi-ud-Din v. Karim Bakhsh (3); Rama v. Kunji (4); Krishnasami v. Kesava (5); Anantayya v. Padmayya (6), Sundaraja Ayyangar v. Pattanathusami Tevar (7), Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Ayyar (8), Hazari Lal v. Tilok Chand (9). The observations in some of these cases, for instance, those in Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Ayyar (8), may, as has been argued with considerable force by the opposite party, practically render nugatory the salutary provisions of section 28. Where there is an agreement, void under section 28, the question may well require consideration, whether the Court should assist a person who has entered into a contract rendered void by positive law. No such question, however, arises where, as here, there is no agreement of the kind contemplated by section 28. In the words of Sargent, C. J., in Keshav Govind Joshi v. Jamsetji Cursetji (10), the Pleader, in the absence of an agreement, is entitled to a quantum meruit, which ought to be determined with reference to all the circumstances of the case. To the same effect are the observations in Sarat Chandra Roy v. Chandi Charan Mitra (11) and Mohendra Lal v. Akhil Chandra Pakrashi (12). We hold accordingly that the present case is not within the scope of section 28 and that the suit is consequently maintainable.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 18 of 1910, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Bapatla, in Original Suit No. 841 of 1907.

Mr. K. Narain Row, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondents.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 21st and 22nd July 1914, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—It is argued with reference to isssue 5 that the findings of the lower Courts are based on 1st defendant's prescription against plaintiff and the other members of the family, and that no effective prescription was established. It is alleged in this connection that the lower Courts gave insufficient weight to the facts that the patta was throughout in the name of the father of the family and that 1st defendant was the senior and, therefore, presumably the managing member. Reference has also been made to Narayana v. Krishna (1) and Parbati Dasi v. Baikuntha Nath Das (2), as showing that no presumption arises in favour of 1st defendant's ownership in the circumstances of this case. But those decisions are not in point, since they do not deal with acquisition, such as that now in question, which admittedly originated in trespass; and we have been shown no authority for the view that one member of a Hindu joint family must be presumed to have prescribed for the benefit of his co-parceners in such circumstances. In fact both Courts also dealt with this part of the case on this broader ground, the learned Subordinate Judge adopting the District Munsif's conclusions in toto, that the 1st defendant and his brothers including plaintiff had no title to the property and accordingly that there could be no question of prescription as between them. All were trespassers alike and the title, on which the 1st defendant is entitled to rely as against plaintiffs, is based only on his possession, which is admitted. This conclusion is sufficient to justify the determination of the issue in defendant's favour, and it has not been displaced. The appeal, therefore, fails in so far as it relates to the finding on issue 5.

Issue 4 was "whether the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are in possession of items 17, 18, 19 and 20 of schedule A and of items 6, 11 and 13 of schedule B."

The lower Appellate Court did not find on the question of possession of these items. It found only that they are the self-acquisition of the 1st defendant. We remand the case for a fresh finding on the evidence on record on issue 4 as to the possession of the items referred to in it.

The finding should be submitted within six weeks from this date and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In obedience to the order contained in the above judgment, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Guntur submitted the following

FINDING.—I have been directed to submit my finding on issue 4, which runs as follows:—

(1) 8 M. 214.

(2) 22 Ind. Cas. 51; 15 M. L. J. 66; 12 A. L. J. 79; 19 C. L. J. 129; 18 C. W. N. 428; 16 Bom. L. R. 101; 26 M. L. J. 248 (1914) M. W. N. 42.

"Whether the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are in possession of items 17, 18, 19, 20 of schedule A and of items 6, 11, and 13 of schedule B."

2. Item 20 in the issue is a mistake admittedly for item 21.

3. I have dealt with these items in paragragh 12 of my judgment. It is conceded now for the plaintiffs that the survey numbers given for these items in the plaint schedules A and B are incorrect and that the correct numbers are those which appear in the 1st defendant's patta, Exhibit IX (c). The schedules did not give the boundaries or the names of the lands, but, when the 1st defendant was examined as the plaintiff's 1st witness, he was questioned as to whether he was not in possession of the lands which went by certain names, and he admitted he was in possession of them. The District Munsif noted the items in question against the names put to the 1st defendant in his deposition. Evidently, what the plaintiffs intended to claim were the lands included in the 1st defendant's patta, Exhibit IX (c), though in respect of the lands in question the survey numbers were incorrectly noted in the schedules A and B. The plaintiffs have applied to me now for the amendment of the plaint by the insertion of the correct survey numbers in the schedules A and B, but the matter is one, which has to be determined by their Lordships. The question, however, is not of much importance, now that their Lordships have practically found that all the lands of swarna were the self-acquisition of the 1st defendant.

4. I find that the lands bearing the survey numbers given to the items in question in schedules A and B, as they now stand, are not in the possession of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court's finding on the issue remanded is that the lands referred to in the plaint of items 17, 18, 19 and 20 of schedule A and 6, 11 and 13 of schedule B are not in 1st to 3rd defendants' possession. Its correctness is not disputed. Plaintiffs say only that the survey numbers in the plaint are wrong and that they require time to apply to this Court for an amendment. We see no reason for giving time for that purpose. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Jurisdiction—Foreign Court—Submission to its jurisdiction—Objection taken in Court of first instance but not persisted on in Appellate Court—Inference—Question, whether can be re-opened afterwards.

The fact that an objection to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court was taken in the Court of first instance in the foreign territory but was not persisted on in appeal, is a clear proof of a submission to jurisdiction of the foreign Court and, therefore, the question cannot be re-opened again in execution of that decree in the British Courts. Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. K. Govinda Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the appeal must be allowed. The counter-petitioner, no doubt, objected to the jurisdiction in the Court of first instance in Cochin State. But, when a decree had been passed against him, he invoked the aid of the Appellate Court there without any such reservation,

This, it seems to us, was a submission to the Cochin Courts which debars him from relying on any defect in their jurisdiction now, vide Boissiere and Co. v. Brockner and Co. (1). We, therefore, without reference to the other contentions relied on by the petitioner-appellant, set aside the lower Appellate Court's order. The Subordinate Judge will restore the execution petition to his file and proceed with the disposal of it according to law.

Costs here and in the lower Appellate Court will be costs in the cause.

Mr. K. Jagannadha Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Srinivasa Aiyangar and S. Gopalaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The order in this case is one passed by the District Judge of Ramnad under section 186 of the Madras Estates Land Act. The preliminary order which is appealed against was passed on the 20th August 1911, and the judgment assessing the compensation, on the 30th June 1913. The present petition was filed on the 5th November 1913. The Court authorised acquisition of the land for the purpose sought, namely, a threshing floor. The petitioner now complains that the Court erred in basing its decision solely on the certificate of the Collector and in refusing to allow him to adduce evidence. He, however, took no steps to get that order set aside, but allowed the proceedings to continue; and it was not until he had failed in getting compensation as high as he wanted that he objected to the preliminary order. On this ground alone I would dismiss the petition.

On the examination of the record I find that the allegation that the District Judge bases his decision on the certificate alone, is not correct. The learned Vakil admitted that he had the petition before him and it is clear from the language of the order that he had other materials also before him. He does not say in his order that he is satisfied on the certificate of the Collector alone. He deals with the objections taken by the petitioner and decides that in the circumstances the threshing floor is required at the place where the land-holder seeks to have it made. That ground, therefore, disappears.

The allegation that the petitioner was not permitted to call witnesses is contained in an affidavit made by a relative of the petitioner, who speaks to what occurred at the hearing. The proceedings were in English and there is nothing to show that the petitioner was in a position to speak accurately to the facts. The proper person to have made the affidavit is obviously the Vakil who appeared, and no affidavit from him is forthcoming. The respondents have filed a counter-affidavit in which they allege, what is not contradicted, that the petitioner applied for no process to the Court for witnesses. In these circumstances I cannot accept the affidavit as being conclusive. On this ground also I would dismiss the petition.

The only other question that has been strenuously argued on behalf of the petitioner is the claim that the Court must take evidence of itself. This view has the authority of the majority of the Full Bench who considered this question in the case Goghun Mollah v. Rameshur Narain Mahta (1) on identical words in the Bengal Act. I do not, however, think it necessary to express any opinion. The point is one of great difficulty and in my view it will be very difficult to construe this section in any way that will give full value to both clauses of sub-section (1). The matter must be decided by a Bench of this Court. The petition is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

ORDER.—This was a suit in ejectment against three defendants. A decree was passed against all of them. These defendants are brothers and are members of an undivided Hindu family. Against the decree of the District Munsif, 1st defendant alone appealed. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were not parties to the appeal. The appeal was dismissed. The 1st defendant has preferred a second appeal. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 applied to this Court to be made party respondents and that application was granted. They have also presented an application to this Court to set aside the decree passed against them by the District Munsif, on the ground that they were not properly served and that the order declaring them ex parte is wrong. Mr. G. S. Venkatarama Aiyar raised a preliminary objection that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the application. The language of Order IX, rule 13, is clear and if the matter were res integra, we would have felt considerable hesitation in holding that this Court had jurisdiction. But in matters affecting procedure, it is desirable that there should be no conflict of decision. It was held in Sankara Bhatta v. Subraya Bhatta (1), under similar circumstances, that the High Court had jurisdiction to entertain an application. When the question, whether after the preferring of an appeal, the first Court had jurisdiction to hear an application for review, was considered by the Full Bench in Chenna Reddi v. Pedda Obi Reddi(2), the learned Judges were of opinion that the decision in Sankara Bhatta v. Subaraya Bhatta (1) was good law. It may also be pointed out that under section 107, clause (2), of the Code of Civil Procedure the Appellate Court has all the powers which the Court of first instance could have exercised. Therefore, it cannot be argued that the High Court has absolutely no jurisdiction. Moreover, it is not desirable that the same matter should be pending in two Courts at the same time. In the present case, the first defendant has appealed on a ground common to himself and the other defenddants and if he succeeds, the decree will have to be set aside in its entirety. Therefore, no use will be served by the Court of first instance entertaining this application.

The Calcutta decisions to which our attention has been drawn do not affect the question. It was held in those cases that the lower Court was not deprived of jurisdiction by the presentation of the appeal to the Appellate Court. To hold otherwise would be to contravene the express language of Order IX, rule 13. We think the decisions Kumud Nath Roy Chowdhry v. Jatindra Nath Chowdhry (3), Indu Meah v. Darbakhsh Bhuiyan (4) and Hedlot Khasia v. Ka Ran Khasiani (5), are not authorities for the position that the superior Court has no jurisdiction. Both on the grounds of convenience and on the principle of seeing that decisions affecting procedure are not constantly departed from, we hold that this Court had jurisdiction.

On the merits, we accept the affidavit filed by the respondent in the case. This shows that the three defendants were residing together at the time that the summons was served on the 1st defendant, who has been fighting the case in all its stages. The return of the amin says that the 1st defendant accepted service on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and stated that these defendants had gone to Kallakurichi. The probabilities are all in favour of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 having been aware of the service of the summons on the 1st defendant, of the progress of the suit and of the decree that was obtained against them in the Court of first instance. We do not believe this allegation that they had knowledge of the decree against them only after the filing of the second appeal.

We dismiss the application with costs.

JUDGMENT.

APPEAL No. 2196 OF 1912.

SHARF-UD-DIN, J.—In this appeal the plaintiff is the appellant. He instituted the present suit for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession over, a piece of land against the defendants on the ground that they are trespassers.

In order to understand the grounds urged in support of the present appeal, it is necessary to advert to some facts that happened before the institution of the present suit, and these facts are:

In 1883 the defendants 1st party were the lessees of a share in Mouza Satmalpore and while they were lessees, they obtained possession of the land in suit under kurtowlee leases executed by the tenants of the mouza. By this arrangement the 1st party defendants acquired the right of under-raiyats.

In 1906 the landlord brought rent suits against the defendants 2nd party who are the tenants and obtained ex partee decrees and in execution of those decrees put up the holdings of those tenants to sale and himself purchased them and thereafter took delivery of possession. There was a criminal proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure between the landlord and the defendants 1st party and in this proceeding the latter were found to be in possession, and hence the present suit.

The holdings purchased by the landlord were occupancy holdings and the landlord claims the lands of the holding as a proprietor thereof, on the ground that the entire interests of the landlord and the raiyat having united in him, he became a proprietor under section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that in consequence of the sale of the holding in execution of rent decrees, the raiyati interest of those tenants ceased to exist and with it the under-raiyati interest of the defendants 1st party and they are, therefore, trespassers and liable to be ejected.

The case set up by the defendants 1st party is described in paragraphs 8 and 9 of their written statements and they are these:

Para. 8—"That these defendants have been in lawful possession over the land in suit for the past 20 years as tenants, and, therefore, the plaintiff is not entiled to eject them."

Para. 9—"That the plaintiff has no legal claim to mesne profits but only to rent, which these defendants have ever been ready to pay and have duly tendered."

The Munsif gave a decree to the plaintiff, whereupon the defendants 1st party appealed to the District Judge. The appeal was allowed and the suit was dismissed. The lower Appellate Court held that the status of the defendants 1st party was that of occupancy raiyats. The lower Appellate Court further held that the ex parte rent decrees were obtained mala fide.

The grounds urged on behalf of the appellant are: (1) that there being no allegation on the part of the defendants 1st party and no proof on their behalf that the rent decrees were obtained mala fide, the lower Appellate Court erred in holding that those decrees were mala fide; (2) that defendants 1st party, having entered into possession of the land as under-raiyats and having continued in possession of the land either in the same capacity or as trespassers, could not acquire any right of occupancy.

It appears that the original tenants allowed the defendants 1st party to remain in possession of the land even after the expiry of the period mentioned in the kurtowlee leases.

I am of opinion that on the above facts no decision is necessary as to whether the lower Appellate Court should or should not have held that the ex parte rent decrees were obtained mala fide.

The decision of the present appeal rests on a finding as to the status of the defendants 1st party. On the admitted facts I find that although the defendants 1st party may not have acquired a title to the land as high as that of an occupancy raiyat, yet there can be no doubt that these defendants were holding the land as under-raiyats for the whole period from the execution of the kurtowlee leases down to the time when these holdings were sold and purchased by the plaintiff landlord in execution of his decrees for rent. The next question is what is their status after the sale of the holdings. I am of opinion that although the raiyati interest became merged into the superior interest of the landlord by operation of law, the defendants 1st party's status continued as that of an under-raiyat till evicted according to law.

When the appellant relies on the provisions of section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he must rely on the whole provision of that section. There is a proviso in that section, namely, that nothing in that sub-section shall prejudicially affect the rights of any third person.

There was a preliminary objection that the present appeal is defective inasmuch as Mr. Wilson, one of the members of the 1st party defendants, is not represented. The objection does not require any decision as I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

This judgment governs the other Appeals Nos. 3049 to 3052 of 1912.

Appeals dismissed.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in an action in ejectment. The ancestor of the defendants executed a kabulyat in favour of the plaintiff on the 1st June 1889 in respect of the disputed land, which covers an area of six cottas. The original tenant died in 1910. On the 4th April 1911, the plaintiff commenced this action to eject the defendants who are his descendants, on the ground that as the household interest was not heritable, they had no right to remain in occupation of the land. The Courts below have decreed the suit. In support of the present appeal, it has been urged that the plaintiff was a raiyat at a fixed rate of rent and was competent to create, as he did, a permanent heritable interest in favour of his grantee, although the latter was an under-raiyat. It has not been disputed by the respondent, and in view of the decision in Hari Mohan v. Atal Krishna Bose (1), (Rule No. 1260 of 1913 decided on the 17th June 1913), it cannot be disputed, that this result would follow if the plaintiff is a raiyat at a fixed rate, but it has been argued that he is not a raiyat of that description.

In the kabulyat executed by the ancestor of the defendants in favour of the plaintiff the interest of the latter is described as a kayemi karsha jote. The contention of the appellant is that the use of the term kayemi indicates that the plaintiff was a raiyat at a fixed rent. This position has been controverted by the respondent, and reliance has been placed on the decision in Fazel Sheikh v. Keramuddi Sheikh (2), to show that the term 'kayemi does not necessarily indicate fixity of rent. Reference has also been made to paragraph 15 of the report of the Rent Law Commission, dated the 15th July 1880, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 21st July 1880. The opinion was expressed by the Commissioners, as the result of their inquiries, that in Backergunj even the interest of a howladar is not held at a fixed rent, and this, indeed, was the view adopted by the Court in the case of Huromohan Mookerjee v. Ranee Lalun Monee Dassee (3). If the interest of a howladar does not imply fixity of rent, it is obvious that a subordinate tenant, whose interest is that of a kayemi kurshadar, does not hold at a fixed rent. We are of opinion that the use of the term

(1) 23 Ind. Cas. 925.
(2) 6 C. W. N. 916.
(3) 1 W R 5.

'kayem' imports not fixity of rent, but only permanence of occupation of the land, and this view is in accordance with that adopted in Gayratulla v. Girish Chandra Bhaumik (4) and Fazel Sheikh v. Keramuddi Sheikh (2). The position, then, is that the plaintiff was an occupancy raiyat and was not competent to create in favour of the ancestor of the defendants a permanent heritable under-raiyati interest.

It has been finally argued on behalf of the appellant that as the kabulyat is described as sthayee karsha kabulyat, the intention of the grantor, whatever restrictions there might have been on his own right, was to create a permanent and heritable interest in the grantee, and that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is not open to him to question the validity of the grant made by him. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention, for the descriptin of the kabulyat as "sthayee karsha" kabulyat does not necessarily imply that the grantee was intended to have a permanent heritable interest. We must take that expression along with the description of the interest of the grantor himself, who was only an occupancy raiyat, and not a raiyat at a fixed rent; he could not consequently be assumed to have created in the grantee a permanent heritable interest in contravention of the express provisions of the law. In this view, no question of estoppel arises.

If, then, the grantee was an under-raiyat, as he must be held to have been, it cannot be disputed that his interest was not heritable. This view is supported by the cases of Arip Mandal v. Ram Ratan Mandal (5) and Jamini Sundar Dassi v. Rajendra Nath Chuckrabutty (6). With reference, however, to the decision of the Full Bench in Arip Mandal v. Ram Ratan Mandal (5), it has been argued that as the present suit was instituted before the expiry of the agricultural year in which the tenant died, the suit was premature and was bound to fail. We are not prepared to accept this contention as well-founded. Assuming that the suit was instituted before the expiry of the agricultural year current at the time when the original under-raiyat died, the proper form of the decree would be one for ejectment against his representatives, the defendants, to be executed only on the expiry of that particular agricultural year. It is not disputed that the agricultural year mentioned has expired long ago and that the defendants have nevertheless continued in occupation of the land. The decree for ejectment made by the Court below must consequently be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Different sums were advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant at different times. They were treated under an agreement as a consolidated debt commencing from the date of the agreement and a promissory note was executed by the defendant the same day about the consolidated items. A suit on the basis of the dealings was held to fall under Article 85, Schedule I, Limitation Act, 1908, and not under Article 88. [p. 464 cals. 1 & 2].

BAPU SAHIB YOUSUFF & CO. v. ISAC ISMAIL & CO.

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice, in Original Side Appeal No. 82 of 1912, reported as 24 Ind. Cas. 128, preferred against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wallis, in the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, in Civil Suit No. 262 of 1910.

FACTS of the case will be found in 24 Ind. Cas. 128.

Mr. G. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Duraiswamy Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendant is the appellant. The first question argued in this appeal is whether the entire cause of action arose within the local limits of the original side jurisdiction of this Court. It was contended that as the defendant lives in Kodambakam outside such limits and as the plaint in paragraph 4 states "that statements of accounts were sent by the plaintiff" (to the defendant) it is clear from the plaint itself that such statements were sent on to Kodambakam outside the limits of Madras and that hence part of the cause of action arose outside such limits. I am, however, not prepared to differ from the concurrent conclusion of the three learned Judges of this Court who have already dealt with this case, that conclusion being that the statements of accounts were intended by the parties to be submitted by the plaintiffs to the defendant in the plaintiffs' shop premises in Madras and that they were so submitted. The objection as to jurisdiction, therefore, fails.

The next contention of the appellant's learned Vakil is that the Rs. 10,000 made up of four sums paid by the plaintiffs to the defendant on different dates in July 1907 constituted an independent transaction of loan between the parties and that the claim for the recovery of these four sums was barred by limitation. The arguments under this contention were based partly on the fact that a promissory note payable on demand for the total of these four sums making up the Rs. 10,000 was obtained from the defendant by the plaintiffs on the 23rd July 1907, and partly on the fact that this sum of Rs. 10,000 was not entered as one of the items in the statements of accounts submitted from time to time by the plaintiff to the defendant. So far as the argument is based upon the execution of a separate promissory note, I do not think there is anything in it because on the very date on which the promissory note was executed, an agreement was signed by the defendant on the counterfoil of the sheet on which the promissory note was executed, and that agreement clearly stated that these four sums making up Rs. 10,000 were to be the sums advanced to the defendant in respect of, and for his carrying on, the dealings which were to be commenced from that date between the parties. Whether the right given under the promissory note to the plaintiffs to recover the Rs. 10,000 on demand is treated as qualified by the agreement in the counterfoil, (namely, that the Rs. 10,000 was to be the amount of advance to be taken into account in the dealings that commenced between the parties) or whether the contract under the promissory note is treated as a collateral security for the due performance by the defendant of the agreement entered into between the parties according to the counterfoil paper, is, in my opinion not material, because the suit, reading the plaint as a whole, seems to me to be based upon the dealings between the parties, and upon the basis that the items making up the Rs. 10,000 should be treated as items constituting the dealings between the parties. If the promissory note is to be treated as a collateral security, the fact that the claim to enforce that security is barred by limitation, cannot affect the plaintiffs' right to enforce the obligation of the defendant in respect of the substantial claim arising out of the accounts of the dealings between the parties, such accounts being mutual, open and current accounts according to the evidence. While it must be admitted that the plaint is badly drafted in paragraphs 4 and 6, I think that reading it as a whole, the plaintiffs' claim was intended to be based on the dealings, treating the advance of the four items making up the ten thousand rupees as the commencement of the dealings. On this view of the facts, no question of limitation arises in respect of this sum of Rs. 10,000.

Finally, it was argued that the accounts ought to have been taken as if the dealings under the agreement in the counterfoil of Exhibit A had ceased on the 3rd March 1908 and not in May 1909. The question whether the accounts ought to be taken till March 1908 or May 1909 was not dealt with in the judgment given by the learned Judge who tried the case in the original side, nor was it dealt with in the preliminary decree which followed that judgment. This Letters Patent Appeal is against the decree* of the learned Chief Justice passed in appeal on the preliminary decree. It was only in the subsequent proceedings that resulted in the final decree that the sum due on the accounts was ascertained, on the basis that it was to be taken till May 1909 and was awarded on that basis against the appellant.

The question, therefore, as to the date to which the accounts ought to be taken between the parties cannot be raised in this appeal against the preliminary judgment and decree.

In the result I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

BAKEWELL, J.—I agree with the conclusions of the learned Chief Justice in his judgment for the reasons mentioned therein and I have nothing further to add.

I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

NAPIER, J.—I agree. I will only add a few words on the points that were argued before us. The first point taken on the question of limitation was that the suit was one which was governed by Article 88 and that Article 85 had no bearing. Now Article 88 does not in terms apply, because that is a suit against a factor; but it was suggested that the relation between the plaintiff and the defendant in this case was one in which the plaintiff was a factor and that, therefore, it did not come within Article 85. Now it is true that the plaintiff was a factor in respect of some portion of the dealings between the parties. But it is not correct to suggest, as was suggested by the learned Vakil for the appellant, that it was as a factor that he made the advances which are included in the accounts. The position of a factor is stated in the judgment of Cotton, L. J., in Stevens v. Biller (1), as "an agent entrusted with the possession of goods for the purpose of sale." When, therefore, we find that in the contract and the dealings between the parties there was something outside the mere entrusting of goods for sale and the sale by the agent, there are other elements on which the suit can be brought and those elements are quite sufficient to bring the case within Article 85. There were the advances from time to time and there were credits for the goods sold on the defendant's behalf. I see no reason, therefore, why a suit should not be brought under Article 85 for the balance due on a mutual, open and current account.

The next point taken was that this total amount of Rs. 10,000 was not in fact treated by the parties as being an item in the account. With respect to that I entirely agree with my learned brother and I adopt the reasons given by the learned Chief Justice, which are to be found on pages 4 and 5 of his judgment. In my view the dissentient Judge, Mr. Justice Oldfield, overlooked the close connection between the circumstances under which the advances were made and treated this sum of Rs. 10,000 as an independent transaction. The facts of the case, in my view, do not support that contention, and I, therefore agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, contemplates a case where a party derives title from a party to the previous litigation subsequent to the previous litigation. [p. 465, col. 2.]

There is nothing in section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure to suggest that where the plaintiff has derived no title subsequent to the previous suit, the subsequent suit should involve the consequence of being dismissed. [p. 465, col. 2.]

Where no issue was raised or tried in the former suit between the parties to the new suit:

Held, that the claim was not barred by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 465, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Jessore, dated the 21st of September 1912, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Jessore, dated the 30th of May 1911.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Dhirendra Krishna Roy, for the Appellant.

Babus Bepin Behary Ghose II, Jnanendra Nath Sircar and Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned District Judge of Jessore affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge of the first Court there. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover mesne profits or damages in respect of certain lands of which he had been kept out of possession by the defendants Nos. 1 to 56. The plaintiff in the year 1896 obtained a lease of about 600 bighas of land at an annual rent of Rs. 196 odd from the defendants Nos. 57 to 60. When the plaintiff attempted to take possession, he was resisted by the defendants Nos. 1 to 56. Then happened what has caused the difficulty in the present suit. In the year 1900, the defendants Nos. 57 to 60 instituted a suit to recover possession through the plaintiff of the lands together with mesne profits. The present plaintiff was the pro forma defendant to that suit. But it is quite clear that that suit ought to have been dismissed, because either the defendants Nos. 57 to 60 had a right to possess the lands in which case the decree ought to have been in their favour, or that there had been a right of possession in favour of the present plaintiff in which case the suit ought to have been dismissed. What happened was that the suit was decreed on the 11th July 1902, actual possession being delivered on the 23rd July 1909. In the course of the execution proceedings in that suit, mesne profits were assessed for three years down to the 11th July 1905, and now the plaintiff brings the present suit to recover mesne profits after that date. The learned Judges of the Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that it is barred by the rule of res judicata. It is quite clear that section 11, Code of Civil Procedure, contemplates a case where a party derives title from a party to the previous litigation subsequent to the previous litigation. There is nothing in section 11 to suggest that where the plaintiff has derived no title subsequent to the previous suit, the subsequent suit should involve the usual consequence of being dismissed. That is what has caused the difficulty in the present case because obviously the plaintiff in this suit does not claim through the defendants Nos. 57 to 60 subsequent to the date of the former suit.

Then the next point is that, at any rate, the present plaintiff was a formal party to the former suit and that a case of res judicata has arisen between the present plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 to 56 by reason thereof. But no issue was raised or tried between the present plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 to 56 in the former suit. It is quite clear, therefore, that the present claim is not barred by section 11, Code of Civil Procedure.

The other point is that the plaintiff's suit is barred by section 211 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, which corresponds with Order XX, rule 12, of the new Code. But Order XX, rule 12, does not contemplate anything except the relation between the plaintiff and the defendant in that suit. There is nothing in Order XX, rule 12, to suggest that it applies between co-defendants. That being so, there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff in the present suit from recovering damages in respect of the period subsequent to the assessment of damages in the former suit. The present appeal must, therefore, be allowed with costs both here and in the Courts below and the case remitted to the Court of first instance for the purpose of deciding the other issues raised in the case and, if necessary, for assessing and determining the amount of damages payable to the plaintiff.

Where in the absence of any custom of transfer an occupancy raiyat transfers the property to the under-raiyats. the landlord has a right to re-enter upon the property

A notice under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to which under-raiyats are entitled, is indeed required before ejectment, but that does not apply to a superior landlord who is claiming to re-enter because the occupancy raiyat has forfeited his holding by having transferred it without the consent of the landlord.

Section 49 applies where the occupancy raiyat still remains in the position of the landlord, not where the occupancy raiyat has forfeited his interest by having transferred his interest without the consent of the landlord.

A notice served under section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not required for the landlord to re-enter in a case like this.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24-Pergannahs, dated the 23rd January 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Basirhat, dated the 29th of February 1912.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Satya Charan Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from a decision of the learned District Judge of 24-Pergannahs dated the 23rd January 1913, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the second Court of Basirhat. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs for ejectment. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were under-raiyats under the defendant No. 4. Then the defendant No. 4 transferred his occupancy right to the first three defendants. After that transfer, the landlord settled the land with the present plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then sued to recover possession of the land. The under-raiyats raised many defences, but it has been found by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court that the interest that the defendant No. 4 had was that of an occupancy raiyat and that there is no custom of transfer. Therefore, when the fourth defendant transferred the property to the other three defendants, the landlord had a right to re-tenter upon the property. But it is said that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who were originally under-raiyats, are entitled to a notice under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under section 49 an under-raiyat is not liable to be ejected by his landlord, except when holding otherwise than under a written lease, at the end of the agricultural year next following the year in which a notice to quit is served upon him by his landlord. That does not apply to a superior landlord who is claiming to re-enter because the occupancy raiyat has forfeited his holding by having transferred it without the consent of the landlord. Section 49 applies where the occupancy raiyat still remains in the position of the landlord, not where the occupancy raiyat has forfeited his interest by having transferred his interest without the consent of the landlord.

Then another point has been made that, in this case, the landlord could only re-enter after a notice served under section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The decisions of this Court are clear and conclusive that that is not so. Those decisions have been acted upon and recognised and this point about section 87 clearly has got no substance in it. I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. The present appeal, therefore, fails and mus be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the second and third defendants in a suit for partition of joint property. The land in dispute is comprised in an estate held by the fourth and fifth defendants as proprietors. On the 27th February 1894, the proprietors granted a lease to the third defendant, apparently for the benefit of himself and his brothers, the first two defendants. On the 31st August 1904 the fourth defendant gave a lease to the first three defendants in respect of his half share. This lease, it has been alleged, was granted for building purposes. On the 21st February 1905, the fifth defendant granted a putni to the first three defendants in respect of the half share held by him as proprietor. On the 6th December 1909, the fourth defendant granted a similar putni to the plaintiffs in respect of his half share. The putni leases, it has not been disputed, were superior to the leases previously granted by the proprietors. On the 2nd June 1910 the plaintiffs commenced the present suit for partition as against the first three defendants. They also joined the proprietors as fourth and fifth defendants, but no relief was claimed against the latter. The contending defendants have resisted the claim for partition on the ground that the suit is not maintainable. Their argument is that as they are lessees of the entire property under the lease of the 22nd February 1894, the plaintiffs, as putnidars of a half share, are not entitled to claim partition. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention.

It has not been disputed that as the plaintiffs and the first three defendants are putnidars, each in respect of one-half share, the plaintiffs are, prima facie, entitled to claim partition against the defendants. When A and B are in joint possession as joint owners, each is ordinarily entitled to claim partition against the other, and it is no valid answer to a claim for partition by A that B has acquired a subordinate interest over the whole property. We are unable to uphold the contention that as the first three defendants, in addition to their putni interest, have also a subordinate interest which extends over the entire property, the right of the plaintiffs to claim partition cannot be enforced. Neither authority nor principle has been adduced in support of this proposition. It was ruled by the Judicial Committee in the case of Bhagwat Sahai v. Bipin Behary Mitter (1), where their Lordships affirmed the decision of the Full Bench in Hemadri Nath Khan v. Ramani Kanta Roy (2), that the right of partition exists when two parties are in joint possession of land under permanent titles, even though those titles may not be identical or of co-ordinate degree. In the case before us, the plaintiffs and the first three defendants are both holders of putni tenures; they are in possession as putnidars and their interests are of the same grade. Consequently, as between them the right of partition exists. There is no intelligible principle on which the view can be maintained that the right of the plaintiffs to claim partition has become unenforceable because the defendants have an additional right, namely, right as subordinate tenants. Property held in co-tenancy (subject to exceptions immaterial for our present purpose) may be partitioned by suit and the only essential is that the property sought to be partitioned is held in co-tenancy. This requirement is fulfilled in the case before us. Partition is the process by which property held by two or more persons in co-tenancy is converted into estates in severalty and thereby divided among them, with the result that the land which before partition was held and enjoyed jointly is after partition held and enjoyed by the different parties according to the allotments made by Court. If partition is allowed in the case before us, the result will be that the land will be demarcated. The defendants will, after partition, become tenants under the plaintiffs in one specified half on the basis of their leases of 1894 and 1904, while in the other separated half they will be tenants under themselves. The position, consequently, will be that, after partition, the plaintiffs will be entitled to treat the defendants as their tenants in respect of a specific parcel of land instead of, as now, tenants in respect of one-half share of joint and undivided land. It is not difficult to imagine that after partition has been so effected, the plaintiffs may have advantages which they do not now enjoy; at the same time, during the continuance of the leases of 1894 and 1904, there will be no interference with the actual enjoyment of the land by the defendants, although they will be in occupation of one demarcated half as their own land and of the other half as tenants under the plaintiffs. We are consequently of opinion that the Courts below have rightly held that the suit is maintainable.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Promissory note, suit] on—Amount claimed not found to have been actually advanced—Suit, if to be decreed for amount found.

In a suit for recovery of the sum of Rs. 40 alleged to have been advanced on a hand-note with interest, the Judge found that the sum of Rs. 30, and not Rs. 40, was really advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant, but dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove the advance of Rs. 40 claimed:

Held, that judgment ought to have been entered in favour of the plaintiff for the amount found to have been actually advanced. [p. 469, col. 1.]

In the matter of Small Cause Court Suit No. 1156 of 1914 of the Court of Small Causes at Howrah.

FACTS.—One Benode Behari Patra brought a suit in the Small Cause Court of Howrah basing his claim exclusively on a hand-note, which he alleged the defendant had executed when he took a loan of Rs. 40 from him. The learned Small Cause Court Judge found that the execution of the hand-note was not proved; but he found from the oral evidence adduced by the plaintiff that Rs. 30 were paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. He also found from the evidence adduced before him that there was no stipulation for interest. So he dismissed the plaintiff's suit, on the ground that the plaintiff had brought the suit on an altered contract inasmuch as the hand-note upon which the plaintiff sued contained a stipulation to pay interest at 7 pies per rupee per month.

Against that the plaintiff moved the High Court and obtained a Rule.

Babu Debi Prosad Dutt, for the Petitioner.

Babu Manmotha Nath Ganguli, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and decree complained of should not be set aside. The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Small Cause Court to recover the sum of Rs. 40 which, it is alleged, had been advanced to him on a hand-note with interest. The learned Judge has found that the story of the hand-note is untrue. He also has found that the story of the defendant that he did not borrow any money is equally untrue. The real fact is, he says, that the plaintiff advanced to the defendant the sum of Rs. 30, and not Rs. 40, without any agreement as to the payment of interest. Speaking for myself, I am inclined to think that the learned Judge was wrong in finding that, because, so far as my experience goes, the people in this country who lend out money do not do so without any interest. People who carry on business of this sort always take good care for the stipulation of interest and, not uncommonly, interest at a very high rate. The learned Judge has found that the plaintiff advanced to the defendant the sum of Rs. 30 and he has adopted this course, namely, he has held that the plaintiff having claimed Rs. 40 with interest and having failed to prove the advance of Rs. 40, is entitled to recover nothing. Obviously this cannot be supported. The learned Judge ought to have entered judgment in favour of the plaintiff for the amount that he has found to have actually been advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant and that amount, according to his judgment, is Rs. 30 without any interest. I think we must enter judgment for the plaintiff for Rs. 30 with interest thereon at six pre cent. per annum from the date when the suit was dismissed by the learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes, that is, the 19th of December last, up to realization. The defendant must pay the costs of this Rule to the plaintiff. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur. As both parties have been guilty of adducing false evidence before the learned Judge of the Court below, we make no order as to the costs in that Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Privy Council appeal—Appeal dismissed for default by High Court—Decree affirming decree of Court below.

A decree of the High Court dismissing an appeal for default of prosecution is a decree affirming the decision of the Court below within the meaning of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 469, col. 2.]

Beni Rai v. Ram Lakhan Rai, 20 A. 367; A. W. N. (1898) 77, followed.

Application for appeal to the Privy Council.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The appeal to this Court was valued by the appellant at Rs. 200. It was from an order of the District Judge removing him from his post as trustee of certain trust property. The trust property is said to have an annual income of over Rs. 2,300. It is, therefore, clear that the decree or final order involves, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000 and over. But there are two other points for decision. The first one is whether the decree against which the applicant seeks to appeal does or does not affirm the decision of the Court below. The appeal to this Court was dismissed for default of prosecution and costs were awarded to the opposite party. A very similar question arose in Beni Rai v. Ram Lakhan Rai (1).

In that case it was held that the decree of this Court dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution was a decree affirming the decision of the Court below within the meaning of section 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The language of the rules in the present Code of Civil Procedure corresponding to section 596 has not been altered. The result of the order dismissing the appeal for default is practically an affirmance of the decision of the Court below. In this case, therefore, we have to see, whether the appeal which the applicant wishes to prosecute involves some substantial question of law. Six grounds of appeal are entered in the application. The first ground is the only one which relates to the order of this Court dismissing the appeal for default. That raises no question of law whatsoever. The remaining five all relate to questions which arose between the parties on the merits in the Court below. They do not relate to our order of dismissal for default, from which this application has arisen. Of these five grounds, only ground No. 4 has been indicated to us as involving any question of law. The question involved depends upon the findings of fact arrived at by the Court below and affirmed by our order of dismissal. These facts being against the appellant, we can see no substantial question of law which arises for decision.

In our opinion the applicant is not entitled to the certificate which he seeks. This application is rejected with costs.

Application rejected.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 20, scope of—Party to suit includes representative of such party—Power to add parties, to be exercised at hearing—Setting aside, application for—Abatement and substitution.

The words "any person who was a party to the suit" in Order XLI, rule 20, of the Code of Civil Procedure will, on a reasonable construction of the same, include the representative of such a party. [p. 470, col. 2.]

The power given to the Court to add parties is a power which is to be exercised at the hearing, for it is necessary that the Court should have before it all the circumstances of the case. [p. 470, col. 2.]

The mere fact that the representative of a deceased person happens to be a party already on the record in his own right, does not dispense with an application for setting aside an abatement and substitution [p. 471, col. 1.]

Rule obtained in Second Civil Appeal No. 3527 of 1913, preferred against the decree of the Additional District Judge of Chittagong passed in Title Appeal No. 812/448 of 1911, dated the 28th June 1913, affirming that of the Additional Munsif, Chittagong, passed in Title Suit No. 427/26 of 1911, dated the 15th August 1911.

Babus Joges Chandra Roy and Probodh Kumar Das, for the Petitioner.

Babus Ram Charan Mojumdar, Gopal Chandra Das and Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is based on a petition which comprises two forms of relief. The first is that Durgesh Nandusi Debi, the administratrix to the estate of Rajani Kanta Das, should be made a respondent. Now, this lady is the widow and representative of the deceased plaintiff, Rajani Kanta Das, but through, it is said, inadvertence, she was not made a party to this appeal. An application, however, has been made to us to make her a respondent under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 20, of the Code of Civil Procedure. I think that the words of that section "any person who was a party to the suit," etc., would, on a reasonable construction of the same, include the representative of such a party. But the difficulty in the way of the applicant is, as has been pointed out by the learned Pleader on behalf of the opposite party, that the power given to the Court to add parties is a power which is to be exercised at the hearing, and doubtless it is necessary that the Court should have before it all the circumstances of the case. Therefore, so far as this part of the Rule is concerned, the petition is premature and must be rejected. This, however, will not stand in the way of the applicant applying to the Court at the hearing by a petition under Order XLI, rule 20. The first part of this application is premature; and the only other matter which remains for us to consider is whether or not we should, as asked, make an entry in the record that the right of appeal survives to Rajani Kanta in respect of the estate of Mohendra Lal Das. Mohendra Lal Das died on the 9th April 1914, and six months from the date of his death expired on the 8th October 1914. So far as this plaintiff is concerned there has been an abatement, and the proper course appears to me is to apply, if the party is so advised, to set aside the order of abatement and to substitute in the place of Mohendra Lal Das Romesh Chandra Das, who is said to be his administrator. Now it is admitted that if a third party and not Romesh had been the administrator, it would have been necessary to make such an application and then to apply for substitution in the place of Mohendra Lal Das as his legal representative. But it has been submitted to us that the petitioner is excused from taking this course by reason of the fact that Romesh who is the administrator of Mohendra happens to be also on the record as plaintiff in his own capacity. This, however, does not appear to me to be a sufficient answer. It may well be, as is pointed out, that where property has been obtained by inheritance by some person who is already on the record, it is not necessary that any further steps should be taken. But the present case appears to me one in which the substitution is necessary. The mere fact that the representative of a deceased person happens to be a party already on the record in his own right, does not dispense with an application for setting aside an abatement and substitution.

This part, therefore, of the application also fails and the Rule must be discharged with costs, the hearing fee being assessed at one gold mohur.

Rule discharged.

Where the suit is for damages for breach of contract of partnership, the death of one partner subsequent to the suit does not affect the quantum of damages. [p. 472, col. 1]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Nellore, in Original Suit No. 4 of 1903.

FACTS.—Four persons entered into a partnership to carry on a trade for 10 years; three of them broke the contract in the very first year by refusing to go on with the partnership. The suit is by the other partner to recover damages for breach of contract. One of the partners died in the course of the suit. The District Court decreed the suit. The present appeal is against that decree.

Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar and T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Three points have been argued before us. We agree with the District Judge that there were no partners not joined and that the suit is not bad for non-joinder. We also agree with him that the contract was not rescinded by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to make stipulated payments.

Assuming that the defendant was liable in damages, it has been argued that one of the partners has since died and that as his death would in any case have put an end to the partnership, this fact must be considered in reduction of damages. Mr. Mayne in his Work on Damages lays down broadly that matters arising subsequently to the cause of action are inadmissible in reduction of damages and in Joyner v. Weeks (1), it was observed by Fry, L. J., that as a general rule where a cause of action exists, the damages must be estimated with regard to the time when the cause of action came into existence. Applying this principle we think that the subsequent death of one of the partners cannot be taken into account and that in the words of Wright, L. J., in the same case at page 33, "the suggested Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 186A, scope of—Denial of landlord's title, by tenants, effect of—Landlord, if can sue for recovery of possession.

Section 186A of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to a case brought by a landlord in a Civil Court for possession when the tenants thereof have successfully denied the landlord's title in a rent suit.

Khater Mistri v. Sadruddi Khan, 34 C. 922; Sheikh Miadhar v. Rajani Kanta Ray, 5 Ind. Cas. 708; 14 C. W. N. 339 and Ekabbar Sheikh v. Hara Bewah, 8 Ind. Cas. 660; 15 C. W. N. 335; 13 C. L. J. 1, referred to.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysack, for Babu Brajendra Kumar Chakravarty, for the Appellants.

Babu Samatul Chandra Dutt, for Babus Satis Chandra Mukherjee and Khetra Gopal Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are appeals by the defendants against the judgments of the learned District Judge of Bankura, dated the 22nd May 1911. The suit was brought by the landlords to recover possession of a certain property held by the defendants, on the ground that the tenants have successfully and without reasonable and probable cause denied the landlords' title in a certain rent suit. The only question is, do the tenants incur forfeiture by their doing so? The argument in this case has been based upon section 186A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. To whatever class of cases section 186A may apply, it does not apply to this case because no damages have been awarded. Therefore, the position of the plaintiffs is exactly the same as if that section did not exist. The decided cases on this point seem to be clear, notwithstanding the doubt that was thrown upon the case of Srimati Mallika Dassi v. Makham Lal Chowdhury (1). It is not necessary to go through all the cases which have gone the other way. It is sufficient to say that the cases of Khater Mistri v. Sadruddi Khan (2), Sheik Miadhar v. Rajani Kanta Ray (3) and Ekabbar Sheikh v. Hara Bewah (4) are all authorities for the proposition that a suit of this nature does lie. Thecase of Srimati Mallika Dassi v. Makham Lal Chowdhury (1) does not seem to be borne out by the late authorities. That being so, the only other question that has been raised is whether the present plaintiffs can maintain the suit. That clearly they can on findings of fact made by the learned District Judge in the lower Appellate Court. These findings are conclusive and binding upon us and we must accept them and hold that the plaintiffs in fact represent the whole body of landlords.

The present appeals, therefore, fail and must be dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 165—Suit for profits against co-sharer lambardar, maintainability of.

A co-sharer by becoming a lambardar does not cease to be a co-sharer, and, therefore, a suit brought against him by another co-sharer under section 165 of the Tenancy Act is not bad in law.

Chunno Lal v. Parbhu Dial, 6 Ind. Cas. 809; 7 A. L J. 526, referred to.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 10th December 1914.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Laghate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondent against the appellant for his share of the profits of a mahal for the years 1318, 1319 and 1320 Fasli. The respondent in his plaint described the appellant as a co-sharer and the suit as one brought under section 165 of the Tenancy Act, which provides for a suit by a co-sharer against another co-sharer for a settlement of accounts and for his share of the profits of a mahal. The appellant pleaded that he was the lambardar of the mahal and that the suit should have been brought against him not under section 165, but under section 164 of the Tenancy Act. The Assistant Collector fixed issues on the questions whether the appellant was a lambardar of the mahal and whether, if he was a lambardar, the suit could be maintained under section 165 of the Act. He found that the appellant was a lambardar and that the suit could not be maintained against him under section 165 of the Tenancy Act. He gave the respondent an opportunity of amending his plaint by describing the appellant as lambardar and the suit as one brought under section 164. The respondent declined to amend his plaint and the suit was dismissed. The respondent appealed. The District Judge reversed the decision of the Assistant Collector and remanded the suit for trial on the merits, on the ground that the appellant had not by becoming a lambardar ceased to be a co-sharer, and there was no reason why the respondent should not have framed his suit under section 165. The learned Judge was of opinion that the description of the suit was a minor matter and that the suit should have been tried out. In this appeal it is contended that a suit under section 165 is a suit of a different description from a suit under section 164 and we were referred to the decision of this Court in Chunno Lal v. Parbhu Dial (1). Where a defendant is a lambardar, as in a suit under section 164, he is entitled to deduct his haq-lambardari and the village and other expenses; whereas a co-sharer defendant in a suit under section 165 is not entitled to such deductions. The appellant in the present case pleaded and proved that he was a lambardar and on that account entitled to deduct haq-lambardari and village and other expenses. That was merely a question of account which the Assistant Collector could have disposed of. The respondent was perhaps badly advised in declining to meet the Assistant Collector's wishes by amending his plaint. But as an amendment was not really necessary, it seems to us that the Assistant Collector was wrong in dismissing the suit. He ought to have tried out the suit and given the appellant credit for the haq-lambardari and village and other expenses. It is possible that the respondent was afraid that if he amended the plaint, he would be told that the suit had become one of a different character and, therefore, must be dismissed. The result might be that the respondent's claim for profits for one year would be barred by limitation. In my opinion the District Judge was right in remanding this case for trial on the merits and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

PIGGOTT, J.—I concur.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 11—Non-occupancy tenant—Theka of proprietary share taken by him—Tenancy, right of, if in suspense—Fresh period necessary.

Where a year to year tenant remained in occupation for a number of years but before the acquisition of occupancy rights, took a theka of the proprietary rights:

Held, that to acquire occupancy rights he could not count the period before the theka, but that he must complete fresh twelve years after the cessation of the theka.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner of the Rohilkhand Division, dated the 24th July 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Bijnor District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M. (March 6th, 1915.)—The question on issue is clearly stated in the Commissioner's order. and what has to be decided is whether respondent's right of tenancy was in suspense while he held part of the village as thekadar and revived when the theka ceased, or whether the right of tenancy lapsed and a new period of tenancy began after the cessation of the theka.

As I read section 12 of the Tenancy Act, the latter is the correct interpretation of the law, and the period of 12 years for acquisition of occupancy rights did not begin to run until respondent ceased to be a thekadar holding under section 11 (b).

I can read nothing into section 12 to justify any other interpretation of the law.

If respondent had acquired occupancy rights before he took the theka, the circumstances would be different, but in this case he had admittedly not done so.

I would, therefore, set aside the Commissioner's order and restoring the order of the Assistant Collector give appellant his costs in all Courts.

HOLMS, S. M.—I quite agree. There must be continuous holding as a tenant for 12 years for the acquisition of a right of occupancy under section 11.

Where a Court receiving an application for the appraisement of produce ordered the kurk amin to appraise the crops without issuing to the opposite party the notice required by section 32 (1) of the Oudh Rent Act:

Held, that the order of appraisement was illegal and consequently the award by the amin was null and void.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—(March 31*st*, 1915.) —I am unable to agree with the Commissioner in this case. It is admitted that when an application was received from the respondent for 'kankoot' under section 31, the Court failed to issue the notice required by section 32 (1) to the other party, and ordered the kurk amin to appraise the mohwa crop. As the order for appraisement was illegal, I think that the award by the amin under section 32 (2) should also have been held to be null and void.

The inquiry and decision as to the prevailing custom of "kankoot" or "bastai" was clearly irregular.

I would quash the whole proceedings ab initio, making parties bear their own costs.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar and T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I think that in the circumstances the lower Court was justified with reference to Order XXXIX, rule 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure in paying out the money deposited by the 1st defendant.

The only objection to its procedure, which requires full consideration, is that based on its failure to demand security from the next friends of the minor 2nd plaintiff and 6th defendant.

The 2nd plaintiff's guardian, the 1st plaintiff, resists this objection on the ground that he was entitled to receive the money, because it belonged, not to the 2nd plaintiff, but to the joint family composed of the 2nd plaintiff and himself as managing member. It is no doubt true that the plaintiffs claimed partition in their plaint as between their branch of the family and other members of it; and Harihar Pershad Singh v. Mathura Lal (1) supports their contention. But on the other hand, a later decision of the Privy Council, Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (2), decides that a managing member, who is also a next friend, can do nothing in the former capacity for which the leave of the Court would be required, if he acted in the latter. Following the later authority, I hold that the lower Court, in paying out to the 1st plaintiff on 2nd plaintiff's behalf without security, acted without jurisdiction.

In the 6th defendant's case the question is whether his guardian ad litem, to whom payment was made without security, was exempt from the obligation to give it under Order XXXII, rule 6 (2), of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that he was appointed guardian of the 6th defendant's property by the latter's father's Will. Following Kanakasabai Mudaliar v. Ponnusami Mudaliar (3) and Budhi Lal v. Morarji (4), I must hold that he has not been appointed guardian by competent authority and that he should, therefore, have been called on for security.

The lower Court's orders must be set aside. The next friends of the 2nd plaintiff and the guardian ad litem of the 6th defendant must give security for what they have drawn to the satisfaction of the lower Court within 15 days from the receipt by it of this order and must give such security before drawing any further sums. If security is not given as directed above, the next friend and guardian must pay back the money. They must pay the 1st defendant's costs of these petitions.

Section 153A of the Bengal Tenancy Act requires that no application to set aside an ex parte decree in a suit between a landlord and tenant as such shall be admitted, unless the applicant has, at or before the time when the application is admitted, deposited in the Court to which the application is presented, the amount, if any, which he admits to be due from him to the decree-holder. Babu Satish Chandra Chowdhury, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order made under rule 13 of Order IX of the Code of Civil Procedure. The petitioner sued the opposite party and four other persons for recovery of arrears of rent. The opposite party, who was the first defendant, alone entered appearance and filed a written statement. On the day of trial, however, no one appeared on his behalf. The result was that an ex parte decree for rent was made against him on the 15th January 1914. On the 25th January, he made an application to the Court to set aside the ex parte decree. That application was granted on the 27th September 1914. The validity of this order is now challenged on two grounds, namely, first, that the Court was not competent to entertain the application under rule 13 of Order IX of the Code of 1908, inasmuch as the requirements of section 153A of the Bengal Tenancy Act were not fulfilled; and, secondly, that the Court was bound to dismiss the application as barred by limitation under Article 164 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act.

As regards the first ground, we are of opinion that it cannot possibly be maintained. Section 153A requires that no application to set aside an ex parte decree in a suit between a landlord and tenant as such shall be admitted, unless the applicant has, at or before the time when the application is admitted, deposited in the Court to which the application is presented the amount, if any, which he admits to be due from him to the decree-holder. The petitioner contends that the defendant admitted that rent was due from him to the plaintiff and yet did not make the requisite deposit. To test the validity of this contention, we must examine the plaint and written statement. The plaintiff claimed rent in respect of several parcels of land within definite boundaries, said to cover an area of 5 pakis and alleged to have been held by the defendant under him at an annual rent of Rs. 3-10. The defendant pleaded that the land mentioned, in the plaint constituted a portion only of his holding; he appended to the written statement a list of the parcels of land held by him within the boundaries mentioned and asserted that he held all these lands as one holding at an annual rent of Rs. 7-12. He further stated that he had always been ready and willing to pay the rent lawfully payable by him. Under these circumstances, we have to determine whether the defendant may be said to have admitted that rent was due from him to the plaintiff within the meaning of clause (a) of section 153A. We are of opinion that the question must be answered in the negative. The defence in substance was that the defendant did not hold the holding alleged by the plaintiff and that he was liable in respect of rent of a different holding. That does not constitute an admission that rent is due from him to the plaintiff; the admission contemplated by the Legislature is an admission that rent is due in respect of the holding for which the suit has been instituted. It is further clear that if the contention of the plaintiff is well-founded, the written statement itself should not have been accepted under section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; it is significant that no such objection was taken by the plaintiff to the reception of the written statement. In our opinion, it is plain that the requirements of section 153A have been fulfilled; the defendant was not bound to make any deposit, because he did not admit that any money was due from him to the plaintiff in respect of the holding for which rent was claimed. The first contention consequently fails.

As regards the second ground, it is plain that the application is, on the face of it, barred by limitation. Article 164 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act provides that an application by a defendant for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte may be made within thirty days from the date of the decree or, where summons was not duly served, when the applicant had knowledge of the decree. In this case, the summons was duly served. Consequently, the defendant was bound to make his application within 30 days from the 15th January 1914. This he did not do. It was not competent to the Court to extend the time under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, nor was any ground of fraud established so as to bring the case within the scope of section 18. On behalf of the respondent, however, it has been urged that this point was not taken before the Court below and should not now be entertained. It is conceded on behalf of the petitioner that the point was not brought to the notice of the Court, but under section 3 of the Indian Limitation Act it was obligatory upon the Court to dismiss the application, although limitation was not set up as a defence, [Balaram v. Mangta Das (1)]. The position, then, is that the Court has entertained an application which, on the face of it, was barred by limitation and has failed to adjudicate upon the question of limitation. Consequently, as ruled by this Court in the case of Kailash v. Bissonath (2), it is open to this Court to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under section 115 of the Code, although it might not have been open to the Court to interfere if the Court below had considered the question of limitation and decided it erroneously, as ruled in the cases of Sundar Singh v. Doru Shankar (3) and Ramgopal v. Joharmall (4). We hold accordingly that the Court below acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction in granting relief without adjudication of the question of limitation, on an application which, on the face of it, was barred by limitation.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order of the Court below discharged. As the ground on which the petitioner succeeds, was not taken in the Court below, each party will pay his own costs throughout these proceedings.

Rule made absolute.

North-Western Provinces Rent Act (XVIII of 1873)—Compensation—Improvements—Thekadar, whether a tenant—Thekadar's right to make improvements and claim compensation.

The appellant held certain land as a thekadar under a lease of 1859, which provided that he should make bandhis and establish hamlets. The zemindar brought the present suit for ejectment and the thekadar-appellant claimed compensation for improvements made by him before 1880:

Held, that the claim was governed by the provisions of N. W. Provinces Rent Act XVIII of 1873, which allowed compensation for improvements to a tenant, but did not define the term 'tenant' and that it not being clear whether a 'thekadar' was entitled to get compensation under that section, his claim must be dismissed. [p. 479, col. 1.]

Ablakh Rai v. Salim Ahmad Khan, 2 A. 437, Raj Bahadar v. Birmha Singh, 3 A. 85, Abdul Aziz v. Wali Khan 1 A. 338, referred to.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Jhansi Division, dated the 11th May 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Banda District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(February 26th, 1915.)—The appellant holds the land in dispute under a lease of 1859 A. D., in which it is provided that he should make bandhis and establish hamlets. The improvements in respect of which compensation was claimed were all made in 1880 or before, and no compensation is claimed for any improvements made afterwards. At this time Act XII of 1881 was not in force under which a thekadar has no right to get compensation for improvements. Act XVIII of 1873 was in force which provides for a tenant getting compensasion for improvements but does not define the term 'tenant'. It is not quite clear whether a thekadar could get compensation for improvements, under Act XVIII of 1873. In these circumstances I doubt if section 2 (3) of the present Tenancy Act is applicable. The only question which is doubtful is whether a thekadar could get compensation under Act

XVIII of 1873—a point as to which neither party quotes any rulings or authorities. They will get a fortnight in which to file written arguments referring me to rulings. In the event of my deciding that such compensation was payable under Act XVIII of 1873, I would then set aside the order of the Commissioner and direct him to hear the appeal solely on the remaining issue which he has not decided, the amount of the compensation to be awarded. It is admitted by the respondent that the present nikasi is some Rs. 500 and the present rent Rs. 210 and he alleges, what the appellant denies, that a hundred bighas as well was cultivated as khudkasht. The profits are then very small in consideration of the large expenditure and the Commissioner in his remarks, that they have had 33 years' benefit of their improvements, does not seem to have adverted to the very small profit they have made.

HOLMS, S. M.—I have perused the written arguments put in, and considered the rulings referred to. In Ablakh Rai v. Salim Ahmad Khan (1), referred to by appellant, the question of jurisdiction was not raised, while in Raj Bahadur v. Birmha Singh (2), the question of whether the word "tenant" in the improvement sections included a thekadar was not considered.

On the other side the Full Bench ruling, reported as Abdul Aziz v. Wali Khan (3) is to the point. There was a difference of opinion, but three Judges against two held that for most purposes "thekadars" should be held to be tenants under Act XVIII of 1873. I doubt, however, if thekadars were entitled under that Act to get compensation for improvements. This being so, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where a decree-holder fails to annex to the application for execution of his decree an inventory of the property to be attached with a reasonably accurate description of the same, as required by Order XXI, rule 12, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the application is not in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, and cannot save limitation when it is dismissed for non-compliance with an order for amendment. [p. 480, cols. 1 & 2.]

Hira Lal v. Dulari Kuar, A. W. N. (1892) 3; Mangal Sen v. Baldeo Pershad, A. W. N. (1892) 70, referred to.

Execution first appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh, dated the 27th June 1914.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Peare Lal Banerjee and Iybal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the representatives of one Ali Bakhsh Khan deceased, who obtained a decree on July 10th, 1906, against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh dismissing the appellants' application for execution on the ground that it was barred by limitation. The decree as already stated was passed on July 10th, 1906. The first application for execution was made in September 1909 and was struck off after the decree had been partly satisfied. The second application for execution was made on August 24th, 1910, and was ultimately struck off on March 24th, 1911. For the purposes of this appeal it may be assumed that the application of August 24th, 1910 was an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution of the decree. The third application for execution was made on August 23rd, 1912, and was struck off on September 6th, 1913, the decree-holder having failed to comply with the order of the Court requiring him to make certain amendments in the application. The fourth application for execution was made on June 4th, 1914, and it is against the order of the Court dismissing the fourth application that this appeal has been brought. The question for decision in the appeal is whether the third application of August 23rd, 1913, was an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution of the decree. When the application was presented, the office reported that there were many mistakes in columns 6, 7 and 8 of the application. It was also noticed that the prayer for relief was irregular. The prayer was that by means of attachment and sale of the property of the judgment-debtor, a list of which would be filed afterwards, the balance of the decree together with costs of the execution proceedings might be recovered. It has been held in many cases that it is not every defect or mistake in an application for execution which obliges the Court to hold that the application is not one made in accordance with law. Speaking generally, the Courts have set themselves to inquire whether an application in question is in substantial compliance with law. For the purposes of this appeal we may disregard the mistakes and defects in columns 6, 7 and 8 of the application. But the failure of the decree-holder to annex to the application an inventory of the property to be attached with a reasonably accurate description of the same as required by Order XXI, rule 12, Civil Procedure Code, stands on a different footing. In Hira Lal v. Dulari Kuar (1) this Court held that an application for attachment of immoveable property in execution of a decree which did not contain the particulars required by section 237 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, was not an application in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 179, Schedule II, of the Limitation Act of 1877 and in Mangal Sen v. Baldeo Prasad (2), Mahmood, J., held that an application for execution of a decree by attachment of moveable property of the judgment-debtor unaccompanied by an inventory of the property sought to be attached was not an application in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 179, Schedule II, of the Limitation Act of 1877. The learned Vakil for the appellants has been unable to refer us to any case in which these decisions have been disapproved. But he has referred us to several cases in which defective applications for execution have been amended beyond limitation and the Courts have held that the amendment related back to the date of the application. Such cases have no bearing on the present appeal. Here although the decree-holder was given time to amend his application, he did not amend it, and it is impossible for us some years afterwards to allow him to amend an application which was struck off on account of his failure to comply with the order of the Court requiring him to amend it. We must follow the decisions of this Court reported in the Weekly Notes for 1892, and hold that the application for execution put in on August 23rd, 1913, was not an application in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act of 1908 which governs the present case. If the application of 1913 is put out of the way, the present application of June 1914 is clearly barred by limitation as held by the Court below. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Excisable articles, sale of—Liquor, license to sell—Transfer—Partnership, terms of—Legality—Findings of fact.

A partnership for the sale of excisable articles is not illegal. [p. 481, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 31st of July 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, first Court, Krishnagar, dated the 14th of September 1911.

Babu Baranashibasi Mukherjee, for the Appellant.

Babu Shiba Prosanna Bhattacharjya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the licensee of a country liquor shop. His son is the licensee of an imported liquor shop. He brought a suit against the defendant, now appellant, for accounts alleging that the defendant was his servant or karmachari. In the alternative he asked that if the defendant was found to be a partner, the partnership should be dissolved and an account in respect of the partnership taken.

The defendant appeared and said that he was a partner, and the learned Munsif found that he was a partner to the extent of 8 annas and he passed a decree accordingly.

Then the plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Judge and the learned Judge held that the defendant could not be a partner, because the license of a liquor shop is a personal privilege and the licensee cannot take any one as a partner into the business. He also held that as the license for the imported liquor shop stood in the name of plaintiff's son, the plaintiff could proceed with the suit only with regard to the country liquor shop. Having found that the defendant could not be a partner, he proceeded to ascertain what he really was. He came to the conclusion that he was not an ordinary servant but that he was an agent and he ordered that he should render an account.

The defendant has appealed to this Court and it is urged on his behalf that the District Judge is wrong in finding that the defendant cannot lawfully be a partner, and secondly, that the finding as to the defendant being an agent is against the admitted facts on the record, and thirdly, that the subject of defendant's status was not argued before the lower Court. With regard to the first point the learned District Judge quotes two cases, Rakhal Chandra Shah v. Damodar Shaha (1) and Behari Lal Shah v. Jagodish Chunder Shaha (2).

The former of these cases came before this Court in its revisional criminal jurisdiction, and I do not think it lays down any principle useful to the present case. In the second case the licensee sold his stock in trade to another person, with the intention that the transferee should carry on the business of selling liquor without obtaining a license. The agreement was held to be void. I do not think it follows from this decision, or from the prohibition contained in the Act against transferring, sub-letting and assigning, that a partnership in any form for the sale of excisable articles is illegal. But whether the learned Judge's view as to the legality of partnership is right or wrong, I think he was clearly wrong in arguing that because defendant could not legally be a partner, he must stand in some other relation to the plaintiff. The Judge should have ascertained whether the defendant was a partner in fact, and if so, what was the legal consequence. This brings me to the second and third points.

With regard to the status of the defendant, it appears from the order sheet that the learned District Judge only heard arguments on the question of law and after that the case did not come up again for hearing.

This was an error and the parties should have been allowed an opportunity of setting before the Court their arguments as to the true relation between the plaintiff and defendant.

The view I take is this that the lower Appellate Court should first of all determine the relation which really existed between the parties. If it is found that they were partners, it will be for the Court to determine whether the terms of the partnership were such as to make it illegal, if they were, then it would follow from the principle laid down in the case of Behari Lal Shah v. Jagodish Chunder Shaha (2) that the agreement between them was one upon which the plaintiff could not sue.

I, therefore, set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case, for the appeal to be heard again in the light of these remarks.

Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

NALLAPPAH RAMUNNI MENON AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Fraud, plea of—Issues—Allegations, mere, not sufficient.

No man ought to be found guilty of fraud and collusion of a particularly gross kind of fraud unless it is clearly and unambiguously alleged and put in issue against him. [p. 483, col. 1.]

Therefore, in a suit upon an indemnity bond the plea that the damnification suffered by the plaintiff is the result of his negligent and fraudulent conduct in the previous litigation ought to be in issue against him in clear terms; it is not enough that there are allegations in the written statement from which a plea of this kind could be spun out. The plea should be clearly and distinctly raised. [p. 483, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 756 of 1911, preferred against that of the Subordinate Judge of Calicut, in Original Suit No. 16 of 1910.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs sued to recover moneys due under an indemnity bond executed by two of the senior ladies of a Malabar tarwad. There having been some dispute as to who was karnavan of the tarwad and whether the tarwad was divided or undivided, plaintiffs who had to pay moneys to the 5th and 10th defendants, that is, to the two ladies, paid moneys to the 5th defendant and her near male relations, on their representation that they were the sole persons entitled to receive the same, and on their executing an indemnity bond agreeing to indemnify the plaintiffs against any loss that they might sustain if the other branch claimed any portion of the moneys that was paid. That event happened and the 10th defendant brought a suit to recover the whole amount and got a decree. The present suit was instituted to recover the said amount and costs under the indemnity bond. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiffs did not properly conduct the suit brought by the 10th defendant and that there was fraud and collusion. Thereupon the plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants, contended that (1) in a suit based on an indemnity bond it was no defence in law that the plaintiffs did not conduct the previous suit properly; (2) there was no allegation of fraud or collusion in the written statement in the previous suit nor any issue raised.

Mr. K. P. Govinda Menon, for the Respondents, contended that (1) evidence was let in as regards fraud and the finding of fraud was a question of fact with which the High Court had no power to interfere in second appeal; (2) in any event the lower Appellate Court should be directed to frame a new issue and try the question.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case brought their action upon a bond of indemnity dated the 10th February 1902 and executed by the 1st defendant, the 2nd defendant, the 3rd defendant, the 6th defendant and the deceased 5th defendant, who also represented the 4th, 7th and 8th defendants. The material facts, when disentangled from the mass of transactions between the parties, are very simple. The defendants Nos. 1 to 8 formed one branch, and the defendants Nos. 9 to 16 the other, of what was originally one common tarwad. No one was or is agreed as to how far at the times material to this suit the two branches were separate entities as regards the making of contracts or the holding of property. The 1st defendant was certainly the karnavan or manager of the branch to which he belonged, and he claimed to be the karnavan of the whole tarwad comprising both branches; the uncertainty which existed as to the amount of community between the two branches, of course, equally attached to his claim to be their common karnavan. The plaintiffs owed Rs. 1,000 to the whole body of persons comprising the defendants; the same doubt again arising as to whether it was a debt to them as one whole tarwad, or as a joint debt to the two branches. They owed it under the terms of a hypothecation bond in which the contracting parties were themselves of the one part and the 5th and 10th defendants of the other, they being the senior women, or karnavastris, of their respective branches. In 1902, the appellants paid the Rs. 1,000 to the first defendant as representing the group comprised of defendants Nos. 1 to 8 and took from them the document on which they now sue, which acknowledges the receipt of the money and proceeds to indemnify them against any loss they might suffer in consequence of any claim made or suit brought against them in respect of the same sum by the 10th defendant. In due course the event happened against which the parties had sought to provide; and the 10th defendant brought an action against the appellants (Original Suit No. 453 of 1904 on the file of the Tirur Munsif's Court) claiming the whole principal sum of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 700 for interest. For reasons not apparent to this Court, she succeeded; judgment passed against the appellants for Rs. 1,700 and costs; and they were compelled to pay that sum under process of law. Having paid it, they not unnaturally turned to those who had indemnified them against the exact event which had happened; and as they declined to pay, they brought this suit against them. Their action was dismissed in both the Courts below, on the ground that the 10th defendant succeeded in her action against them owing to their negligence and collusion. We may say at once that even if we thought it open to the defendants to invite such a finding, we should set aside the present judgment and order a new trial. Some of the reasons put forward for finding the appellants negligent were puerile, as for instance that they did not join the 1st defendant as a party, and did not appeal, which they were under no possible obligation to do. Moreover both Courts below utterly failed to distinguish between two radically distinct conceptions as negligence and fraud, and seem to treat them almost as convertible terms. But in this case we think we ought to go further. It is a fundamental principle of law that no man ought to be found guilty of fraud and collusion of a particularly gross kind of fraud, unless it is clearly and unambiguously alleged and put in issue against him. In the present suit, the 1st defendant who, one would suppose to be the person chiefly interested, did not allege collusion at all. The defendants Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6 have the following simple sentence in their written statement: "It was owing to the plaintiff's neglect and collusion that they failed" in the suit in question. Then follow certain statements which appear to be by way of particulars, and which, if they are anything at all, are particulars of negligence; one of them being the remarkable allegation that the appellants failed to avoid payment under the decree of the Court. But of any expansion of the bald statement that the plaintiffs' failure was owing to their collusion, there is not a trace. It was urged before us that to enforce rules of pleading strictly in India would be impracticable and would lead to injustice. While this may be true in some cases, we doubt greatly whether the interests of justice would be furthered by allowing vague and unspecified allegations of fraud to be gone into. But it is unnecessary to discuss this; the matter does not stop there. Issues were framed in this case, and there are not less than 13 of them; not one raises the question of collusion in these proceedings, even vaguely. We think that that is conclusive and that the Courts below ought to have refused to allow the defendants to raise the issue at the hearing. The appeal must be allowed with costs throughout as against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 6 and against the representatives of deceased 8th defendant (and against the representatives of deceased 5th defendant) and the appellants must have a decree against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 6 and against the assets of deceased 5th defendant for (1) Rs. 1,700, (2) the costs they were ordered to pay the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 453 of 1904 on the file of the Tirur Munsif's Court, (3) the costs incurred by them in defending that suit and (4) their costs in this suit throughout. Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar wisely abstains from pressing for a decree against defendants Nos. 9 to 16; so that the appeal as regards them fails and is dismissed. The only question that arises is with regard to their costs. They have been treated throughout as little more than formal parties, and have not sought to take any part in the argument on the merits; nor indeed could they with decency support a plea of collusion on the part of one of their members. Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar suggests that they should not receive more costs than they could have received had his appeal wholly failed. That is probably correct, but such an order gives rise to great trouble on taxation and we think justice will be done if the appellants are ordered to pay to defendants Nos. 9 to 16 one-eighth of the sum they are adjudged entitled to recover as costs from defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 6.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 158, 177 (c)—Resumption, suit for—Muafidar pleading proprietary title—Decision—Appeal—Jurisdiction.

Where in a suit for resumption the defence was that the muafidar had acquired proprietary rights by virtue of his and his predecessors-in-interest having been in possession for 50 years and of there having been two successors to the original grantee:

Held, that the question being one of proprietary title, an appeal from the decision of the Revenue Court lays to the District Judge.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 21st October 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Farrukhabad District, in the a of resumption of rent-free grant.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(September 30th, 1914.)—Two questions are involved in this case: first, whether the muafi in question was resumable at the pleasure of the zemindar, second, whether the muafidar and his predecessor-in-interest had been in possession for fifty years and two successors to the original grantee. It is urged before me that the latter question is one of proprietary title and the ruling of the High Court in Sunder Singh v. Collector of Shahjahanpur (1) is cited. It is contended, therefore, that the Commissioner had no power to hear the appeal which lay to the District Judge and his decision was, therefore, ultra vires. No objection was taken in the Commissioner's Court to this effect. The appellant awaited the Commissioner's decision and when it was against him, asks that the appeal should be re-heard in the District Judge's Court. Unfair as it may seem to be, the objection must, I think, be sustained. The High Court is the supreme authority on a question of jurisdiction and it has been, not only in the case cited, but in other cases held that such appeals lie on the civil side. Personally, I consider that it was not the intention of the Legislature that the appeal should lie so. It was probably overlooked that the wording of section 158 was such as to lead to the appeal being transferred to the District Judge. The reasons for which I think it was not the intention of the Legislature to transfer such appeals are two. First, appeals are transferred from the Revenue Courts to the Civil Courts in cases in which it is possible that there may be a conflict of jurisdiction and in which the finding of a Revenue Court on an issue regarding proprietary right could be upset in a Civil Court as they now are in Oudh. This was not such a case. There was no question of pre-existing proprietary rights. The question whether a muafidar should, by virtue of a certain length of possession, be deemed to be a proprietor is one which can only arise in a suit for resumption and can, therefore, only be decided in the Revenue Courts. There was for decision only a simple question of fact, whether the muafi was of fifty years' standing and had been held by two successors to the original grantee. It was not, in the sense contemplated by section 177, a question of proprietary title.

The second reason is that it seems obvious that the Legislature never intended that the Civil Courts should fix rent or revenue.

It is undeniable, however, that the law is now so worded as to support the High Court decision, and in any case the decision of the High Court must be considered final on a question of jurisdiction.

I am, therefore, compelled to allow this appeal, reverse the decision of the Commissioner and direct that the memorandum of appeal be returned by the Commissioner for presentation to the District Judge.

TWEEDY, J. M.—I concur.

Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz, construction of—Rights inter se—Preferential claim.

The wajib-ul-arz of 1833 of a village recorded the mere fact that the co-sharers had a right of pre-emption.

The wajib-ul-araiz of 1860 and 1869 recorded that a near co-sharer had a right of pre-emption, after him the co-sharer in the same thok and after him the co-sharers in other thoks:

Held, that the co-sharer in the same thok as the vendor had a preferential claim as against the vendee who was a co-sharer in a different thok.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 27th of April 1914.

Mr. Haribans Sahai and Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. L. Agarwala and Lakshmi Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff is a co-sharer in the same thok as the vendor. The defendants-vendees are co-sharers but in a different thok. The plaintiff adduced in evidence an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 and from that of 1860 and 1869. The wajib-ul-arz of 1833 records the mere fact that the co-sharers have a right of pre-emption. The wajib-ul-arz of 1860 records that there is a right of pre-emption and that the near co-sharer has a right, and after him the co-sharer in the thok, and after him co-sharers in other thoks. The wajib-ul-arz of 1869, in our opinion, is identical with the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1860, though inslightly different language. It is to be pointed out that both sides admit that some custom of pre-emption prevails in the village. The only question is whether it is an incident of the custom that the plaintiff as a co-sharer in the same thok as the vendor has a preferential right over the vendee who is a co-sharer in another thok. The Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It seems to us that the evidence is all the one way and there was no rebutting evidence. The only possible ground upon which it could be said that the plaintiff had no right was because the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 did not expressly record a right of co-sharers inter se. There is nothing necessarily inconsistent between the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 and that of the entry in the wajib-ul-araiz of 1860 and 1869. A Record of a Right of pre-emption amongst co-sharers does not exclude the possibility of there being rights inter se. In the present case we have the villagers in a village in which admittedly a custom existed twice recording the details of the right, first in 1860 and subsequently in 1869. In our opinion under the circumstances of this case the Court below was bound to have decreed the plaintiff's claim. With regard to the consideration, the first Court decided that the full amount had been paid and that evidence adduced by the plaintiff to show that the money had been given back was absolutely worthless. The lower Court did not decide this issue and we have accordingly considered the matter ourselves, and we think that the finding of the Court of first instance ought to be upheld. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and give the plaintiff a decree for pre-emption conditional upon payment of the sum of Rs. 1,499 within three months from this date. If the money is paid within the time, the plaintiff will have his costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale. If the money is not paid, the suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to come to a different conclusion from that of a Magistrate under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, but it has no right to sit in judgment over the finding of fact arrived at by the Magistrate, by a review of the evidence produced before the latter. [p. 486, col. 2.]

Poverty or insolvency of the defendant is no ground for the appointment of a Receiver unless there be in addition some danger to the estate. [p. 488, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Interlocutory Appeal No. 1918 of 1914, in Original Suit No. 43 of 1913.

The Advocate-General and Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The late Maharaja Sivaji of Tanjore died in 1855. The dispute in the present case relates to the properties which were endowed to certain temples by the late Rajah and to certain private properties belonging to the estate of the late Rani. The senior Rani, Kamakshi Boyi, succeeded to what is known as the Palace Estate as well as the temple properties. The defendants in this case claimed to be the sons of the adopted son of Rajah Sivaji. The plaintiffs allege that they are sons of the deceased Maharajah "by ladies known as his sword wives." The last of the Ranis, Muthu Sri Teejamba Boyi Saheba, died on the 3rd May 1912. The case for the plaintiffs is that they are entitled to succeed to the management of the devasthanams and to enjoy the private properties in preference to the defendants, the validity of whose father's adoption they deny. The plaintiffs applied to the Subordinate Judge for the appointment of a Receiver pending the disposal of the suit. He granted their prayer. The defendants have preferred this appeal.

A large number of charges alleging mismanagement, malversation, waste, etc., were preferred against the defendants. Apparently before the Subordinate Judge only six of these charges were pressed for decision. He found four of them proved, and on the strength of this finding, made the order for the appointment of a Receiver.

Before dealing with the charges seriatim, it is necessary to mention that immediately on the death of the last Rani, disputes regarding the possession of the properties arose between the plaintiffs on one hand and the defendants on the other. On the 13th of August 1912 the Sub-Divisional Magistrate held that the possession of the defendants should be "maintained", and directed the plaintiffs to establish their claim in a civil suit. This present suit was instituted as a result of that adjudication by the Magistrate. The Subordinate Judge criticises at considerable length the conclusion of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate regarding possession. Although it is open to a Civil Court to come to a different conclusion from the Magistrate on materials placed before it, the Judge has no right to sit in judgment over the findings of fact the Magistrate has arrived at, by a review of the evidence produced in the Magisterial proceedings. The Subordinate Judge is not hearing an appeal from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The conclusion of the Magistrate, five months after the death of the late Rani, was that defendants had been in possession of the properties and that they should be maintained in that possession. He found against the plaintiffs' contention that they were peacefully in possession.

The question for consideration, therefore, is, whether the evidence let in justifies the order of the Subordinate Judge directing the appointment of a Receiver. No oral evidence was let in and the Court below acted solely on the affidavits filed by both the parties.

The first charge which the Subordinate Judge holds to have been proved is dealt with by him in paragraph 9 of the judgment. The charge relates to the lease of Mariyambalpuram village for 20 years at the rate of Rs. 15 per pangu. It was contended that having regard to the rise in the price of paddy and seeing that under Exhibit G the parties were entitled to revert to the amani system after the termination of that lease, the rate of rent secured under the new lease is highly detrimental to the interests of the devasthanams. Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, who has worked out the figures with reference to the deductions to be made under the earlier lease-deed, Exhibit G, has shown that the rate secured under the new lease compares favourably with what was payable under Exhibit G. The Subordinate Judge lays considerable stress on the fact that the sale price of paddy is at the rate of Rs. 2 per kalam. He has not paid sufficient attention to the decision of the Revenue Officer in Exhibit VIII, to the effect that the commutation rate in one of the temple villages is Rs. 1-4-0 per kalam. The market rate is different from the commutation rate which the tenants have to pay under the Estates Land Act. A certain average is arrived at in the later case in fixing the commutation rate, and it is upon that standard that the rent due from tenants has to be recovered. It is true that the defendants have with unseemly haste entered into leases for a long period of time. It is pointed out that under the previous lease the period was 20 years and that generally the temple properties are leased out for a considerable length of time. It may be an error of judgment to grant long leases where the tendency of prices is to rise higher year after year. But that is no ground for considering that the defendants have wilfully surrendered rights belonging to the devasthanams. We must hold that this charge has not been proved against the defendants.

The next charge is dealt with by the Subordinate Judge in paragraphs 10 and 11 of his judgment. The previous lease secures 65 kalams of paddy per veli in respect of the village of Kodikalur. The present lease for 20 years secures Rs. 80 per veli. At the commutation rate mentioned in Exhibit VIII this would not be an unfair rent. Here again the fact that the lease covers a long period is a matter for comment against the defendants. As against this, it is stated that the tenants were very refractory, that in faslis 1309, 1310 and 1311 the late Rani was able to collect only at the rate of Rs. 7 per veli, that as a result of that there were legal proceedings under the Estates Land Act, and that in order there may be peace in the village and the amount may be recovered without litigation, the defendants were obliged to give a long lease at the rate already mentioned. We cannot say that this explanation is unsatisfactory. Where the tenants have been long on the land and have been accustomed to a particular rate of rent, the landlord will not be acting injudiciously in continuing that rate, if the result of his endeavours to impose a higher rate is likely to lead to litigation. We must hold that this charge is not substantiated against the defendants.

The Subordinate Judge held that the charges relating to the Thirupanthurithi village and Bommani Thottam were not proved. We see no reason to differ from him. In the second case especially, the opinion of a leading legal practitioner was obtained before the transaction was entered into, and we cannot say that the defendants acted recklessly in this matter.

The third charge which the Subordinate Judge held to have been proved, relates to Nalladi village. There are two complaints. One is that the sale of paddy to Gopalasawmi Chetty was at the rate of Rs. 1-12-6 per kalam, whereas the ruling price in the district was Rs. 2-9-0. The second complaint is that the defendants were not justified in allowing a commission of six pies per kalam to the tenant purchaser. There is room for doubt whether the purchaser was the tenant who was bound to measure the paddy to the devasthanam. But apart from this, on the first question, we are not satisfied that the rate of Rs. 1-12-6 was not a proper rate. Exhibits O3, O4 and O5 show under what circumstances the paddy was sold. The plaintiffs produce two affidavits, Exhibits O and O1, sworn to by two merchants of Kumbakonam; to prove the rate at which paddy was selling at the time. The Subordinate Judge himself is of opinion that these two deponents may be referring to the price of old paddy. He has failed to take note of the fact that the village at which the paddy was stored was 17 miles from Mayavaram and 32 miles from Kumbakonam. The District Gazette containing the prices has not been produced by either side, and there is no evidence as to what the price of paddy was in the outlying villages. The affidavits give no particulars and afford no basis for ascertaining the price at Nalladi. We attach no value to the affidavits filed in the case. It is well-known that the cart-hire from a village to the market in towns will be considerable. That factor has not been taken into account by the Subordinate Judge in coming to a conclusion whether the rate of Rs. 1-12-6 was proper or not.

As regards the paying of brokerage or commission, we are wholly unable to agree with the lower Court that it is unjustifiable. Treating Gopalasawmi Chetti to be the tenant, it is clear from Exhibit O5 that he measured the paddy to the devasthanam at Nalladai; and that the defendants' agent wanted to sell the paddy. Then Gopalasawmi offered to purchase it from the agent. He settled the price at Rs. 1-12-6 and asked for a commission of six pies per kalam. The fact that the purchaser happened to be the tenant is no reason for holding that qua purchaser he should not be given the commission. In sales of paddy it is not unusual to grant a commission; we see nothing wrong in Gopalasawmi having bargained for a commission of six pies per kalam.

The last of the charges relates to Prandhai Thottam. If the charge that was made in respect of this village is established, it would to some extent justify the order passed by the Subordinate Judge. The allegation is that the late Rani spent a sum of Rs. 7,000 for planting a mango tope and that the defendants wantonly and recklessly destroyed that garden and sold away the mango trees. The Subordinate Judge is unable to find what particular sum of money was really spent by the Rani in improving the garden; although in more than one place he speaks of the heavy expense incurred by the late Rani. He does not find that the mango trees were cut. He does not find what were the number of mango trees which were planted. On the other hand the evidence shows that there were a large number of iluppai trees in this place, which were yielding to the devasthanam about Rs. 30 on an average per year. The defendants directed that the trees should be cut; they were sold at public auction and realised a sum of over Rs. 2,800. It seems to us that this act was one of prudent management and not of waste on the part of the defendants. Rupees 2,800 put out at the lowest rate of interest would secure a considerably larger income than what the illuppi trees were yielding to the devasthanam. It was stated that the defendants failed to take advantage of an offer to pay a premium by a lessee and to lease it out for Rs. 400 a year. We have no materials to judge of the solvency of the proposed lessee. We are unable to say that the defendants acted otherwise than honestly in not accepting that offer.

These are the specific charges that have been considered by the Subordinate Judge. In addition to these, Mr. Rangachariar drew our attention to the fact that the defendants are not in solvent circumstances, and that in the interests of the temple it is not desireable that persons of such poor means should be in charge of the properties. It is common ground that the properties are considerable and that the income from them is nearly a lakh of rupees a year. Mr. Rangachariar also draws our attention to the fact that the two defendants are young and inexperienced and that they are managing the properties through their agents in rotation. This, he suggests, will lead to difficulties in the recovery of the rent from the tenants; the system of management by rotation is well known in this country and the sanction of the Privy Council was given to it in Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (1). We see no ground for the appointment of a Receiver because there is management by rotation. As has been pointed out in Beach on Receviers, section 600, as a general rule, the poverty or insolvency of a trustee is not a ground for a Receiver, unless there be in addition thereto some danger or loss of the estate, vide Anonymous (2) and Howard v. Papera (3). Moreover in the present case the defendants are in receipt of pensions from the Government and are legatees under the Will of the late Rani in respect of the mukhasa properties. However, in order to safeguard the interests of the temple we have resolved that pending the disposal of the suit the defendants should furnish security in the sum of Rs. 10,000 to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge for the proper management of the property.

Mr. Ranagachariar contended that the general rule that parties in possession should not be lightly displaced by the appointment of a Receiver, does not apply to cases of recent or disputed possession; and he quoted the analogy of section 239 of the Indian Succession Act for this purpose. It is true that where property is in medio after the death of the last owner and a dispute exists as to who is entitled to that property, a proper procedure is to appoint a Receiver. That is often done in England and that principle has been accepted in this country. But where a party is in peaceful possession and that possession has been secured to him by an order of the Magistrate, the analogy of section 239 cannot apply. The present case is more analogous to that of a person in whose favour a Probate in common form has been granted and a caveat is entered against his right to administer the estate. The case of Newton v. Ricketts (4), quoted by the learned Advocate-General, establishes that in such circumstances a Receiver should not ordinarily be appointed. Lord Langdale in delivering the judgment of the Court says: "It is satisfactory to find, that the authorities show, that such a state of things alone affords no right to relief, though it may, if connected with other circumstances; induce the Court to interfere and protect the property." A person who obtains possession after the Will has been proved in common form has only recent possession; and when that possession is disputed by the caveator, if a Receiver should not displace the party originally put in possession, we see no reason why, where a Magistrate has maintained a party in possession and his right is disputed by the opposing party, a Receiver should be appointed.

Mr. Rangachariar strongly pressed upon us the decision of Shadi v. Anup Singh (5), which lays down that the discretion of the lower Court should not be interfered with. If the facts were undisputed and the Court below had exercised the discretion in a particular way, ordinarily the Appellate Court would be unwilling to interfere with that discretion. But where, as in this case, we find that the Subordinate Judge has come to a wrong conclusion on the facts, we do not think that the decision in Shadi v. Anup Singh (5) has any application.

There is only one other circumstance to be noticed and that relates to the prima facie title of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claim to be the legitimate sons of the deceased Rajah. They may be able to establish that in the suit. But it is permissible to point out that the Government in granting the pension to the sons of the adopted son of the late Rani did not recognise the rights of the plaintiffs. On the other hand, the defendants are in receipt of pensions from the Government; and prima facie their claim is superior to that of the plaintiffs. Under these circumstances we do not think that the plaintiffs have shown a better prima facie title than the defendants.

Although we have come to the conclusion that the order of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside we think it desirable in the interests of the trusts that the defendants should be called upon to furnish (a) quarterly accounts of their management to the Subordinate Judge, (b) that they should take the permission of the lower Court for any leases over a year, and (c) that they should within three months from this date furnish security for Rs. 10,000 to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge. We reverse the order of the lower Court and dismiss the petition for the appointment of a Receiver. We make no order as to costs.

As regards the memorandum of objections, it is enough to point out that the alleged attempt to alienate the mokhasa properties will not prejudice the plaintiffs, as it would be affected by his lis pendens. There are no serious allegations of waste. We agree with the Subordinate Judge's conclusion on this matter. If the security is not given, leave to apply for further orders is given.

Appeal allowed.

The relation of landlord and tenant does not exist between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, where rent is not payable by the mortgagor nor is there any contract, express or implied, but for which it would be payable.

Second Appeal No. 2 of 1911-12, followed.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Agra Division, dated the 11th September 1912, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Agra District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(February 15th, 1915).—The facts are very simple. Can a mortgagor of an occupancy holding, who has put the mortgagee in possession, eject him from the holding on the ground merely that the mortgage is void under the Tenancy Act, without re-paying the mortgagee the money which he has received from him? The High Court in their decision in Bahoran Upadhya v. Uttamgir (1) have held to the contrary on the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity and that the mortgagor cannot be allowed to retain the mortgage-money in his own hands and at the same time to take back the property. The respondent refers me to a previous ruling, Ram Sarup v. Kishan Lal (2), which does not deal precisely with this point and which is not referred to in the later ruling.

The appellant further urged that there is nothing to show that the relation of landholder and tenant exist between the parties, as rent is not payable by the appellant nor is there any contract, express or implied, but for which it would be payable, and there is a good deal to be said for this point of view. I have a distinct recollection of a Board's ruling since the present Tenancy Act came into force in which Mr. Tweedy adopted much the same view as the High Court in their later judgment and in which the question of estoppel is also discussed. This will be looked up.

The respondent points to a condition in the mortgage-deed that he should pay rent to the zemindar direct, but if the mortgage-deed is void, it is difficult to see how this affects the case.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 2nd, 1915.)—Mr. Tweedy's decision cannot be found and cannot have been published as a Selected Decision, but Mr. L. Porter as member of the Board held in Second Appeal No. 2 of 1911-12 that in a similar case the relation of landholder and tenant did not exist between the parties. Moreover, it seems to me that the occupancy tenant is estopped from ejecting his mortgagee until the mortgage-money has been paid up.

I would set aside the order of the Commissioner and restore that of the Assistant Collector, respondent paying costs in all Courts.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—I agree.

The land in dispute was used as a graveyard and also for storing wood by the plaintiffs, who had been in undisturbed possession of it ever since 1860 in their own right without paying any assessment. In 1907 the District Deputy Collector ordered the mamlatdar "to cause the building and the wood to be removed forthwith from the said land" and the order was confirmed on appeal by the Commissioner in April 1909. On the 22nd February 1910 the plaintiffs sued the Secretary of State for India in Council for the declaration that they were the owners of the land, for a cancellation of the order and for a permanent injunction against the defendant to prevent any obstruction being caused to them in the enjoyment of the property:

Held, (1) that in view of the long undisturbed possession of the plaintiffs the order of eviction was ultra vires. [p. 492, col. 1; p. 494, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—In this matter the following facts are either admitted or established beyond any real controversy.

There is a certain plot of land which is used, and for many years has been used, as a graveyard, but also for storing wood. On the findings of the first Court which to this extent are not challenged in appeal, the occupants or persons who are in charge of the land, whether with reference to its use as a graveyard or as timber store, are the plaintiffs. This occupation had continued for at least fifty years before this suit was brought.

Eventually the Government officers decided that the plaintiffs should be evicted unless they ceased to use the land for the purpose of a wood store. I am describing the case in general, but I think in sufficiently accurate terms. Plaintiffs have brought this suit substantially to protect themselves against the proposed eviction by Government officers unless they cease to use the land as a wood store. The acting District Judge who heard this case substantially found the facts as I have described them, but he came to the conclusion that the order of eviction was perfectly legal and justified under the provisions of the Land Revenue Code. It is here at the outset where I differ from the District Judge. To begin with, as a general principle Government have no power to evict persons in such occupation of land except as provided by the law, and it is not suggested that they have any power to evict these plaintiffs unless that power is to be found in the provisions of the Land Revenue Code. It is not denied that the plaintiffs are lawfully in occupation of this land provided that they put the land to a proper use, that is to say, they are not in occupation as trespassers or persons without any right. It is said, and it may be perfectly true, that they are in occupation as persons entitled to be in charge of the graveyard which exists on the land. But assuming this to be so, and knowing as we do that they have used the land as a wood store, is there any provision in the Land Revenue Code which entitles the Government officers to evict them? I can find none. It is not shown in this case that the land has been assigned for the purpo e of a graveyard as provided in section 38 of the Land Revenue Code. We know merely that the land is and has been a graveyard for a very great many years. How, under what arrangement, or by whose authority, it came to be a graveyard we do not know, and in our ignorance it would be profitless to conjecture.

Then this land, so far as the evidence shows, has neither been assessed nor held for the purpose of agriculture. True, it was assessed, but so far as I can judge on the evidence it was assessed for some purpose not directly connected with agriculture, because when it was assessed it had been for many years and was still a graveyard. No assessment was ever levied from the occupant and it nowhere appears from the Government records that the land was ever regarded as land to be used for the purpose of agriculture. In fact it never has been used for the purpose of agriculture, so far as the evidence informs us. It is not, therefore, land to which sections 65 and 66 of the Land Revenue Code apply. I can find no provision which entitles the Government to evict these persons, as from their proceedings it seems they propose to do. On the merits, therefore, I feel no doubt whatever that the plaintiffs are entitled to protection against this intended eviction.

The only other points which I need notice are, first, that we are not in any way in the case concerned with the question as to whether Government have the power or whether they ought to levy any assessment on this land. Secondly, it has been argued that the suit is time-barred. It has been so argued because, it is said, Article 14 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act covers the case. That Article relates to a suit to set aside an act or order of an officer of Government. It is true that the suit is one in terms to set aside the order of an officer of Government, but it is a suit to set aside an order which bears a date less than one year from the time when the suit was filed and, therefore, the suit is not on its face time-barred. What really underlies this argument is, not a question of limitation so much as a very different question. It is argued that there was an earlier order and that limitation runs from the date of that order. That can only be if the order were one which, if not set aside, would lawfully operate as a bar to the plaintiffs' rights. So far as I can see, none of the orders in the case operates as a bar to the plaintiffs' rights. Neither the earliest of them, that of the District Deputy Collector, nor the latest, that of the Commissioner. It is true that the orders are adverse to the interests of the plaintiffs and if practically given effect to, would lead to the eviction of the plaintiffs. No doubt these orders give the plaintiffs a right of action because they are, at any rate to the extent of a threat, an invasion of their rights, but they are not a tangible invasion. They do not of themselves affect the plaintiffs; it would only be the enforcement of the orders which would do this. Therefore, I think there is no bar of limitation in the case.

The order which I would propose is that the decree of the lower Court be set aside, that a declaration be made that the plaintiffs are in lawful occupation of the land in suit and are entitled to remain in such occupation undisturbed and I think the plaintiffs should have their costs in both the Courts.

SHAH, J.—These appeals arise out of two suits brought by the respective plaintiffs against the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration that they were the owners of the property in suit and that they had been in possession and enjoyment adversely to the defendant for over sixty years, for the cancellation of a certain order of the Commissioner, Northern Division, and for a permanent injunction against the defendant to prevent any obstruction being caused to them in the enjoyment of the property. The lower Court dismissed the suits on the ground that the claim was time-barred, though it held that the plaintiffs were the occupants of the land in suit. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and have urged two points in support of the appeals, viz., (1) that the evidence establishes the fact that they have been in possession of the property in suit in their own right, and (2) that their claim is not time-barred.

With reference to the first point, a few facts which are beyond dispute may be stated. The plaintiffs have been in possession of the land at least from the year 1860 and have been using the property partly as a graveyard and partly for the purpose of stacking timber. There is nothing to show as to how the plaintiffs obtained this land, nor is there anything to show that the defendant had originally assigned this land to them before the year 1860. In 1871 when a Survey Settlement was effected, the land was assessed. It is not clear on what footing it was assessed. It was entered in the revenue register as waste land and the amount of assessment was shown in that register. No assessment was ever demanded from the plaintiffs up to the date of the present litigation. In 1898 there was some correspondence with regard to the land in suit as well as other lands and in the letter of the Collector to the Commissioner, dated the 20th of April 1898, the view which the Revenue authorities took of their position with reference to this land is stated. It is not suggested, however, that the plaintiffs had anything to do with this correspondence or that any attempt was made to question the propriety of their possession or of the use which they were making of the land. In 1907 the order, which is referred to by the lower Court as the order which the plaintiffs must seek to set aside, was made by the District Deputy Collector. That was, however, only a letter addressed by that officer to the mamlatdar of Ankleshwar, and there is nothing to show as to when, if at all, it was communicated to the plaintiffs. In that order it was stated as follows:—"If, in this manner, a house be built on the cemetery land, and a wood depôt be opened there or wood be stored there, that cannot be allowed on any account whatever. Therefore you will please cause the building and the wood to be removed forthwith from the said land." An appeal was preferred against this order to the Collector, who declined to interfere. A further appeal was preferred to the Commissioner who made an order in April 1909 declining to interfere with the order of eviction. The notice which was actually served on the plaintiffs has been put in on behalf of the respondent now in this appeal. That notice orders the plaintiffs to remove the wood and clear the ground, directs them to use the land only for the purposes of a kabarasthan, and states that on failure of their doing so, steps would be taken against them under section 202 of the Land Revenue Code.

The present suits have been brought on the 22nd of February 1910, i. e., within a year from the Commissioner's order, but more than a year after the order of 1907, Exhibit 49, or the notice of September 1908.

The plaintiffs have adduced evidence to show that at least since the year 1860 they have been using the land in suit in their own right and dealing with it as their own property. They have mortgaged and leased the property from time to time. There are superstructures over the land and it has been used as a timber shop. The evidence also shows that a part of the land is used as a private kabarasthan by the plaintiffs. It is not necessary to discuss the oral evidence which establishes these facts. The evidence as to the possession and the use of the property is clear and practically unchallenged. The lower Court also has substantially accepted that evidence as proving these facts. It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiffs have been in possession of this land for over fifty years. There is nothing to show that the defendant had assigned this land to them before that time. Under these circumstances it seems to me that though there is no direct evidence the plaintiffs are the owners of the land, under section 110 of the Indian Evidence Act the burden of proving that they are not the owners would be on the defendant who affirms that they are not the owners.

Coming now to the defendant's evidence it seems to me that beyond the entries in the revenue registers, there is nothing to show that the Government assigned this land to the plaintiffs. It is not shown under what circumstances this land came to be assessed in 1877, but it is significant that in spite of the plaintiffs using the land as their own, no attempt was made even after 1877 up to the year 1907 either to prevent them from using the land otherwise than as a kabarasthan, and they were never asked to pay any assessment. I am unable to infer from these Revenue Records that this land was assigned to the plaintiffs by the defendant. There is only one other piece of evidence upon which the learned Government Pleader has relied for the purpose of showing that the plaintiffs are not the owners. That is the statement which was made by one of the plaintiffs on the 18th of September 1903 before the Talati of Ankleshwar. There is no doubt that in this statement the deponent expresses his readiness to pull down the kacha hut built on the land if Government have any objection to it. It seems to me, however, that no steps were taken after this statement, as I have already stated, up to the year 1907, and when steps were taken in 1907 or in 1908, the plaintiffs asserted their present claim. It does not appear clearly how the statement came to be made before the Talati, but apparently it was in connection with some Revenue inquiry which ultimately resulted in the order of 1907. The plaintiff who has made this statement says that he made it in ignorance of law. On giving the best consideration to the statement, it seems to me that it would not be right to treat this as an admission of the defendant's right by the plaintiffs. As soon as a definite order was made in 1907, that the plaintiffs should remove the huts which they had built on the land, they asserted their right as owners of the land. Under these circumstances I am unable to treat this statement as in any way advancing the defendant's case. In my opinion, therefore, the result of the evidence is that the plaintiffs' possession for over fifty years is established and that the defendant has failed to show that the plaintiffs are not the owners.

It is necessary to mention here that the Government have never attempted to levy the assessment from the plaintiffs. So far as the present dispute is concerned, it has arisen in consequence of the Revenue authorities having asserted their right to evict the plaintiffs if they did not remove the huts and if they failed to confine the use of the land to the purposes of a kabarasthan. It is not, therefore, necessary to consider whether even if the plaintiffs be the owners of this land, the Government have the right to levy any assessment from them in respect of the land. In fact there are no materials in the case upon which this point could be decided, and it is clear that the Government have not so far called upon the plaintiffs to pay the assessment. In coming to the conclusion, therefore, that in virtue of the plaintiffs having proved their possession of the land in their own right and the defendant having failed to show that they are not the owners, we say nothing as to the right of the Government to assess this land and to levy the assessment from the plaintiffs. The lower Court has dealt with the question of assessment, but it does not seem to me to be either proper or necessary to decide that question in this case. I desire to make it clear that the declaration which may be made in favour of the plaintiffs in this litigation will be without prejudice to the right of the defendant, if any, to levy assessment in respect of this land.

I now come to the question of limitation. The lower Court has held that under Article 14 of the Indian Limitation Act the suits are time-barred because they are brought more than a year after the order (Exhibit 49). It seems to me that the view taken by the lower Court on this point is wrong. In the first place, in these suits it does not appear to me to be at all necessary for the plaintiffs to have any order set aside. Their claim is substantially one for confirmation of their possession and for an injunction restraining the defendant from evicting them. The order in question is not of such a character as would by itself have any effect if neither party took any action on it. Besides, strictly speaking, it is merely a communication by the District Deputy Collector to the mamlatdar. In pursuance of this order no doubt subsequently a notice was issued, and it was urged on behalf of the respondent that at least from the date of that notice the suit ought to have been brought within a year. I do not think that that notice is any more an order within the meaning of Article 14 than the order which is supposed to have been contained in Exhibit 49. Further, on the merits, having regard to the view which I take of the plaintiffs' possession and of their right to this property, it is clear that the order in question is outside the powers of the Revenue authorities. It was urged by the learned Government Pleader on behalf of the respondent that the order in question was justified by the provisions of sections 65 and 66 of the Land Revenue Code. It was contended that the plaintiffs having used the land for non-agricultural purposes, the Revenue authorities had the power to evict the plaintiffs under section 66 of the Act; but, in my opinion, these provisions of the Land Revenue Code have no application to the present case as the plaintiffs are not occupants of the land within the meaning of the Code, and their rights are not proved to be limited to the agricultural use of the land. It is not possible, therefore, to attribute the order or the notice to any section of the Land Revenue Code under which the Revenue authorities can be said to have the power to evict the present plaintiffs from the land in dispute. If follows, therefore, that the order and the notice are ultra vires of the Revenue authorities. On these grounds it seems to me that it is not incumbent on the plaintiffs to have any order passed by the District Deputy Collector or the Collecter or the Revenue Commissioner set aside.

I do not think that any injunction is necessary under the circumstances. It will be sufficient to declare that the plaintiffs are entitled to be confirmed in their possession of the land. I, therefore, concur in the order proposed by my learned colleague.

Decree reversed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 13th January 1914.

Dr. Sulaiman, for the Appellants.

Mr. Durga Charan Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The pre-emptor's claim was based on Muhammadan Law. Both the Courts below have decreed the claim and the defendant-vendee comes here in second appeal. The vendor is the husband of the vendee and the property was sold to the lady in lieu of her dower-debt. The plea taken before us is that the preliminary demands were not properly satisfied and, therefore, the suit ought to have been dismissed. The facts are that at the time when the sale came to the knowledge of the plaintiff-pre-emptor, the vendee was present and witnesses also were present. The plaintiff at once claimed his right of pre-emption invoking the witnesses. It is urged that the two demands ought to have been made separately, one immediately after the other, that practically only one demand was made and that does not satisfy the requirements of Muhammadan Law. The authorities are against the appellant; as Mr. Justice Ameer Ali in his book points out, if at the time of the talab-i-muwasibat the pre-emptor had an opportunity of invoking witnesses in the presence of the seller or the purchaser, or on the premises to attest the immediate demand, it would suffice for both the demands and there would be no necessity for the second. The reason of this is obvious. A pre-emptor under the Muhammadan Law directly he hears of the sale has to at once make a demand wherever he may be, whether the purchaser or the seller are or are not present, whether witnesses are or are not present, but it is necessary for him to convey knowledge of his demand to the vendee or the vendor and to call attention to the fact that he did make hisfirst demand and to invoke his witnesses to that effect. Where all the parties are present and the witnesses are present, it is sufficient for him to make his claim and call the attention of the witnesses to the fact that he is doing so and that he insists upon his right. [See the remarks in Nundo Pershad Thakur v. Gopal Thakur (1).]

The next contention is that no right of pre-emption can arise where property is transferred by a husband to his wife in lieu of the dower-debt. This contention is based upon a passage to be found in Mr. Ameer Ali's book, page 713, Volume I (4th Edition). No other authority has been cited. On the other hand, there is a decision of this Court in Fida Ali v. Muzaffar Ali (2), which is based upon a much older decision of the Sadr Dewani Adalat of 1864. Mr. Ameer Ali challenges this decision, saying that it appears to proceed on a wrong interpretation of the law but he does not point out the error or consider the question any further. We think that we should follow the ruling of this Court and we, therefore, hold that under the circumstances of the present case the right of pre-emption did arise.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 52—Decree for arrears of rent obtained—Decree not satisfied within fifteen days—Suit for ejectment filed—Decretal amount tendered by judgment-debtor during pendency of suit, effect of.

A co-sharer who is not a recorded co-sharer need not join as a plaintiff in a suit for ejectment.

A landlord obtained a decree for arrears of rent against an occupancy tenant and then brought a suit for his ejectment under section 52, Agra Tenancy Act, on the ground of non-satisfaction of the decree for arrears of rent for more than fifteen days. Before the decree for ejectment was passed and while the ejectment suit was still pending, the judgment-debtor offered the decretal amount to the decree-holder, who refused to take it on the ground that it was not offered to him within fifteen days of the decree:

Held, that if the decree-holder had accepted the money when tendered, no decree for ejectment could have been passed, as at the date of the decree for ejectment there would have been no unsatisfied decree for arrears of rent, that, the landlord had no right to complain of non-satisfaction of the decree owing to his own refusal to accept the tendered money and that, therefore, the decree for ejectment could not be made.

A tenant has a right to pay the decretal amount at any time before the order for ejectment is passed.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 28th July 1914, confirming that of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Gonda District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(March 5th, 1915.)—There is nothing to show that Gajadhar is now a recorded co-sharer in the land and respondents deny that he is. If he is not a recorded co-sharer, there is no need that he should have joined as a plaintiff in the suit.

From the record of the ejectment suit it appears that on the 18th February 1914, defendant appeared with the money and that on the 27th February the plaintiffs refused to take the decree-money which was offered to them. The result is that the tenant against whom a decree for arrears of rent had been obtained, dated the 18th September 1913, was ready with the money to satisfy the decree during the pendency of the ejectment suit. The respondents urge that, under the proviso to section 52 (1), the tenant had no right to avoid ejectment by paying the money during the suit, and that he could only avoid ejectment by paying the money within fifteen days of the decree for arrears. The decree for rent was obtained on the 18th September 1913; and the tenant was certainly at liberty to pay up the arrears in February 1914, and it was not his fault that the landlord refused to receive them and the decree remained unsatisfied. Had the landlord received the arrears, the proviso would certainly have prevented any decree for ejectment being made. It seems to me that if the landlord deliberately refused to accept payment of money tendered, that he has no right to complain that the decree is unsatisfied, and that so far as the tenant is concerned, this formal tender of money in Court must be considered to amount to a satisfaction. Had the case been an Agra case, the matter would have been perfectly clear. No decree for ejectment could possibly have been made in the circumstances.

I would set aside the orders of the lower Courts and dismiss the suit for ejectment, provided the appellant pays the full arrears with interest either in the Deputy Commissioner's Court or in the Sub-Divisional Officer's within a week, in addition to any costs which have been decreed against him in the arrears of rent suit.

In the circumstances parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Subsequent transferee, definition of—Interest in property, existence of—Fraudulent transfer—Auction-purchaser, whether subsequent transferee.

A person, who steps in by operation of law and not by any act of the owner, is not a subsequent transferee within the meaning of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. He is not a person having an interest in the property within the meaning of the section which refers to interest which exists at the time of the transfer objected to. [p. 498, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, P sold his interest in a certain land to plaintiff in 1906 and in execution of a money decree passed against P, his rights in the property were sold at a Court sale on 22nd January 1909 to the defendant, and on the defendant being placed in possession of the property, the plaintiff sued to recover possession under the sale-deed of 1906:

Held, that the sale-deed was not voidable at the option of the defendant inasmuch as he was not a transferee nor a person having interest in the property within the meaning of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 498, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, at Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 242 of 1912, reversing the decree passed by the Sub-Judge, at Chiplun, in Civil Suit No. 497 of 1912.

Mr. H. C. Coyaji. with him Messrs. N. V. Gokhale and D. G. Dalvi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. S. Rao and P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The question in this second appeal is whether the sale-deed of the 19th February 1906, under which the plaintiff claims, is voidable under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act at the instance of the defendant, who is an auction-purchaser of the right, title and interest of the plaintiff's vendors in the takshim, with which we are concerned in this suit.

There is no dispute about the fact that the defendant purchased the right, title and interest of the heirs of the original owner, Purshotam Oke, in the takshim on the 22nd January 1909 in execution of a a money decree against the said Purshotam and one Gopal Mahadev Gadgil with full notice of the sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff. There was another similar sale-deed of the same date in favour of one Deodhar. But the claim on that sale-deed between Deodhar and the defendant has been compromised. It is common ground now that the plaintiff must succeed in this suit, if his sale-deed is good and operative. The objection taken by the defendant in the trial Court was that it was not a real transaction, but entered into without consideration and with the fraudulent object of defeating the creditors of the vendors, whose right, title and interest he had purchased. The trial Court found that the transaction was real and that there was consideration for it, and that it was not entered into with the object of defeating or delaying the vendor's creditors. On these findings the plaintiff's claim was decreed by that Court. In appeal, however, the learned first Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers came to the conclusion that though a part of the consideration was proved it was grossly inadequate, that the sale was effected with the object of defeating or delaying Purshotam's creditors and that the plaintiff was aware of, and participated in, the fraudulent intentions of the vendors and was not a transferee in good faith. Apparently it was not contended that apart from the objection under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act the transaction was sham and not real. The issues raised in both the Courts covered the controversy between the parties relating to section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and did not indicate that the defendant really contended that the transaction was not real but a mere cloak for concealing the true ownership which remained with the vendors. The lower Appellate Court accordingly reversed the decision of the trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's claim.

In the appeal before us Mr. Coyaji has argued on behalf of the appellant that section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot help the defendant, as he is not a person at whose option the deed is voidable under the section. He concedes that it is quite open to the defendant to raise the plea that the transaction is sham and colourable or that it is voidable under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. As regards the former contention, he says that though it was raised in the written statement, no issue was framed on the point, and that in any event after the finding of the trial Court, it was practically given up. This position has not been seriously contested by Mr. Rao on behalf of the defendant. In my opinion, therefore, it must be assumed for the purposes of this case that whatever infirmity there may be in the transaction in virtue of the provisions of section 53, it was not a sham but a real transaction between the vendors and the plaintiff. The findings recorded by the lower Appellate Court on the issues arising under section 53 do not negative this assumption, and on the pleadings it would not be possible to say that the question was specifically raised or that it was urged before the lower Appellate Court.

The appellant, therefore, relies upon the wording of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and argues that the transaction is not voidable at the instance of the defendant, even though the findings of the lower Appellate Court, that the object of the sale was to defeat the creditors of the original owner and that the plaintiff was not a transferee in good faith, be accepted. It is quite clear that the defendant is not the person to defraud, defeat or delay whose claim this sale-deed could have been executed. The only persons whose claims were intended to be defeated were Purshotam's creditors, as suggested in the lower Courts. It is quite clear that the defendant is not a creditor and that he does not seek to avoid the document for the benefit of any creditors. It was suggested, however, that the defendant would be a subsequent transferee or a person having an interest in the property within the meaning of section 53, paragraph 1. But the defendant is an auction-purchaser at a Court sale, and not a transferee by any act of the original owner. Having regard to the preamble as well as section 5 of the Act, it seems to be clear that a person who steps in by operation of law and not by any act of the owner is not a subsequent transferee within the meaning of section 53. He is clearly not a person having an interest in the property within the meaning of the section, which apparently refers to interest which exists in fact at the time of the transfer objected to. It is clear, therefore, that the deed is not voidable at the option of the defendant.

It remains to notice the argument of Mr. Rao that apart from section 53 when it was proved that the plaintiff was not a transferee in good faith, and that he had participated in the fraudulent intentions of the transferor, no Court ought to help the plaintiff. The argument, in order to be effective, must amount to this that the sale-deed was not real and that the vendors really continued to be the owners. I have already dealt with this aspect of the case, and, in my opinion, there is a real and substantial difference between a sham transaction and a transaction which is voidable under section 53 in consequence of fraud at the instance of the person defrauded. It is difficult to understand how the defendant can succeed unless he is a person defrauded or the transaction is merely sham and colourable. As he is not a person at whose option the deed could be avoided and as the deed is not a sham transaction, I do not see how the mere finding that the plaintiff is not a transferee in good faith can help the defendant.

I would, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court on the defendant.

HEATON, J.—I agree.

ORDER.—On an application for the partition of the common land of Mauza Adhi Sargal the Settlement Officer, by his order dated 11th December 1912, directed that the partition should be carried out and should be effected in a certain way. An appeal was preferred to the Commissioner on two main grounds: (1) that partition was contrary to the provisions of the Wajib-ul-arz of the estate and (2) that the measure of right laid down by the Settlement Officer as governing the method of partition was erroneous. On these points the Commissioner held in his order dated May 23rd, 1913, that (1) as a similar order passed in regard to Mauza Mitha Tiwana, directing partition in spite of the provisions of the Wajib-ul-arz to the contrary, had not been impugned by the Financial Commissioner on revision, the Settlement Officer's order should stand and (2) the Settlement Officer having referred the parties to a civil suit as to the matter of the measure of right, if any of them contested his finding, there was no reason to interfere. On 2nd September 1913, the opponents of partition filed the present application for revision, contesting the decision of the Commissioner on both points.

As regards the second point, there is, prima facie, no reason to suppose that the decision of the Settlement Officer is erroneous and it is open to the applicants to contest the matter in a Civil Court and I, therefore, agree with the Commissioner that there is no need to interfere.

As regards the first point, the question whether a clause in the Wajib-ul-arz prohibiting partition is a bar to partition even when the conditions under which the clause was inserted have changed, does not appear to have been ever definitely decided in this office. The case of Mitha Tiwana quoted by the Commissioner is not directly in point. It is true that partition was there ordered contrary to such a clause, but in the revision case decided by Sir J. Douie on 23rd April 1911, the only point for decision was whether the area which had been reserved from partition in order to form a grazing ground was not too large, the parties being apparently agreed that the remainder of the shamilat should be divided, and the decision was that the area reserved was not too large.

In Taja v. Tara Chand (1), it was held that the question whether such a clause should prevail was one that should be decided by the Revenue Officer dealing with the partition case, and should not be referred to the Civil Court, but on the merits of the question no opinion was pronounced. The further history of the case shows that partition was acquiesced in by all concerned it being a case where unculturable riverain land had been made culturable by a change in the river, and consequently no further appeal or application was preferred to the Financial Commissioner.

It has been ruled in several cases that statements or agreements in the Wajib-ul-arz relating to the rent of occupancy tenants are binding only for the term of Settlement. And Dilsukh Ram v. Nathu Singh (2) is a case where an agreement in the Wajib-ul-arz was held to be a binding custom (as to haqshufa in respect of a mortgage with conditional sale). But none of these bears directly on a clause prohibiting partition. On the other hand the Mitha Tiwana case is so far a precedent that it shows that by agreement among the land-owners such a clause can be ignored. In the present case the wording of the clause, in the future tense, "taqsim nahin karenge, ki charai mal maweshi men nuqsan hota hai," shows that it is of the nature of an agreement rather than a custom. And even a custom may be abrogated by a custom (Rattigan's Customary Law, paragraph 5). The question is whether when, as in this case, there is a difference of opinion among the share-holders as to whether the agreement or custom should be enforced, it should be upheld or not.

It is matter of common knowledge that the inhabitants of the Thal in which this village lies have found the cultivation of gram in its hollows to be a profitable undertaking. There has in consequence been a revolution in its conditions. The whole wording of the Wajib-ul-arz shows that it was drawn up to suit a time when the Thal was valued only for its pasture and the only agriculture known was occasional cultivation of moth and bajra in the kharif harvest. The particular clause in question, forbidding partition because it would be an obstacle to grazing, shows that it was designed for another period. The Tahsildar's report shows that a very large area (over 5,500 bighas) has been broken up for cultivation, that persons other than owners are largely taking advantage of the provision in restraint of partition to obtain cultivating possession of portions of the common land, and that there has been a considerable reduction in the number of cattle kept by the community. If in spite of all these circumstances a large majority in interest of the owners of the estate were of opinion that the condition of the Wajib-ul-arz should prevail, it might be maintained. But when it is contested by a large section of the community it can no longer be maintained as an agreement, and if regarded as a custom, it may be held to have become inoperative as contrary to justice and equity, and it is open to the Revenue Officer dealing with a partition to direct under section 116 of the Act that it may be carried out notwithstanding.

The application is rejected.

Matadars Act (Bom. Act VI of 1887), s. 9—Death of representative Matadar—"Heir next in succession," how determined.

On the death of a representative Matadar, the heir next in succession is ascertained in the first instance by reference to the personal law of the parties. [p. 501, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Surat, in Appeal No. 87 of 1912, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Olpad, in Civil Suit No. 85 of 1911.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Desai, for the Respondent.

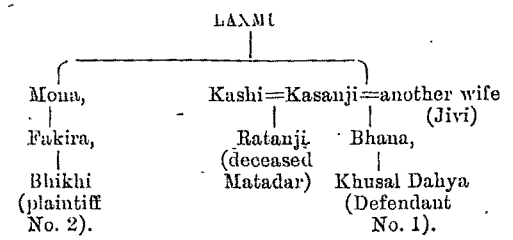
JUDGMENT.—This is a case in which the point involved is as to the right of succession to certain Matadari property. The appeal arises in the following state of facts. The genealogy of the parties is as follows:—



The present contest is between Bhikhi, the original 2nd plaintiff, and Dahya the 1st defendant. Ratanji Kasanji, the representative Matadar, died in 1908 or 1909 without issue. Disputes as to the succession to the Matadari property immediately arose, and the Collector of the District and the Commissioner of the Division decided against the claim of the 1st defendant. The Government of Bombay, however, in 1912 took the other view, and reversing the orders of the Collector and Commissioner declared the 1st defendant to be the next heir of the deceased, and accordingly ordered the entry of his name in the Matadari register. Thereupon, Bhikhi and another brought the present suit for a declaration that one of the plaintiffs, and not the 1st defendant, was entitled to succeed to the Matadari property, and both the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court have decided in favour of the plaintiff Bhikhi. My own view is that the appellant Dahya is entitled to succeed.

The question is regulated by sections 9 and 10 of Bombay Act VI of 1887. Section 9 enacts, so far as it is relevant to our present purposes, that on the death of a representative or other Matadar, "the name of the heir next in succession, or, if there are two or more heirs of equal degree, the name of the senior heir, shall, subject to the provisions of section 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886, be registsred in his stead." I apprehend as a matter of grammatical construction that the words "subject to the provisions of section 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886" govern as well the case of a single heir as the case of two or more heirs of equal degree; but the point is not now material, as neither side contends that the decision of the present appeal is affected by the modification of the rule introduced by the incorporation of section 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886. It is admitted, and, as the genealogy shows, rightly admitted, that if the ordinary Hindu Law is to be enforced, Dahya, and not Bhikhi, is the preferential heir; for Dahya is a sagotra sapinda of the deceased Ratnji's, whereas Bhikhi is a bhinnagotra sapinda. The lower Courts have decided in favour of Bhikhi on the sole ground that, as they understand the scheme of the Act, it overrides the general law, and provides that, in order to ascertain the heir of a deceased Matadar, the Court is confined to the limits of the Matadar family and can never travel outside those limits. I am obliged to differ from the learned Judges below, because I find nothing in the Act to justify this view, while if that had been the intention of the draftsman, it would have been easy to express it beyond the possibility of misconception. Not only is there no clear provision of that sort, but the section declares that the name of the heir next in succession in such a case as this shall be registered instead of the name of the deceased. Taking these words in their natural meaning they seem to me to denote that the heir is to be ascertained in the first instance by reference to the personal law which governs the parties, for instance, the Hindu Law in the case of Hindus and the Muhammadan Law in the case of Muhammadans. And by section 10 it is enacted that if at any time any person shall, by production of a certificate of heirship, satisfy the Collector that he is entitled to have his name registered in preference to the person whose name the Collector has ordered to be registered, the Collector shall cause the entry in the register to be amended accordingly. Again the section contains no words which indicate that the Court in its inquiry as to who is entitled to be considered the heir shall adopt any other principles than those which a Court would necessarily follow, unless plainly directed otherwise.

It was urged that in Chinava v. Bhimangauda (1), a case decided with reference to the Watan Act, this Court recognised that one leading object of this Watan legislation is to keep the Watan property intact in the same family. That is perfectly true, but the question still is how far this object is to be pursued, whether within the limitations expressed in the Statute, or beyond those limitations into an unexpressed disregard of the established principles by which heirship is determined. I cannot find in the Act any warrant for this larger extension. And it seems clear that the Act cannot avail to prevent the occasional devolution of the Mata outside the original family, as, for instance, where a deceased Matadar leaves a daughter as his sole heir. It was urged by Mr. Desai that to allow the appellant, Dahya, now to succeed would have the effect of creating a new Matadar family, but the answer to that appears to me to be that the effect will rather be that Dahya will come from outside into the already existing Matadar family. Then Mr. Desai sought to support his case by reference to the addition made to section 2 of the Matadars Act by Bombay Act IV of 1910, which provides that in determining who is the heir to a Matadar for the purposes of the Act the rule of lineal primogeniture shall be presumed to prevail in the Matadar family. But that carries the case no further than this, that where there are lineal descendants of a deceased Matadar the rule of succession will be by primogeniture. Here we are dealing with a case where there are no lineal descendants. On these grounds, as I am unable to discover in the Matadars Act any authority for the view that the Court in ascertaining the heir of a deceased Matadar is disabled from looking outside the Matadar family, I am compelled to give my decision in favour of the appellant, Dahya.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

Decree reversed.

Where there is a document as evidence of the transaction of a lease, oral evidence in the shape of admission relating to the transaction of the lease is not admissible.

It is not sufficient, to prove the plaintiff's tenancy, to show that he was in possession of other lands covered by the lease.

The expression "putra poutradhi kramay" in a document signifies that the lease is a perpetual one.

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 23rd of November 1912, affirming that of the Munsif, Additional Court, at Narail, dated the 24th of November 1911.

Babu Surendra Nath Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's case was that he had obtained a settlement from defendant No. 3, who was a raiyat and that upon his going to a portion of the land of which he had obtained the settlement, he was opposed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. He, therefore, brought this suit for ejectment of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiff claimed under a lease, the term of which is described by the expression "putra poutradhi kramay." The lease is, therefore, for a term exceeding nine years and having regard to the case of Jarip Khan v. Durfa Bawa (1), the document was not admissible in evidence and could not have operated to create any title in the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court, however, decreed the plaintiff's suit.

On behalf of the respondents the difficulty is sought to be got over in three ways. Firstly, it is said that the plaintiff was entitled to adduce evidence irrespective of the document to prove his tenancy. This evidence, it is said, consists, in the present case, of an admission by defendant No. 3 that he had made the lease, that he took an adequate selami and also that the plaintiff seemed to have obtained possession of the remainder of the land covered by the lease. If the admission of defendant No. 3 could be used against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, we are of opinion that this is evidence relating to the transaction of the lease and that there being a document as evidence of that transaction, the oral evidence is not admissible. We do not think that it is sufficient, to prove the plaintiff's tenancy, to show that he was in possession of other lands covered by the lease and we note that there does not appear to have been any evidence that the plaintiff was in such a possession.

It is then contended that it would be possible for the plaintiff to prove that there was an oral agreement by defendant No. 3 to create a tenancy. There does not appear to have been any evidence, oral or documentary, other than the evidence of the transaction—the transaction which could only be proved by the document of the lease.

It is then contended that the lease is not a perpetual lease. This contention cannot prevail having regard to the expression "putra poutradhi kramay."

The appeal, is, therefore, allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), s. 9 (2), (3)—Mortgage by way of conditional sale—Mortgagor denying execution or pleading payment—Deputy Commissioner, whether can decide question of currency of mortgage.

Where a holder of a mortgage by conditional sale applies direct to the Deputy Commissioner under section 9 (2) of the Punjab Land Alienation Act or where a mortgage by way of conditional sale is referred to a Deputy Commissioner by a Civil Court under section 9 (3) of the Punjab Land Alienation Act and the mortgagor on appearing before the Deputy Commissioner denies execution of the mortgage or pleads payment of the mortgage-debt, the Deputy Commissioner must decline to exercise the power conferred on him by section 9 (2) of the Act. [p. 503, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Rawalpindi, dated the 23rd September 1914.

ORDER.—Final order. In this case the holder of a mortgage-deed of 1893, containing a condition of conditional sale, applied to the Deputy Commissioner, without first taking action under the Regulation of 1806, to exercise his power under section 9 (2) of the Alienation of Land Act, and the Deputy Commissioner, without regarding the plea of the other side that the mortgage by conditional sale had been extinguished by subsequent mortgage-deeds executed in substitution for it, directed the execution of a new mortgage in form (a), section 6, of the Act. The learned Commissioner on appeal held that, in disregarding the plea, the Deputy Commissioner in effect decided a question which is within the cognisance of a Civil Court only and he accordingly held that the Deputy Commissiner's order should be set aside. The mortgagee appeals from the order of the Commissioner on the ground that the question of the currency of the mortgage was one for the Deputy Commissioner to decide.

It has already been held in this office, however, though no ruling to that effect has been published, that the view taken by the learned Commissioner is right. The question arose in connection with a ruling of the Chief Court in 1906 that the functions of a Civil Court under Regulation XVII of 1806 are purely ministerial and that the Civil Court has no power to determine, on an application for the issue of a notice of foreclosure, whether the mortgage is or is not valid and subsisting, but has only to issue the notice to the mortgagor or make the reference to the Deputy Commissioner prescribed by section 9 (2) of the Alienation of Land Act. This raised the question, whether on such a reference being made the function of the Deputy Commissioner was also of a ministerial nature only, or whether it was open to him to deal with objections to the validity of the mortgage. If it is not open to him to do so, the result may be that a valid mortgage executed by the Deputy Commissioner under section 9 (4) of the Act may be substituted for one that has been satisfied already or one that has never been valid at all. It was decided, however, by Sir James Douie on certain cases referred from the Rohtak District that the function of the Deputy Commissioner is limited in the above manner, and that the only matters which he may decide are the amount which may be reasonably allowed as due on the mortgage and the period of the new mortgage. If then a case is referred to the Deputy Commissioner by a Civil Court under section 9 (3) of the Act and if the mortgagor on appearing before the Deputy Commissioner denies execution of the mortgage or pleads payment of the mortgage-debt, the Deputy Commissioner must decline to exercise the power conferred on him by section 9 (2). The Civil Court must then, in exercise of its ministerial function under section 8 of the Regulation, issue a notice to the mortgagor informing him that the mortgage will be foreclosed if he does not redeem within one year. By raising a false plea before the Deputy Commissioner, a mortgagor loses the benefit of section 9 (2) of the Act. But if his plea is genuine, then as the notice issued by the Civil Court does not take effect for one year the mortgagor has ample time to bring a civil suit for a declartion that the mortgage is invalid or has been redeemed.

So also when the mortgagee applies direct to the Deputy Commissioner under section 9 (2) of the Act, without first applying to the Civil Court under the Regulation, and the mortgagor denies that the mortgage is in force, the proper course is for the Deputy Commissioner to decline to take action under section 9 (2) and to leave the mortgagee to foreclose under the Regulation or sue in the Civil Court for the money due.

The appeal is rejected.

Appeal from an order passed by the Additional first Class Subordinate Judge, Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 735 of 1914.

Mr. T.R. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—In this case the plaintiff brought a suit in the Court of the Additional first Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad and moved the Court to appoint a Receiver. The Court heard the parties and made this order:—"I, therefore, hold that a proper person should be appointed a Receiver. The parties will be further heard on the point as to who should be appointed a Receiver." Against this order the defendant in the suit has appealed.

His appeal is met by the preliminary objection that it does not lie. It does not lie certainly, unless it comes under clause (s) of Order XLIII of the Civil Procedure Code, which provides for an appeal against an order under rule 1 or rule 4 of Order XL. It is not pretended that this is an order under rule 4 of Order XL, but it is maintained that it is an order under rule 1. It can only be an order under rule 1 if it fall within the terms of clause (a) of the rule, that the Court may appoint a Receiver of any property.

It seems to me that the Court has not appointed a Receiver. It has only decided that at some future date it will appoint a Receiver, an order which no doubt it is quite competent to the Court to make under the power conferred on it by section 94 of the Code. But the actual order to appoint a Receiver, it seems to me, will be made only when the Judge actually nominates a person or an official and specifically appoints him to be the Receiver in the case. This conclusion is entirely in accordance with the decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Upendra Nath Nag Chowdhry v. Bhupendra Nath Nag Chowdhry (1).

Various arguments have been advanced in this case. Reference, for instance, has been made to the provisions of the old Code. I do not think that they really throw any light on the matter before us, for now the provisions of the law are materially different; nor do I think the decisions under the sections of the old Code help us in this matter.

General considerations have been referred to. They perhaps are not of any special importance here where we have to consider certain definite words, but it does seem to me that general considerations are against multiplying appeals; are against allowing an appeal, first from an order such as this, and then from a latter order actually appointing a Receiver. So it appears to me that the right course to take is to deal simply with the words of the Code. These words are "appoint a Receiver." The Receiver has not been appointed yet and it seems to me, therefore, that no order has yet been made under rule 1 of Order XL, and that the order which has been made is not one of those orders subject to appeal.

This appeal, I think, ought to be dismissed because no appeal lies, and I think the costs in these proceedings should be costs in the matter before the Subordinate Judge.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Probate and Letters of Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 92—Provision in Will that majority of executors should act—Contract by some executors, whether binds estate.

Section 92 of the Probate and Letters of Administration Act has no application, where a Will overrides it and provides that it is only the opinion of the majority of the executors appointed under it that should bind the estate. [p. 509, col. 2.]

Kumban v. Moorthi, 7 Ind. Cas. 422; (1910) M. W. 359; 8 M. L. T. 228; 34 M. 406; 20 M. L. J. 951, followed.

A contract, in such a case, entered into by some of the executors only without reference to the others will not, therefore, bind the estate of a deceased testator. [p. 509, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Bellary in Original Suit No. 25 of 1912.

FACTS of the case appear from the following judgments of the lower Appellate Court:—

"(1). Plaintiff sued for a declaration that a sale-deed, Exhibit I, was not binding upon him, or in the alternative to be allowed to redeem the property, treating the transaction as a mortgage.

(2). The facts are as follows:—Plaintiff has been found to be a reversioner to the estate of the late Basappa and this finding has not been disputed on appeal. Basappa left a widow, Sugamma, who executed the sale-deed in question in favour of four of the executors appointed by the Will of defendant's father, defendant being then a minor. At the same time three of the executors signed an agreement to reconvey the property to Sugamma whenever she repaid the purchase-money.

(3). The first question is, whether the sale by the widow Sugamma is binding on plaintiff. The evidence shows that her husband, Basappa, died leaving debts, and that Sugamma by way of satisfying a decree of the reconvey of the debt borrowed Rupees 2,500 from defendant's father and executed in his favour a mortgage-deed, Exhibit IV. This was in 1886. In 1891 she executed another mortgage-deed, Exhibit III, for Rs. 3,100 in renewal of Exhibit IV. In 1894, she borrowed Rs. 662 from defendant's father and executed another mortgage-deed, Exhibit II, for Rs. 4,500 for the money borrowed and in renewal of Exhibit III. In 1899, she cleared off the debt to defendant's father by paying to the executors Rs. 800 in cash which she borrowed from elsewhere and by executing in their favour a sale-deed, Exhibit I, for Rs. 4,000 conveying to them a garden land. An endorsement on Exhibit II shows that the debt then amounted to Rs. 6,311, and that the creditors remitted Rs. 1,511.

Now it has not been disputed that the original debt of Rs. 2,500 was incurred in satisfying a decree for the reconvey of money owed by Basappa. What has been urged is that Sugamma had plenty of property to maintain herself and her daughter who were the only surviving members of the family and to pay off this debt, without allowing the interest to accumulate and without selling any of the landed property. The evidence is that her property consisted of the garden land 20 acres in extent, 3 acres of wet land and some dry land. P. W. No. 1 assesses her income as follows:—from the garden land Rs. 600—1,100; from the wet land Rs. 150, 200; from the dry land Rs. 400. P. W. No. 2, one of the executors and purchasers, proves by accounts the income derived from the garden land for five years after the sale. The figures are Rs. 335 (for the first six months after the sale), Rs. 725, Rs. 300, Rs. 655 and Rs. 880 and the charges each year were Rs. 300 for assessment and Rs. 48 for a gardener. The evidence of P. W. No. 3 and D. W. No. 1 would show that the income from the wet land was about Rs. 150 and from the dry land about Rs. 100; it is perfectly fair argument that with this income Sugamma ought to have been able to pay the interest on Rs. 2,500, even if she could not save enough to pay off the principal, but before the sale can be treated as invalid against the reversioners it must be shown that she was guilty off something worse than mismanagement, considering the way in which the income from the garden varied under the presumably more efficient management of the purchasers. It is fair to suppose that in some years at least she would have had great difficulty in meeting the charges and there is no positive evidence to show that she was guilty of gross extravagance. I do not think it can be held that she unnecessarily burdened the estate. There is some evidence to show that she might have paid off the debt at once by cutting down and selling the cocoanut and mango trees in the garden land, but I do not think she can be blamed for not doing this, considering how unwilling any owner and particularly a Hindu would be to cut down fruit-bearing trees. When once the debt amounted to as much as Rs. 6,000 she had particularly no choice except between a usufructuary mortgage and a sale and she was not bound to choose the mortgage.

Two other arguments have been advanced against the sale. One is that Sugamma acted out of spite against the reversioners, but there is no evidence to prove this and the facts seem to me to show that she was very unwilling to sell the land. The other is that the sale was for a very low price and I shall deal with this later.

The next question is, whether plaintiff is entitled to treat the sale as a mortgage and to claim the right to redeem. His claim is based on an endorsement on Exhibit II which runs as follows:—

"Principal on the mortgage (Exhibit II) is Rs. 4,500, under accounts Rs. 50 are due. In all Rs. 4,550 due. Interest thereon Rs. 1,761. Total Rs. 6,311. The arrangement made this day is as follows:—

		Rs.
The price for which the sale-deed has been executed	...	4,000
Received from Sivanna	...	800
Excused	...	1,511
Total	...	6,311

The interest due from October up to this day is also excused. When we receive from you Rs. 4,000, we shall execute to you a re-conveyance for the land." This endorsement was signed by three of the four executors in whose favour the sale-deed was executed, the fourth being in Madras at the time.

Plaintiff wished to prove this endorsement and to adduce oral evidence to show that the transaction was really a mortgage and not an out-and-out sale. He was not allowed to do either, the Sub-Judge holding that the endorsement was inadmissible as being unregistered, and that section 91 of the Evidence Act precluded the admission of oral evidence. I give below a list of rulings quoted on both sides on those two points.

Mutha Venkatachalapati v. Pyanda Venkatachelapati (21); Uthandi Mudali v. Raghavachari (22); Abaji Annaji v. Laxman (23).

On the question of the admissibility of the endorsement on Exhibit II, apppellant's argument is that it merely creates a right to another document and so comes under the exception in section 17 (2) (v) of the Registration Act, and most of the rulings quoted by him are authorities for holding that such a document need not be registered. It has been admitted that such a document need not be registered, but the question is whether it can convert an out-and-out sale into a mortgage by conditional sale, or if it merely creates a right to another document. It has been held in Achutaramaraju v. Subbaraju (20) and in Mutha Venkatachelapati v. Pyanda Venkatachelapati (21) that all the documents, if there be more than one, which go to make a mortgage must be registered, and these rulings seem to me conclusive on the point. If the endorsement is to be taken as proof that the transaction was really a mortgage, though Exhibit I on its face purports to be a sale-deed, it does limit a right in immoveable property, and as such should have been registered. * * * * *

* * * It has also been argued that oral evidence should have been admitted for this purpose under section 99 of the Evidence Act on the ground the plaintiff is not the representative of Sugamma, but of her husband, Basappa. It is quite true that he claims as the heir of Basappa but in this particular case, where he seeks to take advantage of an agreement entered into with Sugamma, he must be considered to be her representative. If he is not her representative, he cannot claim under the agreement at all. He is not a third party, unless it is held that Sugamma's acts are not binding upon him.

The next question is whether the endorsement on Exhibit II can be proved for any other purpose. Here I shall deal with two arguments which seem to me to be connected; the first being that Sugamma sold the land for a very low price, and the second that the sale-deed and endorsement together form one bargain, and that defendant is not at liberty to reject one of them. Plaintiff's witnesses put down the value of the land at Rs. 7,000—8,000 and D. W. No. 4 at Rs. 6,000. D. W. No. 1, who is apparently an interested witness, says the land was not worth more than Rs. 4,000. It is practically admitted that the land is now worth a great deal more than Rs. 4,000, but it is also admitted that there has been a large rise in the value of land in the last few years. On the whole, I do not think that the evidence proves that the price given was so low that the sale would not be binding upon plaintiff, but it does raise a presumption that Sugamma may have accepted this price because the purchasers agreed to re-sell, and it is quite open to plaintiff to prove the endorsement in a suit for specific performance. The question remains whether plaintiff can claim specific performance in the present suit and I think he can. It is true that in the plaint he does not ask for specific performance, but assumes that the endorsement converts the sale-deed into a mortgage. One of the prayers, however, is for recovery of possession, and I do not think he should be forced to bring another suit for specific performance. The suit will have to be remanded for hearing on this question. As appellant did not press for an issue on this point' he will pay respondent's costs in this appeal."

"The suit has been remanded for further hearing and the following additional issues have been framed :—

(1) Can plaintiff compel defendant to perform specifically the contract embodied in Exhibit II ?

(2) Can plaintiff compel defendant to deliver possession of the suit properties on payment of Rs. 4,000 ?

In the suit plaintiff contended that he was not bound by a sale of the suit properties effected by a widow, Sugamma, o that the sale was converted into a mortgage by conditional sale by Exhibit II. The sale-deed was executed in favour of four of the five executors appointed by the Will of defendant's father and three of them have signed Exhibit II, which recites that the sale-deed and cash were taken in discharge of a debt due under a mortgage-bond and contains the following sentence :—"When we receive from you Rs. 4000, we shall execute to you a re-conveyance for the land." This is the contract which plaintiff seeks to enforce against defendant, who was a minor at the time Exhibit II was executed.

(3) The first question is, whether the fact that defendant was a minor bars a suit for specific performance. Defendant's Vakil relies on the rulings of Waghela Rajsanji v. Sheikh Masludin (24) and Maharana Shri Ranmalsingji v. Vadilal Vakhalchand (25), as deciding that a minor cannot be bound personally by contracts entered into by his guardian. Plaintiff's Vakil contends that executors appointed by a Will have a larger power than an ordinary guardian, and he quotes in support of his argument section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) and section 28 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890). * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * In Maharana Shri Ranmalsingji v. Vadilal Vakhalchand (25), it is expressly stated that a guardian appointed by a Will has no higher power in this respect than any other guardian, and that a Will which purported to give such power would probably be ultra vires. The Will in the present case, Exhibit A, gives the executors very wide powers in dealing with the testator's property, but with respect to the minor it only authorises them to protect him and to arrange for his education and marriage. There seems to be two classes of cases in which a minor may be held liable, one, when a debt is incurred for necessaries and the other, when a valid charge is made on his estate. There is no question of necessity in the present case, and the contract can only be enforced if it comes under the second class. In most of the cases in which this subject has been dealt with the question, whether a charge upon a minor's estate is valid or not, has been decided by seeing whether it was made for a necessary purpose or for some reason which would inevitably bind the minor when he came of age, but in the leading case Hunoomanpersaud Pandey v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (26) it is laid down that a charge may be for the benefit of the estate. In the present case, then, the contract must satisfy two conditions :—It must bind the minor's estate and it must be for the benefit of that estate. But before discussing this I will deal with an objection which has been raised, on the ground that all the executors did not join in the contract.

(4) There were five executors appointed under the Will and the Will recites that "all matters are to be conducted according to the opinion of the majority of the agents" (or executors). The contract was signed by only three of the executors and of the others, one was in Madras and the other had been convicted of an offence and was in prison. The one who was in prison may be ignored, as he had been convicted of an offence which would probably be considered sufficiently serious to justify his removal. The other was only temporarily absent, but he took no part in the discussion and when he was examined as a witness (D. W. No. 3) in the suit he said that he would not have agreed to the contract to reconvey the land, if he had been consulted. It is a fair inference from the terms of the Will that the words "opinion of the majority" mean that all the executors should take part in forming the opinion, and there are no words empowering a majority of the executors to act apart from the others. I think the contract would be invalid for this reason.

(5) Even supposing that the contract is not invalid for this reason, I do not think it satisfies the two conditions mentioned above; plaintiff's case is that it was an essential condition of the sale and that Sugamma would not have agreed to sell the land, if the executors had not bound themselves to reconvey it to her. The sale was certainly beneficial to defendant's estate, but it does not follow that the executors were entitled to enter into this contract for this reason. The only reason which would justify the contract would be that without it, it would not have been possible to arrange a satisfactory discharge of Sugamma's debt to the estate. Now there is some evidence to show that the contract was one of the reasons which induced Sugamma to execute the sale-deed, but it certainly has not been proved that she insisted on the contract as a condition precedent, or that the executors would not have enforced payment of the debt in any other way. On the contrary they seem to have been quite as anxious to be generous to Sugamma as to be fair to their ward. They remitted Rs. 1,500 of the debt unconditionally, besides binding themselves to reconvey the land. Now a great deal was said about the price given for the land, Rs. 4,000, being much below its real value and this has been used as an argument to prove that the contract to reconvey was a necessary condition of the sale, but the fact that so large an amount was remitted must also be taken into account. If the land which was security for the debt was really worth so much more than Rs. 4,000, a contract to reconvey the land without insisting on the payment of the amount remitted was neither necessary nor for the benefit of defendant's estate. Then there is the question whether the contract binds the estate and the answer to this must, I think, be in the negative.

(24) 11 B. 551; 14 I. A. 89.
(25) 20 B. 61.

(26) 6 M. I. A. 393; 18 W. R. 81*n*; Sevestre 253*n*; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 29; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 552; 19 E. R. 147.

(6). I have found that the contract was not a necessary condition of the sale, and if it was to bind the estate, Exhibit II should have been registered as it would have affected an interest in immoveable property. I find that plaintiff is not entitled to obtain specific performance and I dismiss the suit with costs."

Mr. V. Ramesam, for Mr. S. Rangaňadha Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Venkatarayaliah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We do not think that under the Will which required everything to be done in accordance with the opinion of the majority of the executors, three executors could bind the estate by a contract entered into by them without reference to the others. This is the rule where a majority of trustees have power to act. See Kumban v. Moorthi (27), and we see no reason why the same principle should not apply to a majority of executors authorised to act under a Will. We do not think section 92 of the Probate and Administration Act has any application as it is overridden by the express provisions of the Will to which it is made subject.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 201—Recorded co-sharer declared by Civil Court as having no title—Suit for profits by such co-sharer—Pending decision of suit his name expunged from Revenue papers—Presumption of s. 201, applicability of.

A recorded co-sharer in a village was declared by a Civil Court to have no title as such. Pending an application for correction of the Revenue Records in conformity with the Civil Court's declaration he sued for profits as a co-sharer but before this suit was decided the Revenue papers were corrected and his name was expunged:

Second appeal from a decicion of the Additional District Judge, Meerut, dated the 12th December 1913.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for their share of profits for the year 1318 and 1319. It appears that during these years the plaintiffs were recorded as co-sharers, but before the institution of this suit a suit had been brought in the Civil Court which decided that the plaintiffs had no title and that they were not co-sharers although they were recorded as such. In accordance with the decision of the Civil Court an application was made for the correction of the entry in the Revenue papers and for the removal of the names of the plaintiffs from the list of co-sharers. It was during the pendency of this application that the present suit was brought. Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit and in our opinion rightly. The learned Counsel for the appellants relies upon section 201 of the Agra Tenancy Act and contends that as at the date of the suit the plaintiffs were recorded as co-sharers, there was a presumption in their favour under the section that they were co-sharers and were entitled to profits. He also relies on the decision of the Full Bench in Durga Prashad v. Hazari Singh (1). In our opinion this case is clearly met by the observations made by the learned Chief Justice in his judgment in the Full Bench case referred to above. At page 807 of the report he says: "In very extreme cases where it is clear that there has been some mistake in the record, it would, I think, be open to the Revenue Court to postpone the decision of the case to give the defendant an opportunity of making an application in the Revenue Court to have the entry corrected." In this case as we have said above, an application had already been made for the correction of the entry. A Civil Court had already decided in favour of the defendants and against the plaintiff's title and before the case was decided, the entry of the names of the plaintiffs in the Revenue papers was corrected and their names were expunged. Therefore, it seems to us that this is not a case in which the plaintiffs can claim the presumption of section 201 of the Tenancy Act. Under that section, if effect was given to the presumption, the defendants' remedy would be to bring a suit in the Civil Court. In the present instance a suit had already been brought and a decree obtained negativing the plaintiffs' title. Their names were expunged before the decree in the suit was passed. Therefore, section 201 would be of no avail to the plaintiffs. We might point out that in the case of Bhawani Singh v. Dilawar Khan (2), it was held that when as between the parties to a Revenue suit, a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction has decided the title to the property adversely to the plaintiff who claims profits, the Revenue Court is not competent to ignore that decision. This ruling also governs the present case. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 107A, applicability of—Land held at favourable rate of rent—Grant.

Section 107A of the Oudh Rent Act does not apply to such lands as are held not under a grant, but in which the rate of rent is accidentally favourable to the tenant. [p. 511, col. 1.]

Second appeal from an order of the Additional Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 10th October 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Fyzabad District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—Two points are urged: one is that there is no evidence to support the finding of the lower Courts that the rent recorded in the patwari's papers was not rent agreed to by the landholders. This is outside the grounds of appeal, and there is certainly some evidence to support the finding. The other argument raised is that it is not necessary for the rent to be at a favourable rate by deliberate concession to come within the scope of the Resumption Chapter: in other words, I am asked to overrule Selected Decision No. 5 of 1909 read with the Board's decision in Chaudhri Shafiq-uz-Zaman v. Tasadduk Husain (1), which has been followed in other cases by the Board. It is urged that the Selected Decision No. 3 of 1911 is inconsistent with this decision, as it lays down that section 107A applies to all land held rent free and there is no need to produce evidence of any specific grant, and that the same principle should be applied to land held at a favourable rate of rent. There is a possible distinction between the two cases. If we hold that section 107A applies to all land held at a favourable rate of rent and that there is no need to produce evidence of any specific grant, a difficulty arises as to the interpretation of the words "favourable rate of rent." So far as grants are concerned, section 107-I defines these words, but it does not define them when there is no grant of land at a favourable rate of rent, and there are reasons against extending the definition to lands, held not under a grant, but in which the rate of rent may be accidentally favourable to the tenant. I am not prepared at present to differ from the Selected Decision which directly governs the case, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The City Civil Judge rightly followed the decisions in Hanumanthaiyan v. Meenatchi Naidu (1) and Srinivasa Swami Aiyangar v. Athmarama Iyer(2), in refusing to recognize any right to subrogate in the 6th defendant, whose money went only in partial discharge of the prior mortgage, and in refusing to recognize as valid the alleged oral release by the prior mortgagee of his rights over the property purchased by the 6th defendant. The decision, Appeal No. 295 of 1913, quoted by Mr. S. Rangaswamy Aiyangar for the appellant, does not dissent from the decision in Hanumanthaiyan v. Meenatchi Naidu (1). It is argued, however, that on the facts found by the District Judge in that case, Appeal No. 295 of 1913, the learned Judges could not have given a decree for the appellant (11th defendant) in that case, unless they held that the first mortgage need not have been fully discharged on the date of the payment by the appellant of the Rs. 920 to enable him to claim priority to the extent of that Rs. 920.

We cannot assume that the learned Judges accepted the facts and dates as mentioned in the District Judge's judgment in that case, as the judgment of the learned Judges does not say so.

Where the parties to a suit compromise, all that the Court is required to do under Order XXIII, rule 3, of Civil Procedure Code, is to ascertain that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful compromise, and to put the fact on record. It is not necessary that a sulehnamah on stamped paper should be filed.

Application for revision from an order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 12th November 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Azamgarh District.

JUDGMENT.—I see no reason to interfere with the Commissioner's order.

All that the Assistant Collector had to do under rule 3, Order XXIII, Civil Procedure Code, was to satisfy himself that the suit had been adjusted by a lawful agreement or compromise and to put the fact on record. It was not necessary for a sulehnamah to be filed on stamped paper. He might, and practically did, take the statement of the parties' representatives to the effect that the case was to be withdrawn on defendant contracting to pay rent in future at Rs. 9.

This was ample as a record, and evidently satisfied the Court which might have passed a decree accordingly, but waited for a more formal compromise to be filed.

There was no justification for appellant afterwards resiling. I uphold the Commissioner's order and reject this application with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para 16—Award—Application to set aside award dismissed—Decree—Appeal, maintainability of.

There is no right of appeal against a decree passed upon an award of arbitrators after dismissal of an application to set it aside.

Appeal against an order of the District Court of Bellary, in Original Suit No. 25 of 1911 (Original Petition No. 229 of 1911).

Messrs. J. C. Adam and M. Govindarajulu Naidu, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Viswanadha Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The preliminary objection must be upheld, namely, that under Schedule II, paragraph 16, clause (2), Civil Procedure Code, no appeal lies from the decree framed on a judgment pronounced by the Court according to the award of arbitrators, after the Court had refused an application to set aside that award as invalid.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

We are asked by the appellant's learned Counsel to set aside the award treating the appeal as a petition in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. His contention is that the District Court had no jurisdiction to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration even by the consent of parties. He relies in support of this contention on the case in Ghellabhai Atmaram v. Nandu Bai (1);

In the first place, we are not clear that the observations relied on from the judgment in Ghellabhai Atmaram v. Nandu Bai(1), which appear to be obiter dicta, have not been couched by that Court in too wide terms. In the second place, the contention that the District Court had no jurisdiction to refer the dispute to arbitration was not taken in the lower Court or even in the grounds of the appeal petition sought to be converted into a revision petition. In the third place it is a matter of discretion in this Court to interfere in revision under section 115, and as we are not satisfied that substantial justice has not been done between the parties by the order of the District Court. We do not think that it is a fit case for interference in revision.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—On the 21st November 1913, during the early hours of the morning, in execution of a warrant issued by the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet, a search was made of a room, rented and occupied by one Sasankasekhar Hazra, alias Amritalal Hazra, at 296-1, Upper Circular Road, in the eastern suburbs of Calcutta. The search warrant authorised the Commisioner of Police to search the premises for explosives, letters, and documents in connection with a bomb outrage committed at Moulvi Bazar on the 27th March 1913. At the search, the Police arrested Sasankasekhar Hazra as also three other persons, Dinesh Chandra Das Gupta, Chandrasekhar De and Sarada Charan Guha, who were found asleep inside the room. The Police found in the room various articles and papers, and amongst others, a tobacco-tin fitted with three iron discs (two inside and one outside) and four iron clamps, another tin of similar size, four clamps made to fit the second tin, and other discs and clamps, finished and unfinished. According to the prosecution, these articles were made for use as the envelope or shell of a lethal bomb. On the 23rd November, J. N. Ghose, the Police officer to whom the warrant had been endorsed for execution, gave the first information, in which it was alleged that the four persons arrested had committed offences under sections 4 and 5 of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908. On the 26th November, the District Magistrate transferred the case for disposal to Mr. Veitch. On the 6th December, one Kalipada Ghose, alias Upendralal Rai Chaudhuri, was arrested in College Street with ten copies of a seditious leaflet called Liberty leaflet, of which two were on pink paper and the other eight on white paper. On the 26th January 1914, one Khagendranath Chaudhuri, alias Sures Chandra Chaudhuri, was arrested in a house at Baranagore in the northern suburbs of Calcutta. Meanwhile, search warrants had been executed in various places and information gathered as to the antecedents of the persons in custody. The original proceedings, commenced on the 23rd November, were then withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor under section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, and the four persons arrested on the 21st November were discharged on the 19th January 1914. At the same time, a fresh complaint was made in which Sasanka, Dines, Sarada, Chandrasekhar Kalipada and Khagen, along with one Hiranmoy Banerji, who had been, in the interval, arrested at Benares, were charged under sections 4, 5 and 6 of the Explosive Substances Act as also under section 120B of the Indian Penal Code. The consent of the Local Government required by section 7 of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, was also duly obtained. The Magistrate held that the case against Hiranmoy Banerji had not been established and discharged him. The other six accused were committed to take their trial in the Court of Session. The first charge against them was to the effect that Sasanka, Dines, Sarada and Chandrasekhar, on or about the 21st November 1913, at 296-1, Upper Circular Road, had in their possession or under their control explosive substances, to wit, Exhibits I, V, VI, VII, and other exhibits, all materials for the creation of bombs, with intent by means thereof to endanger life, and had thereby committed an offence punishable under section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908. The second charge was to the effect that Sasanka, Dines, Sarada, Chandrasekhar, Kalipada, and Khagendra, between March 1911 and 21st November 1913, at 296-1, Upper Circular Road, and other places in British India, had conspired, with one another and other persons, to wit, Biroja, Satischandra Chakrabarti, Bhupendranath Sen, Praphullaranjan Gupta, Jogeschandra Roy, Nirmal Kanta Roy and other persons, to make and keep explosive substances, with intent by means thereof to endanger life or enable other persons to endanger life, an offence punishable under section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, and had thereby committed an offence punishable under section 120B of the Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge, after an elaborate trial with the aid of Assessors, with whose opinion he disagreed, except in the case of Khagendra, came to the conclusion that Sasanka, Dines, Sarada and Chandrasekhar were guilty under section 4 of Act VI of 1908, and that Sasanka, Kalipada, Dines, Sarada and Chandrasekhar were guilty under section 120B, Indian Penal Code. Under section 4 of Act VI of 1908, he sentenced Sasanka to transportation for fifteen years and each of the other three, Dines, Sarada and Chandrasekhar, to transportation for ten years. Under section 120B, Indian Penal Code, he sentenced Sasanka, Kalipada, Dines, Sarada and Chandrasekhar each to transportation for ten years. He further directed the sentences under the two sections to run concurrently. As regards Khagendra he accepted the opinions of the Assessors and acquitted him. Against the order of the Sessions Judge, five appeals have been preferred, one by each of the accused persons who has been convicted. Another appeal has been preferred by the Crown against the acquittal of Khagendra. A Rule has also been obtained by the Crown for enhancement of the sentences upon the five accused who have been convicted by the Sessions Judge. The appeals and the Rule have been exhaustively argued in this Court during 32 days, and the questions of law and fact which arise therein have been discussed from every conceivable point of view. Since the close of the arguments, we have again minutely scrutinised the papers on the record, and we now proceed to record our decision.

On behalf of the five accused who have been convicted, the order of the Sessions Judge has been assailed as contrary to law and to the evidence on the record. We shall first examine the grounds upon which the legality of the trial has been called in question. But before we do so, it is necessary to set out the relevant portions of the sections under which the accused have been convicted.

Section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, is in these terms:—

"Any person who unlawfully and maliciously makes, or has in his possession or under his control, any explosive substance with intent by means thereof to endanger life, or cause serious injury to property in British India, or to enable any other person by means thereof to endanger life or cause serious injury to property in British India, shall, whether any explosion does or does not take place, and whether any injury to person or property has been acutally caused or not, be punished with transportation for a term which may extend to twenty years, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, to which fine may be added."

Section 120A, which was introduced into the Indian Penal Code by Act VIII of 1913, is in these terms:—

"When two or more persons agree to do, or cause to be done, (1) an illegal act, or (2) an act, which is not illegal, by illegal means, such an agreement is designated a criminal conspiracy:

"Provided that no agreement except an agreement to commit an offence shall amount to a criminal conspiracy, unless some act, besides the agreement, is done by one or more parties to such agreement in pursuance thereof.

"Explanation:—It is immaterial whether the illegal act is the ultimate object of such agreement, or is merely incidental to that object."

Section 120B provides the punishment for criminal conspiracy.

In the first place, it has been argued on behalf of the accused, that the charge under section 4 (b) of Act VI of 1908 is materially defective, inasmuch as it omits to state, first, that the accused were in possession of explosive substances or had them under their control, "unlawfully and maliciously", and secondly, that it was the intent of the accused to endanger life in "British India." In our opinion, the defects in this charge have not vitiated the trial and conviction, and that the case is covered by section 225 and by clause (a) of section 537, Criminal Procedure Code. It is worthy of note that the objection was not taken before the Sessions Judge, and regard must be had to this circumstance to determine whether the omissions mentioned have in fact occasioned a failure of justice. An accused is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact value of the charge brought against him, for, unless he has this knowledge, he may be seriously prejudiced in his defence. In the present case, the law and the section of the law against which the offence is alleged to have been committed, were specifically mentioned in the charge, as required by clause (4) of section 221, Criminal Procedure Code; and under clause (5), the fact that the charge was made was equivalent to a statement that every legal condition required by law to constitute the offence charged was fulfilled in the particular case. The accused fully understood the nature of the offence with which they were charged and had clearly not been prejudiced by the omissions. The view we take is in accord with that adopted in Reg. v. Munslow (1) where Lord Russell, C. J., observed that it would be a deplorable, if not an absurd, state of the law if such an omission could not be cured by verdict. The first objection must consequently be overruled.

In the second place, it has been contended that the charge under section 120B, Indian Penal Code, is bad, because it does not specify the explosive substance which, it is alleged, the accused had conspired with one another and with other persons to make and keep. The substance of the argument is that to make and keep explosive substances generally is not an offence, which, it is contended, means, according to section 4, clause (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, "an act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force," and, according to the second paragraph of section 40, Indian Penal Code, denotes "a thing punishable under that Code or under any special or local law" as defined in sections 41 and 42. Reference has also been made to section 10 of the Indian Evidence Act, where the expression is used, "two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence or an actionable wrong." Reliance has been placed in support of the contention of the accused on the decisions in Rex v. Biers (2), Reg. v. Parker (3), O'Connell v. Reg. (4), Rex v. Mason (5), Reg. v. Mackenzie (6). Stress has also been laid upon the cases of Behari Mahton v. Queen-Empress (7) and Poresh Nath Sircar v. Emperor (8). We are unable to accept as well-founded the contention of the accused that where the illegal act, charged under section 120B, is the unlawful and malicious possession of explosive substances within the meaning of section 4 of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, it is essential to specify in the charge the explosive substances which the accused have conspired to have in their possession or under their control. It is indisputable that a person may be guilty of criminal conspiracy, even though the illegal act which he has agreed to do or caused to be done, has not been done. As was observed by Cleasby, B., in Reg. v. Hibbert (9), conspiracy differs from other charges in this respect, that in other charges the intention to do a criminal act is not a crime of itself, until something is done amounting to the doing or attempting to do some act, to carry out that intention ; conspiracy, on the other hand, consists simply in the agreement or confederacy to do some act, no matter whether it is done or not. We very often get facts sufficient to establish the guilt of parties to a conspiracy other than acts which have been done in pursuance of it. Baron Cleasby then gives an example: "There may be a conspiracy to set fire to London at different places at once, and that conspiracy may be fully proved, though no part of London has in fact been set on fire, inasmuch as the crime of conspiracy consists only in the agreement or confederacy to do an illegal act by legal means or a legal act by illegal means": Quinn v. Leathem (10). Reference may also be made to the decision in Reg. v. Most (11), where it was ruled that the accused who had published an inflamatory article in a newspaper not addressed to any individual, in which he recommended the murder not of any specified individual but of crowned or uncrowned heads of States from Constantinople to Washington, was guilty of misdemeanour under section 4 of 24 and 25 Vict., c. 100. If the contention of the accused in the case before us were well-founded, there could be no prosecution for a conspiracy to commit murders or dacoities till a murder or a dacoity had been actually committed in pursuance of the conspiracy, though it might be conclusively proved that the conspiracy had been formed, even before a single overt act was done. The gist of the offence is in the conspiracy or agreement, and if the offence goes no further, it may not be possible to say what murders or dacoities it is proposed to commit, or, in a case such as that before us, what particular explosives the accused intend to obtain [See Russell on Crimes, 1909, Volume I, page 187, foot-note (g)]. The decisions to which our attention has been drawn do not assist the contention of the accused. In Rex v. Biers (2) the objection to the indictment was upheld on the ground that it misrecited an Act of Parliament (2 Hawkins P. C. Bk. II, Chap. XXV, section 104). Rex v. Mason (5) is an authority for the proposition that an indictment for obtaining propert by a false pretence must not only expressly allege that the pretence was false but also set out the false pretence sufficiently: Reg. v. Oates(12), Reg. v. Henshaw (13). But it is worthy of note that although an indictment, which omits to set out the particular false pretence alleged, is held bad where the objection is taken before verdict, if no such objection is taken and there is a verdict of guilty on such an indictment, the defect is deemed cured by verdict: Reg. v. Goldsmith (14), Heymann v. Reg. (15). It is further well-settled that it is not necessary to set out the false pretences in an indictment for a conspiracy to obtain goods by false pretences or for receiving goods obtained by false pretences; in other words, that the indictment in all cases of conspiracy must, in the first place, charge the conspiracy, but that in stating the object of the conspiracy the same degree of certainty is not required as in an indictment for the offence conspired to be committed [Rex v. Gill (16), Reg. v. Kenrick (17), Reg. v. Blake (18), Sydserff v. Reg. (19), Reg. v. Gompertz (20), Reg. v. Aspinall (21), Taylor v. Reg.(22)]. Reg. v. Parker (3) is an authority only for the proposition that where the indictment charged the accused with conspiracy to obtain by false pretences divers goods and merchandise, the prosecutor was bound to state whose the goods and merchandise were, as otherwise he might make an indefinite statement and lie in wait for whatever might come out in the evidence. In O'Connell v. Reg. (4), Tindal, C. J., observed as follows:—"The crime of conspiracy is complete, if two. or more than two, should agree to do an illegal thing, that is, to effect something in itself unlawful, or to effect by unlawful means something which in itself may be indifferent or even lawful....It has accordingly been always held to be the law, that the gist of the offence of conspiracy is the bare engagement and association to break the law, whether any act be done in pursuance thereof by the conspirators or not." The Lord Chief Justice then proceeded to state, with reference to two of the counts to which exception had been taken, that in the opinion of the Judges those counts did not state the illegal purpose and design of the agreement entered into between the defendants with such proper and sufficient certainty, as to lead to the necessary conclusion that it was an agreement to do an act in violation of the law. The act imputed to the defendants was "intimidation", and with reference thereto, the Lord Chief Justice observed that as the word was not a technical term, not vocabulum artis, having a necessary meaning in a bad sense, it was essential to make clear from the context what species of fear was intended or upon whom such fear was intended to operate. This view was confirmed by the House of Lords. Lord Campbell observed that the counts of the indictment which stated generally conspiracies to effect changes in the Government and repeal of the legislative union by intimidation and display of physical force were bad, because they gave the defendants no information of the specific offences which they had to answer. In Reg. v. Mackenzie (6), where a person was prosecuted under section 7, 38 and 39 Vict., Chap. 6, for intimidating another person with a view to compel him to abstain from doing an act which that other person had a legal right to do, it was held that the conviction was bad, as the summons did not set out the particular acts alleged to be illegal. The cases reviewed are clearly distinguishable and do not support the contention that when the illegal act contemplated by section 120A, Indian Penal Code, is the possession of explosive substances under section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, it is essential to specify in the charge the particular substance which the accused have conspired to make or have in their possession or under their control. There is, further, plainly no analogy between the case before us and the class of cases of which Behari Mahton v. Queen-Empress (7) and Poresh Nath Sircar v. Emperor (8) may be taken as the types, where it has been ruled that the charge in a prosecution for unlawful assembly must specify the common object. We are clearly of opinion that the conspiracy charge is not open to objection on the ground that it does not specify the explosive substances for the preparation or possession whereof the alleged conspiracy was formed. We observe, however, that the charge does not follow the language of section 4 (b) of Act VI of 1908, and uses the expression "make and keep" explosive substances, while it omits the expression "unlawfully and maliciously" and "British India." It is a wholesome rule that the Court should adhere to the language of the Statute, as far as practicable, when a charge is drawn up; nothing is gained by a paraphrase, while opportunity is afforded to the accused to take exception to the form of the charge. We hold accordingly that there is no force in the second contention, which must accordingly be overruled.

It has been argued, in the third place, that the conspiracy charge under section 120B, Indian Penal Code, is bad, inasmuch as it assigns a wrong date for the commencement of the period during which the conspiracy charged against the accused lasted. The charge specified the period as contained between March 1911 and the 21st November 1913. It is pointed out that sections 120A and 120B did not find a place in the Indian Penal Code before the 27th March 1913, when Act VIII of 1913 became law. It is obvious that the period should have been restricted between the dates 27th March and 21st November 1913. Under section 222 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, particulars as to the time of the alleged offence were necessary, and the prosecution should have been careful in this respect. No objection to the charge on this ground was, however, taken at the trial till a very late stage of the proceedings, in fact, only in the course of the final arguments, and the error cannot be deemed to have affected the legality of the trial. No doubt, the accused cannot be convicted, unless the prosecution establishes that the accused were members of the conspiracy after the 27th March 1913, but this involves an investigation of the merits of the case. The third ground thus turns out to be unsubstantial and must be overruled.

In the fourth place, the legality of the trial has been questioned on the ground of misjoinder of charges. The substance of the argument is that while four of the accused persons are charged with an offence under section 4 (b) of Act VI of 1908, all the six accused are charged with conspiracy under section 120B, Indian Penal Code, and it is contended that a joint trial of all these persons for the two offences charged is illegal, on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Subrahmania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (23). It cannot be disputed that if misjoinder of charges is established, the trial must be deemed illegal, because held contrary to an express provision of the law relating to the mode of trial. The real question in controversy is, whether there has been a misjoinder of charges in the case before us. On behalf of the accused, it has been contended that the same individual cannot be simultaneously charged with an offence as also with conspiracy to commit that offence, and much less can he be tried jointly with other persons alleged to be his co-conspirators. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon King-Emperor v. Tirumal Reddi (24). This decision is, however, of no real assistance to the accused; it is an authority only for the proposition that a man cannot be cumulatively charged with the commission of an offence as also of abetment by conspiracy or otherwise of the very same offence; it is, besides, a decision given before section 120B, Indian Penal Code, was enacted. In our opinion, the legality of the trial in the present case must be determined with reference to the language of section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which, so far as it is relevant to the question before us, is in these terms: "when more persons than one are accused of different offences committed in the same transaction, they may be charged or tried together or separately as the Court thinks fit." No useful purpose would be served by an elaborate examination of the judicial decision in which the expression "same transaction" has been interpreted, although reference has been made at the Bar to many of the recent cases on the point: Queen-Empress v. Fakirapa (25); Emperor v. Sharufalli (26); Emperor v. Jethalal Harlochand (27); Emperor v. Datto Hanmant (28); Emperor v. Hari Raot (29); Emperor v. Ganesh Narayan (30); Nga Tha Gyi v. Emperor (31); Ishar Das v. Emperor (32); Emperor v. Ghulam (33); Pulin Behary Das v. Emperor (34) and Choragudi v. Emperor (35). It is not possible to frame a comprehensive formula of universal application to determine whether two or more acts constitute the same transaction; but circumstances which must bear on the determination of the question in an individual case may be easily indicated; they are, proximity of time, unity or proximity of place, continuity of action and community of purpose or design. To take one illustration: A and B conspire to cheat X; in pursuance of that conspiracy and in fulfilment of its object A cheats X on a specific occasion. The position may clearly be maintained that the two different offences of conspiracy to cheat committed by A and B and the offence of cheating committed by A alone, have been committed in the same transaction. This view is in accord with that adopted in two recent decisions of this Court, from which we see no reason to dissent in this respect: Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v. Manmohan Roy (36) and Harsha Nath Chatterjee v. Emperor (37). We hold accordingly that if A, B and C conspire to make or have in possession or under control an explosive substance within the meaning of the Explosive Substances Act, and if in pursuance of such conspiracy, A makes or has in his possession or under his control an explosive substance, they may, if the Court thinks fit, be charged and tried together under section 120B, Indian Penal Code, and section 4 (b) of Act VI of 1908. The fourth ground must accordingly be overruled as unsustainable.

The fifth ground on which the legality of the trial is questioned, is that persons who are alleged to be conspirators in the charge have not been prosecuted, although their names and addresses were known to the prosecution. Reference has, in this connection, been made to Emperor v. Lalit Mohan (Noni Gopal) (38), where it was ruled by Jenkins, C. J., that in a conspiracy case the accused can be charged with conspiracy with persons unknown, but that if they are charged with conspiracy with persons known, then such persons must be named in the charge. It is not necessary for our present purpose to determine whether the rule so stated is not too widely formulated; but it may be observed that a different view has sometimes been maintained. Thus, in Rex v. Stoddart (39), the legality of a conviction for conspiracy was questioned on the ground that though the prosecution knew that one Klinge was an alleged conspirator, he was not named in the indictment. In support of this objection, reliance was placed on Rex v. Walker (40), Reg. v. Thompson (41) and Rex v. Robinson (42), but it was overruled by the Court of Criminal Appeal. That judicial opinion on the point has not been quite uniform is obvious from an examination of the cases mentioned, as also Rex v. Deakin (43), Reg. v. Campbell (44), Reg. v. Stroud (45), Reg. v. Caspar (46), Rex v. Bush (47), R g. v. Esdaile (48); 2 East, Pleas of the Crown, 651, 781; I Chitty on Criminal Law, 213; Russell on Crimes, (1909) 186, 187, 1292, 1478. The question has also been the subject of elaborate discussion in the Courts of the United States. In People v. Mather (49), the charge of the indictment was of a conspiracy to abduct William Morgan, who was supposed to have revealed the secrets of the Masonic fraternity. The indictment was of Mather alone and the charge of the indictment was that Mather with "other persons unknown" had conspired, etc., although it was a fact that many of the other persons were well known. The Court held, on the authority of Reg. v. Herne (50), mentioned in the case of Rex v. Kinnersley and Moore (51), and Anonymous case (52), that the indictment against Mather alone was good; there was a conviction and a new trial was denied. Marcy, J., observed: "In a charge of conspiracy, it seems no more necessary to specify the names of the defendant's co-adjutors than in an indictment for an assault and battery to name others besides the accused who were concerned in the trespass." The view thus taken in People v. Mather (49) was approved in People v. Richards (53) and United States v. Miller (54). Let us assume, however, that the strict rule formulated in Emperor v. Lalit Mohan (Noni Gopal) (38) is well-founded on principle and is supported by balance of authorities; that rule is clearly of no assistance to the accused in this case. That decision does not show that if all the known co-conspirators named in the charge are not placed on their trial, the trial of some without the others is vitiated. It is, indeed open to the Court to place the co-conspirators on their trial separately: Rex v. Kinnersely and Moore (51); Rex v. Oxford (55); Rex v. Nichols (56); Reg. v. Ahearne (57); People v. Richards (53); United States v. Miller (54), Russell on Crimes, (1909) 149, 180; 3 Chitty on Criminal Law, 1141; Bishop on New Criminal Procedure, Volume I, sections 464, 1022, Volume II, section 225; Mc Clain on Criminal Law, Volume II, section 981. This might, in certain circumstances, be an obvious advantage to the persons actually placed on trial; they would be at liberty, if they so desired, to call the alleged co-conspirators as witnesses, a course which could not possibly be adopted, if all the co-conspirators were tried jointly. But it has been argued that if persons are allowed to be named as co-conspirators in the charge and are yet not placed on their trial, there may be an inducement to the prosecution to mention the names of persons as co-conspirators indiscriminately, with a view to let in evidence under section 10 of the Indian Evidence Act, which would otherwise be inadmissible. This apprehension is, in our opinion, groundless, for whenever evidence is attempted to be made admissible under that section, the defence is entitled to insist on strict compliance with its provisions, namely, upon proof of reasonable ground for belief that the persons named have conspired together. We are unable to hold accordingly that the omission of the prosecution to proceed against the alleged conspirators in this case has vitiated the trial of the other persons. The fifth ground, consequently, fails.

The sixth ground on which the legality of the trial has been assailed is that the facts disclosed, if believed, indicate that the accused have committed an offence punishable under section 121A, Indian Penal Code, and should have been tried accordingly. The contention in substance is that the prosecution has been commenced under section 120B, Indian Penal Code, and section 4 (b) of Act VI of 1908, with a view to evade the requirements of section 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code, compliance wherewith, as was ruled in Barindra Kumar v. Emperor (58), is imperative in prosecutions for offences against the State. In our opinion, there is no basis for this contention. No doubt, evidence has been adduced on behalf of the prosecution to show that revolutionary literature was in possession of some of the accused persons; no foundation, however, has been laid to establish that the accused had conspired to commit an offence punishable under section 121A, Indian Penal Code. But even if it be assumed that the accused could have been successfully prosecuted under section 121A, it does not follow that it was obligatory upon the Crown to prosecute them under that section. If the accused have committed an offence under section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, in pursuance of a criminal conspiracy, it is open to the Crown to prosecute them for such offences, irrespective of the question of the ultimate design of the alleged conspiracy. On the other hand, the accused might legitimately contend that the trial should proceed strictly on the lines of the charges framed and that evidence, such as would have been appropriate to support a charge under section 121A, should not be admitted in the disguise of evidence in support of a prosecution under section 120B. The sixth ground must thus be overruled as untenable. We shall now proceed to examine the merits of the case.

The fundamental question on the merits, which has led to protracted discussion in this Court as in the Court below, relates to the true nature of Exhibits I, V, VI and VII. On behalf of the prosecution, the view has been maintained that these Exhibits constitute materials for the preparation of bombs, while, on behalf of the accused, the theory has been vigorously supported that these articles were used by Sasanka in experiments towards the construction of a cheap acetylene generator. In support of their position, the prosecution have adduced in evidence specimens of bombs, exploded and unexploded, for instance, the Dalhousie Square bomb, dated the 2nd March 1911, the Midnapore bomb, dated the 13th December 1912, the Delhi bomb thrown at the Viceroy on the 23rd December 1912, the Moulvi Bazar bomb, dated the 27th March 1913, the Lahore bomb, dated the 17th May 1913, the Mymensingh bomb, dated the 30th September 1913, and the Bhadreswar bomb, dated the 31st December 1913. Of these, the bombs mentioned first and last did not explode and are practically intact, although the explosive substances contained therein have been removed; all the other bombs exploded and caused destruction of life. The bombs which have been exhibited are obviously all of the same type, and there is expert testimony to this effect. Colonel Muspratt Williams says that the design of these bombs is the work of one controlling mind—not that they had necessarily been made by one man. He adds that he had never met with a bomb of a similar construction before his examination of the series of bombs exhibited in this case. Major Turner says that the series of bombs from Dalhousie Square to Bhadreswar all belong to the same family and that he had never before come across this kind of bomb. The system adopted appears to have been to use for the shell of the bomb a tin of the kind in which tobacco, cigarettes, or condensed milk is sold, and with it to use iron discs and iron clamps. Exhibit I is made up of a similar tin, similar discs and similar clamps. Exhibits V and VI taken together make up another complete shell of a bomb, which consists of a tin case with three discs and four clamps. The total aggregates to 2 tins, 11 discs, 8 completed clamps and several others in various stages of preparation. The similarity of these articles to the tins, discs and clamps actually used in the bombs exhibited is remarkable and is calculated to strike the intelligent observer, without the aid of expert testimony. Two points of difference, however, have been emphasised on behalf of the defence. It has been argued, in the first place, that whereas the discs found in the room of Sasanka were made of ordinary iron, the discs used in the bombs exhibited were, in some instances, at least, made of galvanised iron. With reference to this circumstance, it has been contended that discs so made could not be used for the purpose of a bomb, as an explosion would take place as soon as the discs came into contact with picric acid. The obvious answer is that, as in the case of the bombs exhibited, these discs, before they could be used in an actual bomb, would have to be lacquered, and lacquer was in fact found in the room. It may also be pointed out that the inner surface of the tin case itself should, for safety, be protected in the same way as the discs, to avoid the formation of picrate of tin which, according to Colonel Muspratt Williams, is a highly sensitive substance. In the second place, it has been argued, that as there is a slight difference in the thickness of the iron used for the discs and clamps found in the room and those used in some of the actual bombs exhibited, the articles suspected could not have been intended for use in the construction of a bomb. There is no force in this contention, for, as Major Turner says, inspite of the fact that some of the parts are lighter, the principle remains the same. After careful examination of the tin cases, discs and clamps found in the room and a comparison therewith of the corresponding parts of actual bombs, we have arrived at the same conclusion as the Sessions Judge, namely, that these articles found in possession of Sasanka were suitable for use as bomb shells. This leads us to the question, whether they could have been intended for innocent use. This inquiry is essential, because it is an elementary rule that in order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. As Alderson, B., says in Reg. v. Hodges (59), to enable the Jury to bring in a verdict of guilty, it is necessary not only that it should be a rational conviction, but that it should be the only rational conviction which the circumstances would enable them to draw. What, then, is the reasonable hypothesis which has been offered as an explanation of the articles found in possession of Sasanka? The theory he puts forward for acceptance is that at the suggestion of one Jogendra Nath Dutt, he was engaged in experiments for the manufacture of a simple and cheap acetylene gas lamp, which could be used as a substitute for the native kupies, and that Exhibit I was only a part of the generator made by him under instructions from Jogendra Nath Dutt, to whom were due the details of the lamp, namely, the tin, discs, clamps and general construction. This theory, however, is not consistent with the admitted facts of the case. In the first place, if Sasanka was still engaged in experiments for the construction of a cheap lamp, how is it that he was in possession of so many completed discs and clamps? In the second place, for the purpose of an experiment in the construction of a lamp, it would be essential to have holes on the side of the shells, into which a tube could be inserted for the passage of the gas generated. But no tube, no burner, no carbide—nothing except a solitary cock—was found in the room; nor was there any hole on the side of either of the two tin cases, in which a tube could have been inserted. In the third place, for the purposes of a lamp, even at the experimental stage a disc with a pinhole through which water could pass slowly from one of the chambers to the other, where the carbide would be kept, would be essential, but none such was found. On the other hand, several discs were found with large perforations, precisely as in the case of discs used in actual bombs. In the fourth place, this theory of an acetylene generator, was not suggested till a very late stage of the trial. Mr. Lowman, who was present at the search, asked Sasanka what Exhibit I was, as soon as it came into his hands. The only answer which Sasanka gave was "look and see for yourself." Sasanka was subsequently asked the same question by Mr. Tegart and Mr. Denham, but he declined to give any explanation as to the articles found. More than this, there was not the remotest suggestion that he was engaged in experiments on the construction of an acetylene generator, during the entire period that the trial lasted in the Court of first instance, from the 19th December 1913 to the 21st February 1914. In the fifth place, if Sasanka, as he stated before the Sessions Judge, was still engaged in experiments at the time of his arrest, how was a model lamp, such as he had in contemplation, prepared and got ready for use under his instruction while he was under arrest? The generator theory was first put to Colonel Muspratt Williams in course of cross-examination on the 6th April 1914. Mr. Craig of the Linde Ice Factory, under whom Sasanka had worked in the oxy-acetylene department, was examined on the 24th April 1914, and the generator theory was again put to him in cross-examination. But these experts pronounced the idea to be impracticable. It now transpires from the evidence that, in the interval, on or about the 16th April 1914, a model lamp had been prepared by a tinsmith under instructions from Sasanka conveyed through his Pleader. With the article so constructed, Sasanka gave an exhibit in Court on the 14th May 1914, and demonstrated that the gas, generated by contact of the water with the carbide, when carried through a tube affixed to the side of the tin shell, and ignited with a match, gave a tolerably bright light. The exhibition was repeated in this Court by Counsel for the accused. It is not necessary to discuss whether what was exhibited as a lamp was capable of practical use as such; the answer would depend upon various factors which have not been investigated, for instance, the total cost of construction of the article, the price of the carbide consumed, the time during which the light would burn, the strength of the generator to keep the gas intact, and other like matters. Let us assume, however, that the article exhibited was fit for use as a lamp and negatives the confident opinion to the contrary given by expert witnesses. The question inevitably arises, when did Sasanka complete his investigation, as according to his own statement, he was still in the experimental stage when he was arrested and the articles were seized? The truth is that the theory of a generator is an ingenious after-thought of a well-skilled mechanic employed in the oxy-acetylene department of the Linde Ice Factory. In the sixth place, if Sasanka was engaged in experiments upon the construction of a cheap generator, one might, not unnaturally, have expected to find in his library books and papers on acetylene and on generators; on the other hand, what was found in his possession was seditious literature which advocated the use of bombs for the attainment of revolutionary ideals. Upon a review, then, of all the circumstances of the case, the conclusion appears irresistible that Exhibit I and other exhibits similar to its component parts were intended for use, not as acetylene generators, but as bomb-shells. The fact that they were kept in a room, apparently without any attempt at secrecy, is explained by the circumstance that they were not calculated to attract the attention, much less to excite the suspicion, of persons not familiar with the mechanism of this particular type of bombs and their construction. We are not unmindful that, as has been strenuously argued by Counsel for the defence, in criminal cases there can be no conviction, unless guilt is established with very great clearness. This presumption of innocence signifies no more than this that if the commission of a crime is directly in issue in any proceeding, it must be proved beyond reasonable doubt; in other words, as Thayer points out, (Evidence at the Common Law, page 558) "the whole doctrine when drawn out is, first, that a person who is charged with a crime must be proved guilty, that according to the ordinary rule of procedure and of legal reasoning, præsumitur pro reo, that is, neganti, so that the accused stands innocent until he is proved guilty; and second, that this proof of guilt must displace all reasonable doubt." When we test the case in the light of these principles, we feel no doubt that the exhibits in question were intended for use in the construction of bombs-hells.

The next important question of fact, which requires determination, is whether the prosecution has proved the existence of a conspiracy to make explosive substances or to possess them or to have them under control, with intent by means thereof to endanger life or to cause serious injury to property in British India. The question may be appropriately considered at this stage, because it is well settled that in a charge of conspiracy, general evidence of the existence of the conspiracy may first be given, before particular facts are proved to show that one or more of the defendants took part in it: Rex v. Sidney (60), Queen's case (61), Rex v. Hunt (62), Rex v. Frost (63), Reg. v. Shellard (64), Reg. v. Desmond (65), Reg. v. Deasy (66). It is now admitted that Sasanka manufactured and was in possession of the articles which, in concurrence with the Sessions Judge we have found, were intended for use in the manufacture of bombs. The question is, whether Sasanka had confederates or associates in the design and its accomplishment. An answer in the affirmative is the only solution admissible in view of incontestable facts. The circumstance that bombs of this particular type have been used in various places in British India, as widely separated from each other, as Calcutta, Lahore, Delhi, Sylhet, Mymensingh and Midnapore, points to the conclusion that more than one person is engaged in these transactions: the bombs are not the handiwork of one individual though they may be the work of one controlling mind. This inference is confirmed by the contents of at least one revolutionary document found in the room of Sasanka, which advocates the realization of the independence of India with the aid of heroic patriots by bloodshed and assassination. This aspect of the case does not, in our opinion, stand in need of elaboration, and the only substantial question for consideration with regard to each of the accused persons is the extent, if any, to which his complicity in the conspiracy charged and proved has been established beyond reasonable doubt. Before we deal, however, with the cases of the individual accused persons, it is necessary to decide an important question of admissibiliy of evidence, which turns upon the true construction of the terms of sections 14 and 15 of the Indian Evidence Act.

At the trial before the Sessions Judge, evidence was adduced by the prosecution to establish that some of the accused had associated with Pulin Behary Das in 1908 or 1910 and that they had been seen from time to time in the premises of the Dacca Anusilan Samity whereof Pulin Behary Das was the leader. Exception was taken on behalf of the defence to the admissibility of this evidence, but the objection was overruled. The objection has been reiterated in this Court, and we have been invited to pronounce a decision on the point. Evidence has been adduced to prove that Pulin Behary Das and some of his associates were convicted in 1912 of offences under section 121A of the Indian Penal Code, but no evidence has been given as to the nature of the activities of the Samity, of the different grades of its members and of the extent of their participation in the ultimate aims and purposes of the society; proof in these respects, could, indeed, be hardly attempted without reproduction of the voluminous evidence adduced at the trial of the Dacca Conspiracy case. The defence, however, have elicited in cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses that the activities of the Anusilan Samity were not known to have been in any way connected with bombs. In these circumstances, we have to decide whether evidence was admissible to prove that some of the present accused had in 1908 or 1910 associated with Pulin Behary Das and had been seen engaged in lathi play or in other innocent pursuits on the Samity premises. In our opinion, the evidence was inadmissible and should have been excluded. The prosecution has relied upon section 14 of the Indian Evidence Act, which is in these terms: "Facts showing the existence of any state of mind, such as intention, knowledge, good faith, negligence, rashness, ill-will or good-will towards any particular person, or showing the existence of any state of body or bodily feeling, are relevant, when the existence of any such state of mind, or body, or bodily feeling, is in issue or relevant." But, on behalf of the prosecution, the first explanation to the section, which is absolutely fatal to their argument, has been completely overlooked: "A fact relevant as showing the existence of a relevant state of mind must show that the state of mind exists, not generally, but in reference to the particular matter in question." We invited the Counsel for prosecution to explain how evidence of association with Pulin Behary Das in 1908 or presence in his Samity could have any relevancy with reference to the particular matter in question before us, namely, the intention with which the first four accused had assembled in the room, rented by Sasanka, on the night of the 20th November 1913; but not even a plausible answer was attempted. Illustrations (i), (j), (o) and (p) also plainly indicate that the contention of the prosecution is not well-founded. Nor can the prosecution derive any assistance from section 15 of the Indian Evidence Act, which is in these terms: "Where there is a question whether an act was accidental or intentional, or done with a particular knowledge or intention,' the fact that such act formed part of a series of similar occurrences, in each of which the person doing the act was concerned, is relevant." Reference, however, was made to a number of judicial decisions which throw light upon the questions in controversy, and particularly to Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (67), Blake v. Albion Life Assurance Society (68), Reg. v. Rhodes (69), Rex. v. Wyatt (70), Rex. v. Bond (71), Rex. v. Fisher (72), Rex. v. Ellis (73), Rex. v. Ball (74), Rex. v. Rodley (75), Rex. v. Shellaker (76), Rex. v. Hunt (62), Reg. v. Geering (77), Reg. v. Garner (78), Reg. v. Cotton (79), Reg. v. Jones (80), Reg. v. Ollis (81). No useful purpose would be served by an analysis of the special facts of each of these cases, but the principles deducible therefrom, as to the law administered in England, may be briefly formulated. Facts similar to but not part of the same transaction as the main fact are not, in general, admissible to prove either the occurrence of the main fact or the identity of its author. But evidence of similar facts, although in general, inadmissible to prove the main fact or the connection of the parties therewith, is receivable after evidence aliunde on these points has been given, to show the state of mind of the parties with regard to such fact; in other words, evidence of similar facts may be received to prove a party's knowledge of the nature of the main fact or transaction, or his intent with respect thereto. In general, whenever it is necessary to rebut, even by anticipation, the defence of accident, mistake, or other innocent condition of mind, evidence that the defendant has been concerned in a systematic course of conduct of the same specific kind as that in question may be given. To admit evidence under this head, however, the other acts tendered must be of the same specific kind as that in question, and not of a different character and the acts tendered must also have been proximate in point of time to that in question. It is plain that the principles thus formulated are of no assistance to the prosecution. The view we take is consistent with the decisions in Empress v. Vyapoory (82), Mankura Pasi v. Queen-Empress (83); Baharuddin Mandal v. Emperor (84); Girdhari Lal v. Emperor (85) and Emperor v. Debendra Pershad (86). With reference to the case last mentioned, it may be noted that the Court properly declined to follow Reg. v. Holt (87), which is no longer authority: Rex v. Smith (88). We hold, accordingly, that the evidence of association with Pulin Behari Das and the Anusilan Samity is irrelevant, for the purposes of proof of the conspiracy charged in this case, and should not have been admitted.

In the consideration of the individual cases, Sasanka, who has been the central figure in this trial, naturally arrests our attention first. We have already held that he made and was in possession of articles intended for use in the construction of bombs. These articles are manifestly "explosive substances" within the meaning of that expression as defined in section 2 of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908. For the purposes of the Act, the expression "explosive substance" is deemed to include any materials for making any explosive substance, also any apparatus, machine, implement or material used or adapted for causing any explosion in or with any explosive substance, also, any part of any such apparatus, machine or implement. This comprehensive definition obviously covers the articles made by Sasanka and found in his possession. The point for consideration is, whether all the elements essential to sustain a conviction have been established. Here, three points require examination, namely, first, were these articles made and possessed by the accused "unlawfully and maliciously"; secondly, can it be said that the accused intended, "by means thereof," to endanger life or cause serious injury to property, when it is plain that, in the absence of explosives, the articles are harmless; and thirdly, is it proved that the articles were intended for use in "British India" with a view to endanger life or injure property? It is worthy of note that section 4 of Act VI of 1908, which we are called upon to interpret, substantially reproduces the provisions of section 3 of 46 and 47 Vict., Chapter III (Explosive Substances Act, 1883).

In the solution of the first question, we may, consequently, interpret the expression "unlawfully and maliciously" in the sense in which it is familiarly used in the criminal law of England. The term "unlawfully," as is plainly indicated by section 5 of the Act VI of 1908, which reproduces the provisions of section 4 of 46 and 47 Vict., Chapter III, signifies "not for a lawful object." The term "maliciously" signifies "intentionally and without justification or excuse or claim of right," Reg. v. Clemens (89): Miles v. Hutchings (90). Blackburn, J., observed in Rex. v. Ward (91) that a man acts maliciously when he wilfully does that which he knows will injure another in person or property. This accords with the statement of Littledale, J., in Macpherson v. Daniels (92), "malice, in its legal sense, denotes a wrongful act, done intentionally, without just cause or excuse," which is identical with the language used by Bayley, J., in the earlier case of Bromage v. Prosser (93). The dictum of Bayley, J., was quoted with approval by Brett, L. J., in Clark v. Molyneux (94) and by Halsbury, L. C., and Lord Watson and Lord Herschell in Allen v. Flood (95); the dictum of Littledale, J., was, on the other hand, adopted by Martin, B., in Johnson v. Emerson (96). Blackburn, J., had the matter again under consideration in Reg. v. Pembliton (97), in which he observed that "where any person wilfully does an act injurious to another, without lawful excuse, he does it maliciously." To the same effect is the language used by Bowen, L. J., in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor (98): "maliciously means and implies an intention to do an act which is wrongful, to the detriment of another; the term wrongful imports, in its turn, the infringement of some right." Reference may also be made, in this connection, to the definition of the term "maliciously" given in the Laws of England, Edited by Halsbury, Volume IX, page 768, Article 1499, as also to the observations of Lord Coleridge, C. J., in Rex v. Martin (99), of Lord Lindley in South Wales Miner's Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co. (100), and of Collins, M. R., in Read v. Friendly Society of Operative Stonemasons (101). There can be no question, in the case before us, that the bomb, on the construction whereof Sasanka was engaged, was not intended for a lawful object and there can be no controversy also that his act was intentional.

In the solution of the second question, namely, the precise import of the expression "by means thereof" we are assisted by a decision in Rex. v. Charles (102), which turned upon the construction of sections 3, 4 and 9 of 46 and 47 Vict., Chap. 3. It is plain that the "explosive substance" mentioned in section 4 (b) of Act VI of 1908 need not be such as to enable a person by means thereof alone, without the aid of other substances, to cause danger to life or injury to property. If this view were not adopted, the comprehensive definition contained in section 2 would be nugatory. The term "explosive substance" as used in section 4 (b) includes any part of any apparatus, machine, or implement intended to be used or adapted for causing or aiding in causing any explosive substance. The definition is of wide generality, and in the case of Rex. v. Charles (102), it was ruled that any part of a vessel which, when filled with an explosive substance, is adapted for causing an explosion, is itself an explosive substance within the Statute. The articles found with the prisoners in that case were a lead bolt, a fuse, a brass bolt, a screw, a brass casting, and evidence was given to show that these were various parts of a vessel, which, when filled with chlorate of potash or other explosive substance, formed a bomb of a highly dangerous character. The articles found in the present case must, consequently, be deemed "explosive substances" within the meaning of the Statute.

In the solution of the third point, we have to bear in mind that the evidence on the record furnishes no indication that the activities of the members of the conspiracy extend beyond the limits of British India; all the bombs produced at the trial have been found in different parts of British India. The articles themselves were found in a house in the suburbs of Calcutta. From the circumstances, the inference of fact may legitimately be drawn that the "explosive substances," made and possessed by Sasanka, were intended for use in British India. We must hold accordingly that all the elements necessary to sustain a conviction under section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, have been established in the case of Sasanka. The elements essential for a conviction under section 120B, Indian Penal Code, have also been made out. Consequently, his conviction under both the charges must be upheld.

We have next to consider the individual cases of the group of three persons found in the room of Sasanka on the morning of the 21st November 1913, namely, Chandra Sekhar, Sarada and Dinesh. We shall discuss them in the order just named.

Chandra Sekhar appears to have made the acquaintance of Sasanka in Dacca for the first time in the year 1908, but there is no evidence to show that any communications had passed between them during the five or six years which had elapsed since then. He is proved to have been employed some time past in the Kohinoor Printing Press at Chittagong owned by his brother, and the record of his attendance there shows that he had not left Chittagong for at least two years prior to his arrest in Calcutta. On the 15th November 1913, he left Chittagong for Calcutta, on business connected, it is alleged, with the press. He arrived at Calcutta on the evening of the 16th November, and is shown to have spent the night in the house of Babu Khitish Chandra Sen, a Vakil of this Court, who comes from Chittagong. Next day he went to the place of his cousin, Sarada Charan Dey, with whom he remained until the evening of the 20th November; he left that evening at about 8 or 8-30, saying that he was to visit a friend who had invited him. In the interval he is proved to have paid a visit to the firm of Messrs. S. K. Lahiri & Co., in connection with the printing of question papers for the Chittagong Municipal School. He asserts that one of the objects of his visit to Calcutta was to expedite the printing and despatch of these question papers. His second object, he alleges, was to visit the firm of Messrs. Erasmus Jones and Co. for the purchase of fancy cards and coloured paper for his press. It is not shown, however, that he visited the latter firm, and it is doubtful whether he went to their premises; at any rate, it is proved that he did not meet the proprietor of the firm or the head clerk. In the early hours of the morning of the 21st November 1913, when the door was opened by Sasanka in response to the demands of the Police, Chandra Sekhar was one of the three persons found asleep in the room. To account for his presence in the room, he alleges that on 18th or 19th November, he had met Sasanka (whom he knew by his real name Amrita Lal) at the Ram Krishna Book Depot, where he himself had gone to purchase some books. Sasanka invited him to his place one evening for a chat, so he went there on the evening of the 20th November, and as it grew late, he was asked to spend the night there. He stayed and early in the morning he was arrested by the Police. There is nothing inherently improbable in this story. On the other hand, any possible theory that he had come down to Calcutta from Chittagong at the invitation of Sasanka for the purposes of a criminal conspiracy, is negatived by two significant facts. In the first place, when arrested, the return half of a railway ticket was found in his possession; this was produced by the prosecution after considerable effort on the part of the defence and was even then not made an exhibit. The defence has suggested that, in this respect, the prosecution was designedly obstructive. The precise attitude of the prosecution in this matter cannot be very clearly made out from the record. But we desire to emphasise the view expressed by Jenkins, C. J., in Ram Ranjan Ray v. Emperor (103) in conformity with the ruling in Reg. v. Holden (104), that it is the duty of the prosecution, not so much to secure a conviction, as to place all the available evidence in the case fairly and fully before the tribunal by which alone the guilt or innocence of the accused is to be determined. This return ticket shows that Chandra Sekhar, when he left Goalando on his way from Chittagong to Calcutta, intended to return within six days. In the second place, he had started from Chittagong with the very small sum of Rs. 10; out of this, he left one-half with Babu Khitish Chandra Sen in Calcutta. It could hardly have been his intention, with this small sum at his disposal, to prolong his stay in Calcutta or to engage in a conspiracy for the manufacture of explosives. In fact, the only circumstance against him is his presence in the room of Sasanka on the morning of the arrest; of this, as we have stated, he has offered a not improbable explanation. The Sessions Judge was, as appears from his judgment, considerably influenced in his opinion against this accused by the evidence of his association with Pulin Behary Das and the Anusilan Samity in 1908. That evidence, as we have already held, was inadmissible and should not have been admitted. We further observe that the Sessions Judge mentions that this accused had, on the 20th November 1908, taken out a seditious book, Mookti Kone Pathey, from the Samity Library. This evidence is not quite trustworthy, and had it not been inadmissible, would have been entirely valueless; more than this, the book mentioned has not been exhibited and no proof whatever has been adduced as to the character of its contents. In our opinon the evidence on the record is not sufficient to sustain the conspiracy charge against the accused Chandra Sekhar.

Sarada Charan Guha, the second of the three persons arrested in the room of Sasanka, comes of a family of some means and respectability, resident at Mulgaon in the District of Faridpore. Sarada is the third of the four sons of his father. His second brother, Tara Charan, is demented and is confined in a lunatic asylum. His youngest brother, Debendra, had, notwithstanding the protest of his father, taken in marriage a girl of an inferior caste and had on this account been disinherited. Sarada himself had, as is amply proved by the evidence on the record, incurred the displeasure of his father and of other members of his family by reason of what they considered to be excessive devotion to his wife. The correspondence between the members of the family which has been produced, shows that his conduct at the time of the annual Puja festival had excited unmistakable bitterness of feeling; he was charged not only with the neglect of his father during his illness but also with misappropriation of family funds; the imputation of misconduct in this respect, as appears from the evidence, was, however, a much exaggerated one, if not wholly unfounded. In these circumstances, he is shown to have left Faridpore on the 16th November and reached Calcutta on or about the morning of the 17th November. He states that although he had relations in Calcutta, he did not on his arrival put up with them, but preferred to go to an acquaintance who lived at 88, Upper Circular Road. The next day he happened to meet Sasanka who lived in the same street. Some evidence was adduced to show that he had known Sasanka in 1908; he had at that time a shop at Gosainhat near Mulgaon in Faridpore. Sasanka was then in the employ of the Bajitpur zemindars and had often to come to the Settlement Camp at Gosainhat Bazar. This is said to be how Sarada and Sasanka first became acquainted with each other. There is no evidence, however, to show that any communication had passed between the two since Sasanka left the place about the year 1910. Not only is there no trace of any correspondence between them, the evidence makes it clear that Sarada had not been for at least ten years in Calcutta, where Sasanka was continuously employed since 1910. In these circumstances, after the lapse of several years, Sasanka and Sarada met again on or about the 18th November 1913. Sarada says that he mentioned to Sasanka how he had quarrelled with his family and left them; he also told him that he had not much money with him and had, on arrival in Calcutta, been taken ill with fever. Sasanka offered to put him up in his own room till he got well, and this, according to Sarada, explains his presence in that room at the time of the search on the morning of the 21st November. There has been much animated discussion in this Court on the question, whether Sarada was in fact ill at the time. His jail history ticket shows that after his arrest on the 21st November, he was, on the 25th November, placed in hospital; his temperature was high, and according to Dr. Mulvany, who wrote to the Magistrate on the 26th November, Sarada apparently had fever for some days and was very weak then. Dr. Makhan Lal Mandal, who attended on him in jail, states that Sarada was at the time suffering from fever, possibly from about a week before,

This fits in precisely with the evidence that Dr. Sen Gupta had seen Sarada and had prescribed medicine for him for fever on the 17th November. These facts render it extremely probable that Sarada was ill on or about the 17th November and that his illness continued up to the time he was taken to the jail hospital on the 25th November, though there is no direct evidence to show the precise extent of his illness at the time of his arrest. The events so far narrated do not indicate any criminal act on the part of Sarada or tend to connect him with a criminal conspiracy. But, at the search, five letters were found, written by him on Sunday the 16th November 1913, though not posted at the time of his arrest. One of these is addressed to his brother Debendra, who had misconducted himself and had been disinherited, and another is addressed to his uncle Bepin. Two letters are addressed to two elder sisters of his wife, Sarojini and Hemangini; another letter is addressed to his wife, Charuhasini. Much controversy has centred round these letters, and it has been vigorously urged by the prosecution that they have a very sinister significance. In these letters Sarada announced to his various relations that he had made up his mind to apply himself to the practice of yoga and that he would accordingly remain incognito for a time; he also pressed them to induce his father to alter his testament and to disinherit him. He further stated that he would probably return in six months or a year and referred to the many difficulties in the way of practice of yoga. He exhibited great anxiety for the welfare of his wife and child in the interval. In one passage he said: "let me see how mayer lila (the inscrutable ways of the mother) ends." It has been suggested on behalf of the prosecution that Sarada was about to embark on a very dangerous enterprise and that he was in fact the person selected by anarchist conspirators to throw the next bomb. This is nothing more than a suggestion; no evidence has been directed to establish this view, and we are unable to hold that the letters are sufficient to support the theory porpounded. The language used in the letters is, no doubt, in some places, peculiar, but on the whole they appear to us to be not very unlike letters such as might be written by a man who had quarrelled with his family and who realised fully, as he himself says in one of these letters, that he had to give up all hopes of paternal property unless he could act in obedience to the orders of his elders. Much stress has also been laid by the prosecution on the use of the expression mayer lila. That expression has in itself no evil significance, and is frequently used by a person in distress who finds all efforts unavailing and realises how inscrutable are the ways of the Providence. At the same time, there can be no question that, by a grievous and perverse misapplication of language,—an act of sacrilege which merits the strongest condemnation of all right-minded people—revolutionaries have applied the expression to describe anarchical outrages as if they were deeds sanctioned by the great Mother of the Universe. We have carefully considered the letters of Sarada, and with the knowledge we possess of the circumstances which very probably inspired them, we are unable to say that the expression mayer lila used therein has any sinister import. Reference has also been made to the difficulties mentioned in the practice of yoga and to the dangers involved therein. This does not, in our opinion, necessarily indicate any criminal purpose in view, for the practice of yoga by persons not fully qualified for such work has sometimes been attended with danger. There has been also much discussion as to the purpose Sarada had in view, when he wrote these letters; it is possible that he never seriously intended to practise yoga and that his only object was to write a series of what looked like farewell letters to all his relations, so as to excite their sympathy and make them intercede with his father with a view to bring about reconciliation between the old man and his undutiful son. There has also been some discussion as to why the letters were never posted; it may be that Sarada changed his mind; it is also not improbable that as he was taken ill on his arrival in Calcutta, he could not post the letters. We may add that a desperate effort was made by the prosecution to interpret the term yoga in these letters in the light of a paper on yoga philosophy found in the room of Sasanka. No connection whatever has been established between the two. But even if Sarada was shown to have been aware of the contents of the yoga pamphlet, it would not in any way alter his position. The laborious attempt made by Counsel for the prosecution to interpret the yoga pamphlet, in a sinister sense, was not attended with success. An abstract philosophical disquisition on yoga cannot rightly be cut up into isolated sentences and edited so as to furnish a possible text for revolutionary spirits, without positive proof that it was so used. At the same time, one cannot overlook the lamentable fact that the revolutionary literature, brought to light in this instance and in other cases previously reported, does suggest that such principles as the religious principle of absolute surrender to the Divine Will—a doctrine common to many religions—are empolyed by designing and unscrupulous men as a potent means to influence and unbalance weak-minded persons and thus ultimately bend them to become instruments in the commission of nefarious crimes, from which they might otherwise recoil with horror. After a minute scrutiny, however, of the letters found in possession of Sarada, we are of opinion that, taken as a whole, they do not admit of the interpretation suggested by the prosecution and do not connect him with the conspiracy charged. Reference has also been made to the circumstance that Sarada undoubtedly gave a false name and incorrect addresses to the Police, but he has offered a not unreasonable explanation of his conduct. He had been treated by the Police for a long time as a political suspect, and his movements had been constantly watched, a position which even Mr. Tegart admits is not very pleasant. Such attentions on the part of the Police are very irksome and Sarada may well have tried to evade observation. Besides, some foundation has been laid in the evidence to support the allegation of Sarada that he found himself in this unfortunate position because of a quarrel with an influential Panchayet, Akshay Kumar Guha, who gave information to the Police and had him placed under surveillance. It also transpires from draft petitions, found in his possession at the time of his arrest, that he was about to move the Police authorities to have his name removed from the list of political suspects, and to invite an inquiry into the mode of life he led. No weight can also be attached to the fact that when he left Faridpore, he mentioned to a Pleader's clerk an untrue reason for his visit to Calcutta; this may well be explained by a not unnatural reluctance to disclose to every person his family quarrels. On the whole, then, there is really no substantial evidence to connect Sarada with the conspiracy. But, as appears from the judgment of the Sessions Judge, he was to some extent influenced in his opinion against Sarada by evidence of his association with Pulin Behary Das and the Annusilan Samity many years ago. This evidence, as we have held, is inadmissible, but it is also really of the vaguest description and, even if admitted, does not throw any light on the case. Our conclusion is that the conspiracy charge against Sarada has not been established.

Dinesh Chandra Das Gupta forms the third member of the group of persons arrested in the room of Sasanka on the morning of the 21st November 1913. His antecedent history has been determined with considerable approach to precision. During the years 1910-12, Dinesh was a student in the Dacca College. On account of ill health, his attendance at lectures fell short of the required minimum, and he left the College towards the close of the Session 1911-12. He appears to have lived with his parents at Faridpore during the next twelve months. In July 1913, he took his admission into the Krishnanath College at Berhampore, where he stayed till the 21st August 1913. He then took a transfer certificate, came down to Calcutta, and, failing to obtain admission elsewhere, joined the Ripon College. He could not secure a seat in a licensed mess or hostel; he stayed accordingly first with a friend in College Street and then in 86/2, Mechua Bazar Street (apparently an unlicensed mess where students resided), from where he intended ultimately to remove to the place of his brother-in-law at 74, Sookea Street. While resident at the Mechua Bazar Street mess, he became acquainted with one Jogesh Chandra Ray, who lived there and who, at the instance of the prosecution, has been named as a co-conspirator in the charge in this case; but Jogesh Chandra Ray has not only not been placed on his trial, no evidence even has been adduced to prove his participation in the conspiracy. In September 1913, while still resident at the Mechua Bazar Street mess, Dinesh joined in the relief works undertaken to alleviate the distress of persons affected by the Damodar floods. It was here at Burdwan that he first became acquainted with Sasanka through Jogesh Chandra Ray. He got an attack of malaria in Burdwan, returned to Calcutta and went to his parents at Faridpore in the first week of October. He had a fresh attack of malaria there and could not return to Calcutta till the 12th November 1913, sometime after his College had re-opened. Next day, he attempted to remove from the Mechua Bazar Street mess to the place of his brother-in-law, but was informed that no room was available there. Consequently, he continued to live in the Mechua Bazar Street mess. He asserts that, on the 20th November, Sasanka came into the mess and asked for his help, as Sasanka had a sick friend (Sarada Charan Guha) in his own room who required to be nursed. Dinesh acceded to this request, accompanied Sasanka, stayed in his room during the night, and was arrested early in the morning by the Police. There is nothing intrinsically improbable on the face of this account. The only person who could speak to the alleged incident of Sasanka's visit to the Mechua Bazar Street mess on the 20th November, was Jogesh Chandra Ray; the prosecution alleged him to be a co-conspirator but did not prosecute him. When the defence took out summons to cite him as a witness on their behalf, he was reported to have died. We are thus left with the undoubted fact that Dinesh was found in the room and his explanation as to how he was brought there. We have, in the next place, evidence adduced to show that Dinesh and Sasanka knew each other, and that Dinesh possibly now and then visited Sasanka. But nothing really turns on this evidence, because admittedly Dinesh came to know Sasanka in September 1913 on the occasion of the Damodar relief works; yet it is worthy of note that no previous connection whatever between the two has been traced or suggested. Considerable stress, however, has been laid by the prosecution upon a list of names in cipher, found in the breastpocket of a coat claimed by Dinesh as his during the search of the room of Sasanka. The handwriting of this document has not been identified. The cipher list was not put to Jatindra Chandra Majumdar, who had been called to prove the handwriting of Dinesh on two post cards; but it transpired that the document had been shown by the Police to the witness outside Court. Upon this, the defence made the legitimate comment that the document had not been put to the witness in Court, because he had failed to recognise the handwriting when it was shown to him outside. We observe, however, that notwithstanding these circumstances, the Sessions Judge proceeded in his judgment to compare the document with the writing on the post cards, with a view to determine whether it was in the handwriting of Dinesh. This is a course which has not commended itself to high authority: Barindra Kumar v. Emperor (58), Kurali Prasad Misser v. Anantaram Hajra (105). Whether the cipher list, however, was or was not written by Dinesh himself, is not very material for the persent inquiry. It has been deciphered and turns out to be a list of names of persons, who apparently paid a small monthly subscription for some purpose undisclosed. The defence has suggested that this was probably a list of subscribers to the library which Sasanka kept in the room; it has also been urged that, in any event, the list does not connect Dinesh with any criminal conspiracy. This is perfectly true; yet one cannot but observe that it would have materially helped the case for the defence if Dinesh had offered a true explanation of the real nature and purpose of this apparently harmless document, instead of suggesting the very improbable theory that it had been planted in his coat pocket by an unscrupulous Police spy. In this connection reference may usefully be made to the following observations made by Tindal, C. J., in Rex v. Frost (63): "On the part of the prisoner, the learned Counsel who appear for him state, and I think they are justified in so stating, that he is not bound to show what was the object or purpose or intent of the acts that were undoubtedly done by the prisoner at the Bar. His Counsel say, the offence charged against him must be proved by those who made the charge, that he stands only to hear the evidence that is given against him, and, therefore, he is not bound to show at all, or in any way whatever, what his real object or design was. Undoubtedly, the proof of the case against the prisoner must depend for its support, not upon the absence or want of any explanation on the part of the prisoner himself, but upon the positive affirmative evidence of his guilt that is given by the Crown. It is not, however, an unreasonable thing, and it daily occurs in investigations, both civil and criminal, that if there is a certain appearance made out against a party, if he is involved by the evidence in a state of considerable suspicion, he is called upon, for his own sake and his own safety, to state and to bring forward the circumstances, whatever they may be, which might reconcile such suspicious appearances with perfect innocence." In this particular case, however, as we have already said, the document, though in cipher and thus calculated to excite suspicion does not, when deciphered, incriminate the accused in whose possession it was found. Reference has lastly been made to the fact that the name of Dinesh appears in a list found at the search of the house of one Madan Mohan Bhowmik. This evidence is obviously valueless, but the Sessions Judge has also correctly held that it is not admissible against the accused. Nothing is known of Madan or of his activities, except that his name appears among some disconnected memoranda contained in a note-book found in Sasanka's room, and the mere fact that Madan had chosen to enter the name of Dinesh in a list prepared by him for some unknown purpose, is obviously irrelevant for the purposes of this trial. On a review of the entire evidence, it is plain that the conspiracy charged against Dinesh cannot be supported.

We have next to consider the charge under section 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, against Chandra Sekhar, Sarada and Dinesh, against whom, as we have just found, the conspiracy charge has failed. It is obvious, indeed this was conceded by the Counsel for the Crown, that the charge under the Explosive Substances Act must necessarily fail along with the conspiracy charge. Reference was made to a number of judicial decisions to show under what circumstances a person may be deemed to be in possession of a moveable: Queen-Empress v. Sangham Lal(106), Emperor v. Gajadhar (107), Kashi Nath v. Emperor (108), Ashruf Ali v. Emperor (109), Emperor v. Hamid Ali and Government of Eastern Bengal & Assam v. Serajuddin (110), Jogjiban Ghose v. Emperor (111), Peary Mohan v. Weston (112), Weston v. Peary Mohan (113), Kali Charan Mukherjee v. Emperor (114) and Nga Pu v. Emperor (115). No useful purpose would be served by an analysis of the circumtances of the various cases discussed at the Bar. It is sufficient to say that while it is not necessary to prove manual possession of the explosive substance by the accused, it must be proved that it was in his power or control; possession to be punishable must also be possession with knowledge and assent. The mere fact that Chandra Sekhar, Sarada and Dinesh were in the room, does not show that they were in possession of all or any of the things contained therein; it is not shown that they were even aware of the existence of the tin cases, discs, and clamps or that they were acquainted with their nature and purpose. We hold accordingly that the charge under section 4(b) of Act VI of 1908 fails against each of these persons, quite as much as the conspiracy charge. This result is in conformity with the well-settled principle that when evidence at the disposal of the prosecution is insufficient to secure a conviction for the crime committed, it is inexpedient, even though it may be lawful, to prosecute the accused for a conspiracy the proof whereof really rests on the establishment of that very crime: Rex v. Boulton (116), Emperor v. Noni Gopal (Lalit Mohan) (38).

the case of Kalipada, who was arrested in College Street on the 6th December 1913 with ten copies of the Liberty leaflet in his pocket. The only charge against him is that of conspiracy under section 120B, Indian Penal Code; there is no substantive charge against him under section 4 of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908. As regards this accused, there has been prolonged discussion on the question, how he came to be in possession of the Liberty leaflets. Counsel on his behalf contended that the leaflets were planted in his pocket by a Police spy, with a view to create evidence of conspiracy against him. This theory, which, in our opinion, has not been placed above the level of a bold hypothesis and has certainly not been established by the evidence, has been indignantly repudiated by the prosecution; the Crown has further sought to prove affirmatively that the leaflets were printed by Kalipada himself at the Loke Nath Press where he was admittedly employed as a compositor. The evidence shows that Kalipada, whose real name is Upendra Lal Ray Choudhury, belongs to a respectable family resident at Benotia in the District of Faridpore. Their circumstances have altered for the worse, and Upendra found himself driven to earn his livelihood in Calcutta, where he came about the middle of the year 1912. He used to reside at 119/4, Upper Circular Road and obtained employment as a compositor in the Loke Nath Press. He alleges that he adopted the name of Kalipada Ghose, because he felt that his humble occupation might bring discredit upon his family. He was employed in the press from October 1912 to 6th October 1913 on a regular monthly wage. Work in the press was thereafter temporarily suspended and his services were terminated. He was re-employed, however, on a daily allowance from the 10th to 16th November 1913. There is internal evidence to show that the Liberty leaflet was written after the 30th September 1913, as it makes mention of the College Square outrage, which took place on the 29th September, and the Mymensingh Bomb outrage, which happened on the following day. If, therefore, the leaflet was printed at the Loke Nath Press, it might then have been printed between the 1st and the 6th October or between the 10th and the 16th November. Elaborate evidence of a circumstantial character has been adduced by the Crown to show that the leaflet was printed at the Loke Nath Press. A minute comparison has been made of the types required to print the leaflet with the types found in the press, and quite a number of remarkable coincidences has been discovered. All the types necessary to print the leaflet were found in the press; but the most striking fact in this connection is the presence of a damaged T, which must have been used to print some of the copies of the leaflet. The damage to this type was obviously caused by a pin which fell accross the face as the printing was in progress. It is extremely improbable that a similar accident to a similar type should have happened in some other press. More than this, coincidences almost equally remarkable have been noticed in the case of types of other letters which had either been damaged or had some special feature, some peculiarity in form or shape. This part of the case does not require much elaboration, because we agree in the conclusion of the Sessions Judge that the evidence though circumstantial, is practically conclusive. We hold then that the Liberty leaflets, found in the possession of Kalipada, were printed at the press where he was employed as a compositor, and it is probable that they were printed by him. There is also indisputable proof that during the whole of the period that Kalipada was employed as a compositor, he was on friendly terms with Sasanka. They regularly took their meals at the same eating-house; there is also evidence to show that Sasanka guaranteed regular payment by Kalipada whom he introduced to the hotel keeper; it is further clear that as Sasanka moved from one hotel to another, Kalipada followed him. The question, consequently, arises, how far this association between Sasanka and Kalipada carries the case against the latter. In this connection, it must not be overlooked that there is no evidence to show that the Liberty leaflets were printed by Kalipada, at the instance or under the direction of Sasanka, and that when the leaflets were first found in his possession, Sasanka had already been in custody for two weeks. But it has been suggested on behalf of the Crown that they must have been actually printed before Sasanka was arrested. If it be assumed, however, that they had been printed by Kalipada under the direction of Sasanka, it is remarkable that no copy was found when his room was searched on the 21st November. But even if the theory be accepted that the leaflets were printed by Kalipada under the direction of Sasanka, the case against Kalipada is not materially advanced. No doubt, the leaflet is a seditious document of an inflamatory character and advocates the use of bombs for purposes of assassination. But it does not follow that even if Sasanka employed Kalipada to print and disseminate seditious literature, he confided to him all his secrets and took him in as a member of the conspiracy to make and possess explosive substances. There is also no evidence to show that Kalipada was in any way an assenting party to the conspiracy in which Sasanka was engaged, or that he was even aware of its existence. There is a further circumstance which militates against such an hypothesis. According to the prosecution, the conspirators had assembled on the night of the 20th November to hold an important conference; if this assumption be well founded, it is remarkable that Kalipada should have been absent from that meeting. In fact, when all the circumstances come to be analysed, the two outstanding facts proved against Kalipada are that he was on friendly terms with Sasanka, and that a fortnight after the arrest of Sasanka he was arrested in College Street with copies of a revolutionary leaflet in his pocket, which had been printed most probably by himself at the press where he was employed as a compositor. In our opinion, whatever suspicions one may entertain as to the mental tendencies of Kalipada, there is not sufficient evidence to connect him with the particular conspiracy charged.

We have next to consider the appeal preferred by the Crown against the acquittal of Khagendra Nath Choudhury. Evidence was aduced in the Sessions Court to prove that his real name was Khagendra Nath Choudhury and that he had assumed the name of Suresh Chandra Choudhury for a dishonourable purpose. Suresh, his fellow-student and co-villagar, had passed the Intermediate examination whilst he himself was unsuccessful; but he passed himself off as Suresh to enable him to secure the appointment of a teacher in a school at Bhastara in the District of Hooghly. On behalf of the defence, it was contended that this evidence was inadmissible under section 54 of the Indian Evidence Act, but the objection was overruled. In our opinion, as it was admitted that Khagendra had assumed a false name, evidence should not have been allowed to prove the dishonourable purpose for which the false name had been assumed, a purpose in no way connected with the conspiracy charged against him. It is an elementary rule that a man's guilt is to be established by proof of the facts and not by proof of his character; such evidence might create a prejudice but not lead a step towards substantiation of guilt. As Stephen observed in his General View of the Criminal Law of England [Edition 1863, page 309], "a man's general bad character is a weak reason for believing that he was concerned in any particular criminal transaction, for it is a circumstance common to him and hundreds and thousands of other people, whereas the opportunity of committing the crime and facts immediately connected with it are marks which belong to very few, perhaps only to one or two persons; if general bad character is too remote, a fortiori the particular transactions of which that general bad character is the effect, are still further removed from proof; accordingly, it is an inflexible rule of English Criminal Law to exclude evidence of such transactions." We must consequently take no account of the circumstances under which Khagendra assumed the name of Suresh. When we come to examine the evidence relevant to the conspiracy charge, we find this much established that he was acquainted with both Sasanka and Kalipada; he appears to have come down on more than one occasion from Bhastara to Calcutta on account of illness and to have stayed in the room of the one or the other in Upper Circular Road; in fact, in each of these rooms medicine prescribed for him and partially used was found. But the mere fact that Khagendra was acquainted with Sasanka and Kalipada and was possibly on friendly terms with them, is obviously insufficient to connect him with the alleged criminal conspiracy. Considerable stress, however, has been laid upon a letter written by one Biroja from Calcutta on the 17th November 1913 and found in the room of Khagendra at Bhastara. In this letter, Biroja promises to send "new paper" in a few days. On behalf of the Crown it has been suggested that the "new paper" mentioned in the letter refers to the Liberty leaflet; the suggestion, however, can take rank only as an unproved hypothesis. More than this, there is no evidence to show who this Biroja was, although, at the instance of the Crown, he was named as a co-conspirator in the charge. We know nothing about his activities, and although an attempt was made by some of the prosecution witnesses to prove that a man named Biroja lived with Kalipada for a few days, that evidence when scrutinised turns out to be contradictory and unreliable. We agree with the Sessions Judge that the evidence is not sufficient to connect Khagendra with the particular conspiracy charged.

We may here conveniently deal with four important questions of law raised and discussed before us in connection with the procedure adopted in the Court below, with regard to the examination of the witnesses and of the accused.

It appears that, in more than one instance, when the prosecution had called a witness to prove a particular point, (for instance, witnesses Rai Mohan Ray and Atul Chandra Das Gupta), the defence directed the cross-examination to matters wholly unconnected with the examination-in-chief, but yet relevant for the purposes of the trial. Two questions thereupon arose, first, whether, in a cross-examination of this description, leading questions could be put to the witness, and secondly, whether the prosecution were entitled to test, by way of cross-examination, the veracity of their own witnesses with regard to the matters elicited by the defence in cross-examination. The answer to these questions must depend upon the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. Section 138 is in these terms: "Witnesses shall be first examined-in-chief, then (if the adverse party so desires) cross-examined, then, (if the party calling him so desires) re-examined."

"The examination and cross-examination must relate to relevant facts, but the cross-examination need not be confined to the facts to which the witness testified on his examination-in-chief."

"The re-examination shall be directed to the explanation of matters referred to in cross-examination; and if, new matter is, by permission of the Court, introduced in re-examination, the adverse party may further cross-examine upon that matter."

Section 143 provides as follows:—"Leading questions may be asked in cross-examination."

Section 154 is in these terms: "The Court may, in its discretion, permit the person who calls a witness to put any question to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party." It is consequently plain that the accused were entitled, in cross-examination, to elicit facts in support of their defence from the prosecution witnesses, though the facts thus elicited had no relation to the facts to which the witnesses had testified on their examination-in-chief. It is also plain that, in course of cross-examination of this character, the defence were entitled, in view of the generality of the provisions of section 143, to ask leading questions. It is finally obvious that the Court might, in its discretion, under section 154, permit the prosecution to cross-examine the witness, even though he had been originally called by them, with regard to the matters elicited by the defence. Indeed, in such circumstances, it would be generally an improper exercise of discretion to refuse the prosecution an opportunity to cross-examine the witness for the purpose indicated. This view is in accord with the law as administered in England. It has been ruled there that though leading questions may, in strictness, be put in cross-examination, even though the witness be favourable to the cross-examiner [Parkin v. Moon (117)], yet when a vehement desire is betrayed to serve the interrogator, it is certainly improper, and greatly lessens the value of the evidence, to put the very words into the mouth of the witness which he is expected to echo back: Rex. v. Hardy (118). Again, as the cross-examination is not limited to the matters upon which the witness has been examined-in-chief, but extends to the whole case, it would be obviously unfair to allow the evidence brought out in cross-examination to pass unchallenged: Morgan v. Bridges (119), Rex v. Murphy (120). The question was elaborately reviewed by Shaw, C. J., in Moody v. Rowel (121) where the learned Chief Justice summed up his opinion as follows:—"There is one authority directly in point, where the objection was taken, and it was decided by Lord Kenyon that such leading question is admissible: Dickinson v. Shee (122). So, in several recent cases, it has been held that where a witness is called to a particular fact, he is a witness to all purposes and may be fully cross-examined to the whole case, and no distinction is suggested as to the mode of cross-examination: Morgan v. Bridges (119) Rex v. Brooke (123). The weight of authority is in favour of the right to put leading questions under the circumstances stated, and this is confirmed by practice and experience". As is pointed out in Taylor on Evidence (Article 1432), in the United States the difficulty is avoided by the adoption of the logically consistent rule that a party has no right to cross-examine any witness, except as to cirumstances connected with matters stated in his examination-in-chief, and if he wishes to examine him respecting other matters, he must do so by making him his own witness and by calling him as such in the subsequent progress of the cause. [See the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered by Mr. Justice Story in Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad Co. v. Stimpson (124)]. The view we take is to some extent supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Kalagurla Suryanarayana v. Yarlagadda Naidoo (125). It may finally be added that the matter is eminently one in the discretion of the trial Judge, and his decision is practically conclusive: Price v. Manning (126), Rice v. Howard (127).

In the course of the trial before the Sessions Judge, a persistent effort was made by the defence to elicit from individual prosecution withesses whether he was a spy or an informer, and also to discover from Police officials the names of persons from whom they had received information. The Sessions Judge disallowed questions of this character, and, in our opinion, the course he adopted was correct. In Reg. v. Bernard (128), when objection was taken to a question put to a witness, whether he had gone to a certain place as a spy, Lord Campbell allowed the objection to prevail, on the ground that the question was not relevant, and that the witness was really called upon to draw an inference from facts within his knowledge. Again, in Rex v. Smith O'Brien (129), it was ruled that disclosures made by informers to the Government, the Magistracy or the Police, with the object of detecting and punishing offenders were privileged. Reference was made to the general rule formulated by Eyre, C. J., in Rex v. Hardy (118): "It is perfectly right that all opportunities should be given to discuss the truth of the evidence given against a prisoner; but there is a rule, which has universally obtained on account of its importance to the public for detection of crimes, that those persons who are the channel, by means of which that detection is made, should not be unnecessarily disclosed; if it can be made to appear that really and truly it is necessary to the investigation of the truth of the case that the name of the person should be disclosed, I should be very unwilling to stop it, but it does not appear to me that it is within the ordinary course to do it." It may now be taken as settled rule that witnesses for the Crown in criminal prosecutions undertaken by the Government are privileged from disclosing the channel through which they have received or communicated information: Rex v. Watson (130), Reg. v. Richardson (131), Attorney-General v. Briant (132), Marks v. Beyfus (133); but it has been ruled that a detective cannot refuse on ground of public policy to answer a question as to where he was secreted: Webb v. Catchlove (134).

AMRITALAL HAZRA v. EMPEROR.

A question has been raised here as to the procedure provided in section 360, sub-section (1), of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Sessions Judge appears to have strictly carried out the provisions of the section, which require that the evidence of each witness, as it is completed, shall be read over to the witness in the presence of the accused, if in attendance or of his Pleader, if he appears by a Pleader. This procedure appears to have occupied considerable time; but in view of the decisions in Mohendra Nath Misser v. Emperor (135) and Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee v. Emperor (136), which are in accord with the case of Kamatchinathan Chetti v. Emperor (137) and were binding on the Sessions Judge, it must be ruled that the procedure he followed is not open to criticism. We may add that in a case of this description, where every possible point was likely to be contested, a strict compliance with the statutory provisions was manifestly desirable.

A question has been raised in this Court as to the propriety of the procedure adopted by the Sessions Judge when he accepted written statements from the accused, and our attention has been drawn to Emperor v. Ansuiya (138). It is sufficient to state that no objection was taken by the Crown in the Court below when the statements were tendered and received. The procedure followed in this case is in accordance with what we believe is the universal practice in the Courts of this Province, and we do not feel pressed by the doubt suggested in the case mentioned. But it is desirable to state explicitly that such a written statement does not take the place of evidence nor of such examination of the accused as is contemplated by the Code.

Only one other question now requires consideration, namely, the question of sentence upon Sasanka. Counsel on his behalf pressed for a reduction of the sentence, should our ultimate conclusion be in favour of conviction. The Crown, on the other hand, has obtained a Rule for enhancement of sentence. After anxious consideration of the matter, we have formed the deliberate opinion that the order of the Judge should not be touched in this respect. The offences, of which Sasanka has been proved to be guilty, are of the gravest character, and their heinousness is, if possible, accentuated by the fact that the bombs under construction, if completed, would have been employed for the destruction of human life. The demands of justice, consequently, require a deterrent sentence. At the same time, we are of opinion that the maximum sentence should be reserved for offences of even a worse description, which, it is not difficult to imagine, might fall within the scope of the Explosive Substances Act. From these points of view, the sentences passed on Sasanka by the Sessions Judge are appropriate and should not be disturbed.

The result of our decision may now be summarised. Appeal No. 587 of 1914 preferred by Amrita alias Sasanka is dismissed. Appeals Nos. 588, 589, 590 and 598 preferred by Dinesh, Sarada, Chandra Sekhar and Upendra alias Kalipada are allowed. The convictions and sentences upon each of these persons are set aside, and we direct that they be released from custody. Appeal No. 4 of 1914, preferred by the Crown against the acquittal of Khagendra alias Suresh, is dismissed. Rule No. 1293, issued at the instance of the Crown, for enhancement of sentence is discharged.

Appeals Nos. 587 & 4 dismissed;
Appeals Nos. 588, 589, 590 and 598 allowed;
Rule No. 1293 discharged.

CRIMINAL REVISION APPLICATION No. 292 OF 1915.

May 19, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.

MOHAMMAD YASIN—APPLICANT

CHEDA LAL AND ANOTHER—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 467, 471—Execution proceeding—Sanction to prosecute for offences—Appeal to District Judge—Jurisdiction.

An application was made to a Judge of the Court of Small Causes for sanction to prosecute the applicant in respect of offences under sections 195, 467 and 471 of the Penal Code, committed in an execution proceeding before him. The application was rejected. The matter was taken up to the District Judge under section 195, clause 6, of the Criminal Procedure Code. In that Court the application was registered as a criminal appeal:

Held, that the application should not have been registered as a criminal appeal as it was a matter in which the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction. [p. 540, col. 2.]

Application for revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Meerut.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Applicant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant in this case is one Mohammad Yasin, who on the 21st of February 1914 applied for execution of a certain decree in the Court of Small Causes at Meerut, alleging himself to be a transferee of the decree. He produced a sale-deed purporting to be executed by the decree-holder. On inquiry the Court held the genuineness of that deed to be open to great suspicion and rejected Mohammad Yasin's application. The original decree-holder having died during the pendency of these proceedings, there was some little delay, perhaps not unnatural under the circumstances, before his sons applied to the Judge of the Court of Small Causes for sanction to prosecute Mohammad Yasin in respect of offences punishable under sections 193, 467 and 471, Indian Penal Code, alleged to have been committed by him in the course of this transaction. The application came before the successor of the learned Judge who had tried the matter on the civil side, and sanction was refused by an order dated the 15th August 1914. On the 28th of October 1914, the applicants for sanction brought the matter before the District Judge of Meerut under section 195, clause (6), of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It appears that in this Court a somewhat curious practice prevails of registering applications to the District Judge under this particular provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure as "criminal appeals." One result of this practice was that the learned District Judge felt considerable doubt as to whether the application before him was not barred by Article 154 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908). He decided, however, to overrule the objection as to limitation and for the reasons given in his order, dated the 17th of November 1914, he granted the sanction applied for.

The matter was brought before this Court by present application presented on the 13th April 1915, and a further result of the system of registering such applications as criminal appeals in the Court of the District Judge of Meerut has been that the application now before me has been admitted, and notice issued to the opposite side, as an application in criminal revision. On the reported authorities and settled practice of this Court, there can be no doubt whatever that this ought not to have been done. Although in the Court below the application to the District Judge was registered as a criminal appeal, it was an application to the District Judge. It was an application in a matter in which the Sessions Judge could have no possible jurisdiction. I do not think the parties concerned were under any misapprehension as to the matter being before the District Judge of Meerut and not before the Sessions Judge. For authorities in this Court I am content to refer to a decision of the Full Bench in Salig Ram v. Ramji Lal (1). It is an arguable point, on the wording of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and a point as to which there has been difference of opinion between the various High Courts, whether under the circumstances stated Mohammad Yasin is not entitled to bring the matter before this Court by a further application under section 195, clause (6), of the Code of

(1) 28 A. 554; A. W. N. (1906) 103; 3 A. L. J. 394 (F. B.); 1 M. L. T. 219; 3 Cr. L. J. 400.

Criminal Procedure. This point has, however, been settled in the negative so far as this Court is concerned ever since the decision in Kanhai Lal v. Chhadammi Lal (2). The only revisional jurisdiction, therefore, which I can be asked to exercise in the matter is that limited by section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I am content to say that I find no valid cause for interference under that section. The application is dismissed.

Application dismissed.

CRIMINAL LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 2 OF 1915.

March 26, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter.

NARAYANA ASARI AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

KANDASAMI ASARI—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, scope of—Actual physical possession, consideration of—Possession, nature of, irrelevant—Written statement—Jurisdiction.

Section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is concerned solely with the fact of actual physical possession whether lawful or unlawful, whether in contemplation of law enjoyed by the possessor in his own right or on behalf of others. [p. 542, col. 2.]

Therefore, in proceedings under that section any question as to whether possession is on behalf of others or in one's own right is quite irrelevant. [p. 542, col. 2.]

Tarujan Bibee v. Asamuddi Bepari, 4 C. W. N. 426, distinguished.

Questions as to the rights of parties raised by their written statements under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, are quite irrelevant; as such proceedings are initiated by the Magistrate in the interests of public order and tranquillity and it is his preliminary order that settles the actual issue between the parties and founds his jurisdiction. [p. 542, col. 2.]

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the orders of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, dated the 10th of December 1914, in Criminal Revision Case No. 463 of 1914 (Criminal Revision Petition No. 395 of 1914), reported as 26 Ind. Cas. 644, preferred against the order of the Court of the Divisional Magistrate of Tuticorin, dated the 8th May 1914, in Miscellaneous Case No. 5 of 1914.

FACTS.—In the village of Valavellam Eral in Tinnevelly District the goldsmiths claimed an Amman Temple as their own, whereas the bell-metal workers claimed that the temple belonged to the whole Asari community. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tuticorin took proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and held that the bell-metal workers were in possession and the goldsmiths should not interfere till they got an order of the Civil Court in their favour. Against the order a revision petition was preferred to the High Court. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar quashed the proceedings of the Magistrate under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that it was admitted by the bell-metal workers to be a temple common to all the Asaris. This Letters Patent Appeal is against the decision of that order.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Appellants:—The Magistrate was only concerned with the fact of actual possession and the bell-metal workers did not claim to be in exclusive possession but only in joint possession, and, therefore, the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order.

Mr. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Respondents:—The writen statement of the bell-metal workers does not say anything about possession but speaks only of the rights of the parties. The jurisdiction of the Magistrate is, therefore, ousted.

JUDGMENT.—These proceedings arose out of a dispute as to the right to the possession and management of a temple in the village of Valavellam Eral. Both parties are Asaris, the appellants to this Court being bell-metal workers and the respondents goldsmiths. The goldsmiths claimed that no other persons than themselves had any right of access to the temple except by their sufferance; the bell-metal workers have maintained that, while the right of worship and access to the temple is common to all Asaris, the management and consequent possession of the temple belongs to certain huqdars of whom they are four.

The dispute, which has been in existence for many years, became exceptionally acute in January of last year. Petitions were presented by both parties to various Magistrates and Police officials; it is not clear, nor is it material, which party took the initiative or what the petitions contained. On the 20th January 1914 with the aid of the Police, kodai was performed by the goldsmiths, and it was performed again by the bell-metal workers three days later on the 23rd January, apparently also assisted by the Police keeping order. On the 28th March matters having got no better, the Divisional Magistrate proceeded to exercise the powers conferred upon him by section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and on that day made an order under the section summoning the parties to put in written statements, and to appear before him on the 17th April in support of their respective claims to be in actual possession of the temple. This order was duly served on the persons named in it, including all the appellants and the respondents; they put in written statements and appeared before the Magistrate on the 17th and 18th April, and a large number of witnesses were examined on dates to which the case was subsequently adjourned. He found that the appellants were in actual possession of the temple and forbade interference with such possession until a Court of Law should decide the case upon the merits. There was evidence before him that that possession had lasted since the 23rd January, i. e., for more than two months before his preliminary order, as required by the proviso to sub-section 4 of section 145.

This decision was brought up on revision to the High Court, and its determination came before Sadasiva Aiyar, J.* The learned Judge set aside the order of the Magistrate, on the ground that the present appellants' own case as set out in their written statement was not that they were entitled to exclusive possession, but only to possession on behalf of the whole body of huqdars of which they formed only a part and that accordingly their possession could not in law be regarded as exclusive possession. In so deciding, he expressed himself to be following the authority of Tarujan Bibee v. Asamuddi Bepari (1). We think that such considerations are quite outside the purview of section 145, which, in our view, is concerned solely with actual physical possession, whether lawful or unlawful, whether in contemplation of law enjoyed by the possessor in his own right or on behalf of others. This seems to us clearly to follow from the words of the section. The issue is defined to be the "fact of actual possession" (sub-section 1) and the Magistrate is to decide it "without reference to the merits of the claim of any party to a right to possession" (sub-section 4). The decision in Tarujan Bibee v. Asamuddi Bepari (1) is not only not inconsistent with the view we take, but supports it; the petitioner there failed because his possession was joint possession with another, not in contemplation of law, but in actual physical fact.

A further contention was pressed upon us by the respondent. It was said that the written statement put in by the appellants dealt only with their legal rights on the merits, contained no allegation that they were in actual possession, and no prayer for confirmation of that possession and that, therefore, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order in this case. It is the fact that the written statement was directed solely to the question of right and omitted to deal with the one relevant question, that of possession in fact. Where proceedings are initiated by a document emanating from one of the parties, as in the ordinary case of a plaint in a civil suit, the jurisdiction of the Court is, no doubt, limited by the allegations in that document and the relief sought in it. If the allegations disclose no cause of action, and no relief is sought which the Court has power to grant, the Court has no jurisdiction to grant relief which is not sought. But the proceedings under section 145 are of quite a different nature. They are initiated by the Magistrate himself in the interests of public order and tranquillity; and it is his preliminary order which defines the issue to be determined and founds the jurisdiction to determine it. The written statements of the parties are merely materials to assist the Magistrate in ascertaining the grounds on which they claim possession; the fact that the written statement of one party is not required to be served upon the other is conclusive to show that its contents neither found nor limit the jurisdiction. A difficulty might arise if it could be shown that the Magistrate was misled by the irrelevance of the written statements and had taken into consideration matters alien to the issue. Nothing of the kind took place here; the Magistrate says in the clearest terms in paragraph 5 of his order: "The present enquiry is only concerned with actual possession of the temple." The Magistrate correctly defined the issue, the evidence was directed to that issue, and the order he made was in accordance with that evidence and was one which he had jurisdiction to make. We allow the appeal with costs and restore the order of the Divisional Magistrate.

* See 26 Ind. Cas. 644.—Ed.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Dispute as to land between two channels—Boundary—Province of Agra and Oudh—Deep stream of Ghagra —Magistrate—Jurisdiction.

The deep stream of the river Ghagra, as it exists at any given point, forms the boundary line between the District of Fyzabad in the Province of Oudh and the District of Basti in the Province of Agra. [p. 543, col. 2.]

A dispute arose about a piece of land situated between the two distinct channels of the river Ghagra between the District of Fyzabad and the District of Basti and the channel which was towards the Fyzabad side was found to be the deep stream of the river:

Held, that the Magistrate of Basti had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the dispute under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 543, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Magistrate of Basti.

Mr. Satya Chander Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision arising out of a riparian dispute. The river Ghagra flows between the District of Fyzabad in the Province of Oudh and the District of Basti in the Gorakhpur Division in the Province of Agra. It appears that at a certain point between these two districts the river divides into two disinct channels, northern and southern, leaving an island of alluvial soil between the two. A dispute having broken out between the proprietors of villages situated respectively on the Basti side and on the Fyzabad side of the river with regard to possession of a portion of this alluvial land, a Magistrate of the first class exercising jurisdiction in the District of Basti took cognizance of the dispute under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and after issuing notice to the parties and conducting a formal inquiry has passed certain orders. The point taken in the application before me, and the only point with which I have to deal, is that the Magistrate's proceedings were without jurisdiction because the land in dispute was situated in, and formed part of, the Fyzabad District. The first question is as to the criterion to be applied. The Magistrate has discussed this point, and in reliance on the statements made by the parties before him and also on the records of custom found by him in the village papers, he has held that the deep stream of the river Ghagra, as it exists at any given point, forms the boundary line between the Districts of Fyzabad and Basti. In this I have no doubt that the Magistrate was right. The reasons given by him for his decision may be confirmed and strengthened by another consideration. The boundary in question is not merely between two districts, but between two provinces. In a case which came before me in the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Lucknow, the same question was raised. I was referred to a notification of the Governor-General in Council fixing the deep stream of the river Ghagra as the boundary between the Province of Oudh and what is now the Province of Agra at this point. I have mislaid the reference for the moment, but my recollection is clear as to the fact. The next question is whether according to this rule the land in dispute is in fact situated in the District of Basti. The Magistrate had to determine on which side of this land the deep stream of the river is situated. In other words, he had to determine whether the northern or the southern of the two streams, of which I have already spoken, could most appropriately be described as the deep stream of the river. He seems to have gone into this matter carefully and to have based his decision in part on the evidence offered before him, and in part on his own observations in the course of two local inspections, during which he visited the two streams and the alluvial land between them at points separated by an interval of about two miles. The conclusion he has arrived at is that the southern stream represents the deep stream of the river. I am not sure how far I should be justified in any case in reconsidering this point on the present application for revision, but I am content to say that I find no sufficient reason for dissenting from the conclusion arrived at by the Magistrate. The main point taken in argument before me against that conclusion seems to be that it was arrived at without taking specific measurements of the depth of the two streams, and indeed after an admission that the Magistrate had found it impossible to take such measurements, at any rate on the occasion on which he inspected the two streams at points immediately to the north and south of the land in dispute. As a matter of fact the question, which of two such streams may fairly be regarded as the deep stream of the river, is one to be decided on an inspection of the two streams along their entire separate course, and on a consideration of the appearance and circumstances of the two streams as a whole, including, of course, the question of the depth of each of the streams at various points. I gather from the Magistrate's order that what really settled the question to his mind was his inspection of the two streams at a point two miles further up stream from the land in dispute. He there found that the northern stream was fordable and was being easily crossed by people on foot whereas boats were lying along the southern stream. This is in effect a finding, though not based on respective specific measurements as to the depth of the two streams at this point. For the reasons given, I find no good cause for interference and dismiss this application.

Application dismissed.

A "delivery to be carried by Railway" means something more than a mere depositing of goods on the Railway premises; it means some sort of acceptance by the Railway, a taking as well as a giving. [p. 545, col. 2.]

The commencement of the liability of a Railway Company for goods delivered to be carried under section 72 is in no way dependent upon the fact of a receipt having been granted and must be determined on the evidence in the case quite independently of rule 2 under section 47, sub-section (1), clause (f). JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This is a case in which the plaintiffs have claimed damages from the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company on account of certain goods, which were destroyed after they had been placed on the Railway Company's premises and which the plaintiffs allege in effect had been delivered to the Company for the purpose of carriage by Railway. The suit was disposed of by a Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Bombay in favour of the defendant, and after a hearing before the Full Bench the same conclusion was reached.

An application was made to this Court by the plaintiffs, a Rule was issued and we have heard the matter fully argued. As neither the applicants nor the opponent have any objection to our disposing of this matter, I do not propose to say anything on the question of our jurisdiction except that so far as I am enabled to form an opinion in the absence of arguments, I do not see any serious reason to doubt that we have jurisdiction.

Section 72, so far as it covers this case, runs as follows:—

"The responsibility of a Railway administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to the administration to be carried by Railway shall, subject to the other provisions of this Act, be that of a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872."

A "delivery to be carried by Railway" means something more than a mere depositing of goods on the Railway premises; it means some sort of acceptance by the Railway, a taking as well as a giving. When that taking occurs, is a matter which depends on the course of business and the facts of each particular case; but it certainly may be completed before a Railway receipt is granted. For by the instructions of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway "a Railway receipt would not be granted until the consignment has been loaded." The loading, it seems to me, would indubitably finish the delivery. As to whether the delivery would be complete at some earlier stage, for example, by the weighment, I say nothing, for the Court below has held that a receipt is essential and that is the only matter we are called on to decide. But it is argued that section 72 alone does not control the case, that the meaning of the section is modified by a rule made under section 47. This rule runs:

"Goods will in all cases be at owner's risk taken over by the Railway administration for despatch and a receipt in the prescribed form has been granted duly signed by an authorised Railway servant."

If that rule is good then the decision of the Court below is correct. Is it good? I think not. Its effect is to define, and by defining change what otherwise would be the meaning of section 72.

The provision to make rules which we are concerned with is contained in section 47 and is as follows:—

47 (f)"Every Railway Company.....shall make general rules consistent with this Act... for regulating the terms and conditions on which the Railway administration will warehouse or retain goods at any station on behalf of the consignee or owner."

This gives no express power to make rules regarding the liability of the Railway and that liability, it seems to me, remains precisely as defined by section 72. To hold otherwise would be to assume that the Legislature conferred, not expressly but indirectly or by implication, a power to modify by rule the natural meaning of a section of the Act. I think this cannot be so, firstly, because it is a manner of making laws that I cannot attribute to a responsible Legislature: and secondly, because I think it is directly against the provision that the rules must be consistent with the Act.

I would, therefore, make the Rule absolute, set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the suit to be disposed of with reference to the observations contained in our judgments in this matter.

Costs of this Rule will be costs in the suit.

SHAH, J.—The point argued in this case is whether rule No. 2 under section 47, sub-section (1), clause (f), is consistent with the provisions of section 72 of the Indian Railways Act or not, in so far as it makes the responsibility of the Railway administration dependent upon a receipt being granted in the prescribed form.

The learned Judges of the Full Court have held that it is consistent with section 72 of the Act. Their decision proceeds upon the assumption that the goods were marked and weighed after the consignment note was tendered to the Company by the plaintiff's agent.

I have considered whether a point of this kind could be appropriately decided in the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction of this Court. Having regard to the importance and nature of the point, as also to the fact that both the parties are willing that it should be decided, I think it is a fit case for our interference, if not under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under the powers of superintendence which this Court has over the Presidency Small Cause Courts in virtue of section 6 of Act XV of 1882 and of the provisions of 24 & 25 Vic., c. 104.

The goods in this case are said to have been brought on the Railway premises and a consignment note given to the Company by the plaintiffs' agent. The parties are not agreed as to whether the goods were marked and weighed, and there is no finding of the Full Court on the point. It is common ground that no receipt was given by the Company. It is urged on behalf of the applicant that the Company is responsible for the loss or destruction of the goods delivered to the Company to be carried by Railway as a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act—subject, of course, to the other provisions of the Indian Railways Act under section 72 of the Act. Apart from the rule in question it is not seriously disputed—and in my opinion cannot be disputed—by the Company that there may be delivery of goods to be carried by Railway within the meaning of section 72 before any receipt is issued by the Company. The delivery contemplated by section 72 is an actual delivery and marks the beginning of the Company's responsibility. That delivery would, no doubt, involve not merely the bringing of the goods on the Railway premises, but acceptance thereof by the Company for the purpose of carrying the same by Railway. Such acceptance may be expressed or implied in a variety of ways, by the usual course of business, and may be quite independent of any receipt being granted by the Company. Of course it will depend upon the circumstances of each case and the usual course of business of the Railway administration as to whether the goods can be said to be delivered to be carried by Railway under section 72 of the Act.

This being my view of the meaning of the expression 'delivered to be carried by railway' used in section 72, the question is whether rule 2 limits or modifies it in any way, and if it does so, whether it can do so. In my opinion it does not and cannot do so. The rule provides that "goods will, in all cases, be at owner's risk until taken over by the Railway administration for despatch and a receipt in the prescribed form has been granted duly signed by an authorised Railway servant." This rule has been sanctioned by the Governor-General in Council and promulgated under section 47, sub-section

(1), clause (f), for regulating the terms and conditions on which the Railway administration will warehouse or retain goods at any station on behalf of the consignee or owner. It relates to wharfage, and is one of the rules under the heading "on goods for despatch waiting to be consigned." The first rule relates in terms to goods brought to railway premises for despatch but not consigned, and to a period before the consignment note is received. If due regard is had to the context as well as to the purpose of the rule in question, it seems to me that it cannot be used as in any way affecting the Company's liability under section 72 of the Act. It is true that the wording of the rule is rather wide and lends itself to the construction that no liability of the Company can arise unless and until a receipt has been granted by an authorised Railway servant. Assuming, however, that the rule can be used for that purpose, it is necessary to consider whether it is consistent with the Act. If apart from the rule the goods can be delivered to be carried so as to render a Railway administration liable as a bailee under section 72 without any receipt being granted, the rule, which postpones the liability until a receipt is granted, seems to me to be inconsistent with section 72. The liability defined by the Act cannot be thus modified by a rule, and the fact that the rule has received the sanction of the Governor-General in Council cannot remove the inconsistency. The result of thus postponing the liability may be serious in some cases. If the rule be allowed to have the effect which the Company contends in this case it has, the goods can practically remain in charge of the Company for an indefinite length of time without the owner having any control over them, and without the Company being in any way liable for their loss or destruction. It is a result which ought to be avoided as far as possible. The Act does not appear to me to contemplate any such result and, in my opinion, it cannot be secured by the rule in question.

It is urged on behalf of the Company that the consequences of holding that there may be delivery of goods within the meaning of section 72 before a receipt has been granted, would be anomalous in those cases where the owner ultimately agrees to limit the responsibility of the Company as provided in sub-section (2) of section 72, inasmuch as there may be the liability of the Company before a receipt is granted, while after it is granted it would cease because of the agreement limiting the responsibility. I do not think that there is any anomaly in this, nor can I think that the possibility of such an agreement being entered into in any case is any ground for not giving effect to the view that the rule in question is not consistent with the terms of section 72. Mr. Binning has relied upon the decision of Banna Mal v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1). Apparently the only ground urged and considered in that case was whether the rule, which was similar to the rule with which we are concerned in this case, was bad because it was inequitable. It does not appear to have been argued that the rule was inconsistent with the provisions of section 72 of the Act. I am, therefore, unable to accept that case as any guide in deciding the question which has been argued in the present case.

It follows, therefore, that the commencement of liability of the Company for goods delivered to be carried under section 72 is in no way dependent upon the fact of a receipt having been granted, and must be determined on the evidence in the case quite independently of rule 2 under section 47, sub-section (1), clause (f).

For these reasons I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 7th October 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Gonda District, in a case of resumption of muafi land.

JUDGMENT.—For the purpose of this appeal, it seems to me unnecessary to consider whether the rent-free land is held for the performance of a specific service under the terms of the original grant of 1845 A. D., for there is a defect in the notice which seems fatal to the appellant's case. It is necessary that in the notice the specific service should be stated, which the proprietor no longer requires under section 107E (b). In the notice in this case the only service mentioned is referred to in the words 'khidmat mazhabi,' which are of the most general description and certainly indicate no specific service.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 6th October 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Ghazipur District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 21st, 1915.)—The Additional Commissioner has not come to any clear finding as to what the facts of the case are. I have been through the evidence, and the facts so far as the evidence shows appear to be these. The plots in suit along with other plots were originally a joint holding of the three brothers, Ramanand Rai, defendant, Jageshar, father of the defendant, Ramdeo, Kauleshar, the husband of the late tenant, Mussammat Janki. During the life-time of Kauleshar, there was a division between the three brothers. Kauleshar died when the old Rent Act of 1881 was in force, and on his death his widow's name was recorded as sole occupancy tenant in respect of the plots in suit. Her name continued to be recorded up to 1309 Fasli inclusive, but disappeared from 1310 when the present defendants' names were recorded, presumably as her heirs. One witness who gave his evidence in January 1914 says that Musammat Janki died some 12 or 13 years ago. His evidence is consistent with her dying either before or after the 1st January 1902, when the present Tenancy Act came into force. As her name was recorded during the whole of 1309 Fasli, in the presence of any other evidence it may be fairly taken that she died after the 1st January 1902, that is to say, in the middle of 1309 Fasli.

Under Selected Decision No. 3 of 1907 then, the succession is governed by section 22 of the present Act, and not by section 9 of the former Act which would require proof of sharing in the cultivation by the brother before the brother could succeed, which, as the partition took place sometime before Kauleshar's death, was not the case. Under section 22 then, the brother succeeds at the death of the widow in any circumstances. The respondent argues that only brothers who remained joint with the original occupancy tenants are entitled to succeed and that as the defendant, Ramdeo, had separated from Kauleshar, they could not succeed. The respondent is unable to produce any ruling in support of this contention, which is oppossed to the clear wording of the section. In this view Ramanand Rai has a right to succeed to Musammat Janki in the occupancy holding, and Ramdeo, who is only a brother's son and did not share in the cultivation at the time of Kauleshar's death, has no right.

I would set aside the order of the Additional Commissioner and restore that of the Assistant Collector, respondent paying costs throughout.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge of Budaun, dated the 31st of August 1914.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. D. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENE.—The facts connected with this appeal so far as they are material to our decision are as follows. The plaintiff is a recorded co-sharer and in possession of certain property in the mahal. He has been recorded for three years. It is conceded that if he is a "co-sharer", he is entitled to bring the present suit for pre-emption as against a stranger. The defendant-vendee, however, contends that the plaintiff is not a co-sharer, because his vendor had no title to sell to him; on the contrary that the real owner of the share (which the plaintiff's vendor purported to sell) sold the share to him. The lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff being a recorded co-sharer in possession of the property and no step having been taken to set aside the sale, or to oust him from possession, he must be regarded as a co-sharer. In our opinion this view is quite correct.

It is next argued that the Court of first instance having found that the property, in respect of which the plaintiff is recorded, could not be sold by the plaintiff's vendor, and that this share has vested in the defendant in the present suit, and the finding not having been set aside by the lower Appellate Court, the suit should not have been remanded. It is quite impossible that two persons could be the owners of the same share at the same time. In our opinion, the Court below must be taken to have set aside the finding of the Court of first instance.

Under these circumstances the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The short question in this case, is whether an attachment obtained by the defendant in execution of a decree against the widow of the late Maria Pillai and his three divided brothers should not be declared to be subject to a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff executed by the three surviving brothers in satisfaction of his debts. Ordinarily, of course, his widow would have been his heiress but under the terms of the partition deed, Exhibit A, between the four brothers, it was provided that in the event of the death of any one of them without male issue his share of the joint family properties, after deducting any alienations made by him, should be divided among the surviving brothers. It was held in Kantee Chandra Mukerji v. Ali-i-Nabi (1), in a precisely similar case that such a settlement was neither in contravention of Hindu Law nor obnoxious to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, section 6 (a), as being a transfer of an expectant interest in property. After the partition the settlors had full powers of disposition over their respective shares, and were at liberty to provide by settlement inter vivos what should become of those shares in the event of their deaths without male issue. They might even, according to the English decisions, have bound themselves by contract to dispose of their property in a particular way by Will, and I see no objection to their doing so by settlement. I think the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Four brothers entered into a partition of their family properties on the 20th of July 1904. The deed of partition (Exhibit A) provided that "the respective parties should take and enjoy the properties which fell to their share, with the right to alienate the same by gift, sale, etc." Then it provided for a right of pre-emption if one of the brothers should desire to sell his share. The clause which is in dispute in this case is in these terms: "As we four have thus entered into a partition, each should enjoy his share until his death and when deceased leaves no male issue the properties which may remain at the death, after excluding the properties that may have been alienated by him, should go rateably to the other sharers." Maria Pillai, one of the four brothers died without male issue but leaving a widow and a daughter. Maria Pillai died in 1911. The defendant in this case obtained a decree against the widow of Maria Pillai and others for a debt due by the deceased. The three surviving brothers executed a deed of mortgage to the plaintiff in this case on the 31st May 1911 for Rs 5,000. The consideration is said to consist of debts payable by the deceased Maria Pillai. When the property was attached in execution of the decree obtained by the defendant, the plaintiff put in a petition that the property should be sold subject to his mortgage. The claim was rejected. The present suit is brought for a declaration of plaintiff's rights under the mortgage. The Subordinate Judge upheld the plaintiff's contention and gave him a decree as prayed. He relied chiefly upon the decision of Kantee Chandra Mukerji v. Al-i-Nabi (1), which is practically on all fours with the present case. Although the point cannot be said to be free from doubt, I am not prepared to differ from the view taken in Kanti Chandra Mukerjee v. Al-i-Nabi (1). In the present case there is no restraint upon alienation. The last clause to which I have referred would apply only to residue of the property, which may be left by Maria Pillai after making such alienations as he chose during his life-time. It was contended that the provision for the undisposed of properties devolving upon the remaining brothers is practically a restraint upon the power to make a Will, which is equivalent to a restraint upon alienation. It is doubtful whether Maria Pillai was not competent to dispose of the property by Will notwithstanding the language used in this clause. Even on the supposition that the clause imposes fetters upon the powers of devise, I am not satisfied that such a covenant is invalid.

Under the English Law it was held Goylmer v. Paddisto (2)] by Lord Chancellor Finch that a contract to devise lands can be enforced by persons claiming under the party who makes the contract. In Goilmere v. Battison (3), and Fortescue v. Hennah (4) this view was accepted as correct. All these cases are reviewed in In re Parkin, Hill v. Schwarz (5), where it is pointed out that although the persons in whose favour there is a contract to make a Will can sue to enforce it, the Courts should not give relief if the object of the contract is to enable the grantee to execise only a power of appointment. I think that as Maria Pillai was absolutely entitled to the property and could have disposed of it in any way he chose, the clause in the partition must be construed as a contract to leave the undisposed of residue to his brothers. The English decisions to which I have referred to show that such a contract as this is not void. There is no question in this case of creating a new line of succession as in Venkatarammanna v. Brammanna Sastrulu (6) and in Anantha Tirtha Chariar v. Naganuthu Ambalagaren (7). If the clause had directed that the property should go in a particular line of succession, then Jatendra Mohan Tagore v. Gauendra Mohan Tagore (8) would be applicable and the direction would be invalid. Reference may be made to the cases in which it has been held that agreements not to divide property were held enforceable, although they would not prevent a party entering into such an agreement from alienating it. See Anand Chandra Ghose v. Prankisto Dutt (9) and Rajender Dutt v. Sham Chand Mitter (10). The Bombay High Court in Ramlinga Khanapure v. Virupakshi Khanapure (11) seem to doubt this position. But the preponderance of authority is in favour of the view that the parties who are entitled to divide a property can waive their rights. It was so stated by Lyndhurst, L. C., in Jefferys v. Jefferys (12). "My impression is that the principle of the Court to withhold its assistance from a volunteer applies equally, whether he seeks to have the benefit of a contract, a covenant, or a settlement." But in later cases it was held that this would not affect provisions in a marriage settlement for giving the property or devising it [see Lee v. Lee (13)]. This view proceeds on the principle in marriage settlements "consideration permeates all covenants." The same may be said of covenants in partition-deeds entered into among members belonging to a joint family. I am, therefore, prepared to follow Kantee Chandra Mukerji v. Ali-i-Nabi (1) and Ram Nirunjun Singh v. Prayag Singh (14). The decision of the Privy Council in Purna Shashi Bhattacharji v. Kalidhan Rai Chowdhury (15) only lays down that where an attempt is made to alter the line of succession by means of a provision for the devolution of the estate on the death of one of the members without male issue, such an arrangement is opposed to the decision in Jatendra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (8), and that it should not be given effect to. But where there is no attempt to create a new line of succession, I see no reason for holding that as a contract come to at the time of the partition the clause should not be given effect to.

I agree with the learned Chief Justice to hold that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 107 (b)—Rent-free grant—Judicial decision—Assessment of revenue.

In a suit for assessment of revenue on a holding held rent-free in consideration of the surrender by the grantee of the previous proprietary rights there were upon record the judgments of 1865 of the Assistant Settlement Officer and Settlement Officer finding that the grantee was entitled to be maintained in rent-free possession of the land without payment of revenue:

Held, that the judgments were judicial decisions within the meaning of section 107 (b) of the Oudh Rent Act, and that the grantee was entitled to hold the land rent-free.

Third appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 4th August 1909, confirming that of the Collector, Bara Banki District, in a case of fixation of rent.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, J. M.—(February 4th, 1910).—The suit was for assessment of revenue on a holding held rent-free in consideration of the surrender by the grantee of the previous proprietary rights. The lower Courts have concurrently held that the circumstances are similar to those of the case decided in Munshi Gobind Prasad v. Suraj Bakhsh (1). It appears to me extraordinary that they have omitted to notice the proved facts which differentiate the case completely, from that of Munshi Gobind Prasad v. Suraj Bakhsh (1). There are upon record judgments the Assistant Settlement Officer and Settlement Officer, dated 16th November 1865, finding that the grantee was entitled to be maintained in rent-free possession of the land without payment of revenue and refusing an application of the zemindar to have revenue assessed on it. The Settlement Officer had at that time the full powers of a Civil Court and was entitled to decree or refuse resumption or assessment of rent if he had thought fit. It is clear that this land was, in the words of section 107 (b), held under a judicial decision previously to the first day of January 1902. The case is precisely similar to that in Selected Decision No. 6 of 1909. For the respondent it is urged (i) that Mr. Harington's decree applied only during the life-time of Imam Ali Khan, then zemindar, and (ii) that respondent is not the representative of Imam Ali Khan but an auction-purchaser of the rights of Imam Ali Khan. I find nothing in the judgment of Mr. Harington to justify the first claim. It was clearly and undoubtedly a finding that the grantee was entitled to hold the land rent-free in perpetuity. The second contention appears with reference to section 107 (b) irrelevant and I fail to understand that it has any basis as regards any other law. The appeal must be allowed with costs on respondent throughout these proceedings.

PORTER, S. M.—I concur.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX r. 8, O. XVII, r. 2—Adjourned hearing—Non-appearance of plaintiff—Court, power of—Procedure.

Where neither the plaintiff nor his Pleader appears on a day to which the hearing of a suit has been adjourned, the Court must make an order under Order IX, rule 8 and it is not entitled to proceed to decide the suit on the merits. [p. 553, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 24th October 1914.

Mr. L. R. Dube, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order refusing to entertain an application under Order IX, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The facts are as follows. The suit was a suit to recover a large sum alleged to be due on foot of two mortgages. One of the pleas raised by the defendant was that the plaintiff had not obtained a Succession Certificate to collect the debts. There seems to have been unavoidable delay in obtaining the certificate for which the plaintiff was not responsible, and the Court after hearing witnesses had allowed the plaintiff time to obtain a certificate on a number of occasions. Finally the 17th of July 1914 was fixed. On that day neither the plaintiff nor the plaintiff's Pleaders appeared. The Court proceeded to decide the case on the merits. It found that the bond was duly executed, that the amount was due but that the Succession Certificate not having been obtained, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. The Court made a decree dismissing the suit with costs. The plaintiff then made an application under Order IX, rule 9. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that Order IX, rule 9, did not apply and dismissed the application with costs. It is from this order that the present appeal is taken. Order XVII, rule 2, provides as follows: "Where, on any day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned, the parties or any of them fail to appear, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Order IX or make such other order as it thinks fit." In our opinion if the Court intends to dispose of the case where neither the plaintiff, nor the Pleader, appears on a day to which the hearing of the suit has been adjourned, it must make an order under Order IX, rule 8. It is not entitled to proceed to decide the suit on the merits. It is contended that the concluding words of the rule "or make such order as it thinks fit" entitle the Court to decide the case. We do not think that this is the true construction of these words. In the very next rule where it is intended that the Court should decide the suit, the words used are different. The Court is directed to "proceed to decide the suit forthwith." In our opinion, therefore, the Court below ought not to have decided the suit on the merits but ought, if it did not intend to give the plaintiff or her Pleader any other opportunity of appearing, to have dismissed the suit for "default of appearance." Had it done so, the plaintiff would have had a right to make an application under Order IX, rule 9, and that application would have been decided on its merits. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the Court, rightly or wrongly, having made a decree, the proper remedy was to appeal from the decree. There is considerable force in this argument. We find, however, that when the application was made to the Court below, the applicant asked that the application should be treated as an application for a review of judgment. We think under the peculiar circumstances of this case and having regard to the fact that the decree of the Court below was not justified by law, it ought to have treated the application as one for a review of judgment, particularly when the plaintiff's Pleader asked that that should be done. We think the justice of the present case will be met by sending back the case to the Court below with directions to treat the application as one for review of judgment. It is stated that there is already pending an application for a review of judgment in the Court below. If this be the case, the Court can put up both matters and dispose of them at the same time. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order appealed from and remand the case with directions to the Court below to re-admit the application and treat it as one for review of judgment. We make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 154 (b)—Grant—Specific service—Muafi—Specific service not required—Resumption of grant—Notice—Pleading.

Where in a suit for the resumption of a 'muafi' land on the ground that it was given for the performance of a specific service no longer required, the plaint did not allege the specific service which the proprietor no longer required, nor was there any evidence to show that the notice mentioning the non-requirement of the specific service was served on the grantee:

Held, that the plaint and the notice were both defective and the suit was not maintainable on these grounds.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Agra Division, dated the 8th September 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Agra District, in a case of resumption of muafi.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(February 15th, 1915).—The plaint in this case was most indefinite. The plaintiff sued for resumption, but it is not clear whether under section 154 (1) (a) on the ground that it was held rent-free at the pleasure of the grantor, or under (b) on the ground that it was given for the performance of a specific service no longer required. It now appears from the plaintiff's Pleader that the suit was under (b). The plaint does not mention any specific service. All that it says is that the plaintiff asked the defendant to give up the land several times, and there is mention of a notice by a post card in the preliminary part of the plaint. There is no evidence whatever that the notice that the service was no longer required, ever reached the defendant. The defendant admits before me that he received a post card about the muafi being given up, but can say no more. In my opinion the plaint was defective originally, in that it did not allege the specific service which the proprietor no longer required, and the suit must break down at any rate on the ground that there is no evidence whatever that notice in writing was given to the defendant that any specific service was no longer required. In consequence probably of the indefinite nature of the plaint no proper issue as regards the resumability of the land was framed. The Assistant Collector misunderstood the law and decided that the land could not be resumed because the conditions of section 158 were fulfilled—an obviously wrong finding. The Commissioner has held that the grant was one made for the maintenance of a temple, but this allegation has not been made either in the plaint nor by the plaintiff in evidence. It seems to me that the proper course is to dismiss the suit, on the ground that there is no evidence that notice in writing has been given that the plaintiff no longer required the specific service for the performance of which the land is held rent-free.

I would, therefore, set aside the orders of the lower Court and dismiss the suit, respondent paying costs throughout. This will be no bar to his giving proper notice and filing a fresh suit.

Pre-emption—Right given by Wajib-ul-arz on rehan, Simple mortgage, whether rehan

Held, that the right could not be exercised if the transacion was a simple mortgage as defined in the Transfer of Property Act of 1882.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 17th March 1913.

The Hon'be Mr. Abdul Raoof, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiffs alleged that the transaction between the defendants was in reality a usufructuary mortgage dressed up in the guise of a simple mortgage, so as to defeat their right of pre-emption. They went on further to say that even if the Court found that the transaction was a simple mortgage, they had a right to be substituted in the mortgage. The lower Appellate Court has found as a matter of fact that the transaction was a simple mortgage, and this finding is binding upon us in second appeal.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellants that even on this finding the plaintiffs are entitled to pre-empt the mortgage. We shall assume for the purposes of the present appeal that some right of pre-emption does exist. We shall also assume that this right of pre-emption extends to the case of a usufructuary mortgage. The question remains, have the plaintiffs satisfactorily proved the existence of a custom applying to the case of a simple mortgage? The evidence in support consists of an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of 1875. This entry records rights of pre-emption in the case of sale, mortgage and conditional sale. With regard to mortgage the expression used is "rehan". At the present time no doubt this expression is capable of including any transaction which is a "mortgage" within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act; but it is an expression which would have been hardly appropriate to a simple mortgage in the year 1875. It is an expression which most people would understand when used by villagers as meaning a usufructuary mortgage. That this is not an unreasonable view of the case is clearly shown by what happened in the Court below. All the arguments and the evidence centred round the question whether the transaction was a simple mortgage or a usufructuary mortgage. This was the only point argued in the Court below, and it seems as if it were there conceded that unless the Court held the transaction to be a usufructuary mortgage, the plaintiffs had no case. In our opinion the plaintiffs failed to prove, by the evidence they adduced, the existence of a custom entitling pre-emption in the case of a simple mortgage.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

An order wrongly directing the ejectment of a mrotgagee in possession deprives the mortgagee of his legal rights and is, therefore, a serious error of law which justifies interference in revision. [p. 556, col. 1.]

Application for revision from an order of the Collector, Ghazipur (as Commissioner), dated the 6th July 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Ghazipur District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 19th, 1915.)—The point for decision is a simple one. A tenant at fixedrates who has usufructuarily mortgagedhis holding dies without heirs. Can the landholder eject the mortgagee in possession without paying off the mortgage-money? For the respondents it is argued that the fixed-rate tenancy came to an end when the tenant died without heirs and that this being so, the mortgagee's interest came to an end at the same time. The High Court in Tulshi Ram v. Gur Dayal Singh (1) have held that in such a case the landholder is entitled to redeem the mortgage, though they have not very definitely held whether the landholder can eject the mortgagee without redeeming such a mortgage. They have, however, in that judgment expressed the opinion that a fixed-rate tenancy does not escheat to the Crown but goes back to the estate out of which it was charged and lapses to the landholder. The interest of a fixed-rate tenancy is a transferable interest, and the mortgage was a legal one. There is a decision of the Board in a somewhat analogous case reported as Beni Ram v. Ram Prasad (2), in which they held that the landholder could not eject the mortgagee of a grove-holder after the grove-holder's death so long as the land retained the character of a grove. The respondents have not produced any decision of the Board contrary to the High Court decision which I have mentioned above, and I am strengthened in my view that the ejectment is not valid by the fact that my predecessor, Sir Duncan Baillie, in admitting this application for revision expressed the opinion that in a case of this sort the landholder cannot eject the mortgagee, without redeeming the mortgage.

There is one special feature in the present case, which is that the mortgagor of the land was the widow of the former fixed-rate tenant, but, as there were no heirs, I am unable to hold that she had no power to execute the mortgage. I am of opinion then that there has been a serious and palpable error of law, which has had the effect of depriving the defendant of his legal rights, and this is a case in which the Board should interfere in revision.

I would set aside the orders of the lower Courts and dismiss the suit for ejectment, respondents paying costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Mortgage-decree making mortgagor "personally liable for balance due under the decree" after sale of mortgaged property, whether a decree for "payment of money" on a certain date—Twelve years to be calculated from date of decree or from date when sale-proceeds prove insufficient to satisfy decree—Decree against estate managed by Court of Wards—Decree not transferred to Collector for execution—Mortgagee, whether entitled to benefit of exclusion of period of management by Court of Wards.

A mortgage decree directing that the "defendants be personally liable for any balance not obtained by such sale," is not a decree for payment of money on a certain date within the meaning of clause (1) (b) of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the period of twelve years under that section must be calculated from the date of the decree, and not from the date when the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged property prove insufficient to satisfy the decree and the balance is ascertained. Appeal against an order of the District Court of North Arcot, in Execution Petition No. 88 of 1912 (in Original Suit No. 6 of 1890 on the file of the District Court of North Arcot.)

FACTS.—In execution proceedings in respect of a decree of the District Court of North Arcot passed in 1890 the question was whether the application to execute the decree in 1912 was barred by limitation. The decree itself first gave a remedy against the mortgaged properties and for the balance against the person and other properties of the judgment-debtor.

VENKATA PERUMAL v. PRAYAG DASSJEE.

Mr. L. S. Veeraraghava Iyer for Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant:—The clause (1) (b) of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure will not apply, as it cannot be said that money was payable on a certain date within the meaning of that section. This view is supported by Jnanendra Nath Bose v. Khulna Loan Co. Ltd. (1) and the recent decision in Venkatamma v. Manikkam Nayani Varu (2).

Mr. S. Gopalasami Aiyangar, for the Respondent:—The "date" becomes "certain" within the meaning of that section, as soon as the remedy against the mortgaged property was exhausted. Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind (3).

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 17th September 1914, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The lower Court's conclusion against the appellant is not sustainable, in so far as it is based on the suspension of respondent's right to execute during the Court of Ward's possession of the former's estate. The first period of that possession was not long enough, if excluded from the computation, to justify respondent's delay; and the second, during which (it is agreed) the decree was not transferred to the Collector for execution, cannot be excluded. [Kumara Venkata Perumal v. Velayuda Reddi (4)].

Respondent has then urged that he is entitled to execute within 12 years from the date on which he obtained personal decree against the appellant, and that the lower Court should be called on to deal with the application on that footing. The lower Court did not consider this at the hearing before it, because it had another ground of decision, in its own opinion satisfactory. In these circumstances we think that respondent should not be debarred from relying on the computation of time from the date of the personal decree now.

The lower Court is requested to submit a finding on the issue whether the application is barred by limitation in the light of the foregoing. Fresh evidence may be taken. Finding should be submitted within six weeks and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of North Arcot submitted the following FINDING.—The High Court requires a finding in Execution Petition No. 88 of 1912, "whether the application is barred by limitation." This Court took on file the said application, holding that it was not barred, when the period that the Court of Wards held charge of the judgment-debtor's estate was excluded, by the 12 years' rule of section 48, Civil Procedure Code. The judgment-debtor is the appellant.

2. In the High Court it was apparently argued that the decree-holder should be allowed to make his computation of time from the date of the personal decree. There has not, however, been any separate personal decree in the suit (Original Suit No. 6 of 1890). The decree directs, first, the sale of the mortgaged property and then proceeds "that the defendant be personally liable for any balance not obtained by such sale." The mortgaged property was sold on 24th July 1893 and the sale confirmed on 26th September 1893. The decree-holder argues that until the mortgaged property had been disposed of he was not at liberty to proceed further, and that, therefore, the portion of the decree which was against the person was not executable until 26th September 1893. He, therefore, argues that he should be allowed to reckon the 12 years allowed to him under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, from that date.

3. As regards the period to be excluded on account of the transfer to the Court of Wards, my predecessor allowed six years and seven months. The date of the notification in the Fort Saint George Gazette was 1st August 1899, and the decrees were re-transferred to this Court on 27th February 1906. The period is, therefore, correct within a day or two, and no objection was previously taken to this. The High Court has decided already that this first period should be allowed, and that the second period during which the Court of Wards held charge of the estate should not be allowed; so there is nothing further to discuss on this point.

4. The decree-holder, therefore, claims time up to 26th April 1912, on which date this

(1) 24 Ind. Cas. 35; 18 C. W. N. 492.
(2) 26 Ind. Cas. 244; 16 M. L. T. 399.
(3) 15 Ind. Cas. 822; 36 B. 365; 14 Bom. L. R. 381.
(4) 24 Ind. Cas. 195; 27 M. L. J. 25.

Court had already closed for the annual recess. The execution application now in question was filed on 24th June 1912, the day the Court re-opened after the recess, and it is, therefore, said to be in time.

5. For the judgment-debtor it was argued that as there was no separate personal decree there was no case. I do not read the order of the High Court in this sense. It would certainly appear that it was re-presented to the Court that there was a separate personal decree, but the order is in general terms. I consider that it applies to the personal decree embodied in the original mortgage-decree.

6. The only question which I have to consider is, whether I am to follow the ruling in Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind (3), that section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code applies only to a decree executable at the date it was passed, and that if it is not so executable, there is 12 years' limitation from the date it becomes executable. It is admitted in the present case that the personal portion of the decree was not executable until 26th September 1893. For the decree-holder it is argued that this Court should follow that decision. For the judgment-debtor reliance is placed upon the Calcutta case of Jaimangalbati Misrain v. Badan Chand Das (5), in which the decree was a combined decree for sale and personal decree, as in the present case. The Calcutta High Court held that the decree-holder had only 12 years from the date of the original decree. Although the date of this decision is later than the Bombay case, the latter was not mentioned by their Lordships. The decision in Janendra Nath Bose v. Khulna Loan Co. Ld.(1) is another similar case more recently decided, in which the Calcutta High Court have specifically held that the 12 years run from the date of the original combined decree, and not from the date of sale of the mortgaged property.

7. In a recent appeal from this Court in Venkatamma v. Manikkam Nayani Varu (2), their Lordships of the Madras High Court have considered the Bombay case, though it was not then necessary to make a decision on the point. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar appeared very doubtful but said he would feel inclined to follow it (the Bombay decision), if it was necessary to do so in the case in hand, but Mr. Justice Napier had still greater doubts as to the greatness of construction of section 48, Civil Procedure Code.

8. I feel that it is hardly for me to discuss the question when the superior Courts are differing, but unless and until the Madras High Court determines otherwise I shall, without hesitation, follow the Calcutta High Court. My finding, therefore, is that the application is barred by limitation.

This case again coming on for hearing yesterday and this day the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The lower Court's finding is that execution of the decree is barred.

There is no doubt that, though there is no separate personal decree, a personal decree is included in the terms of the decree under execution, which permit plaintiff to recover from defendant personally "any balance not obtained by the sale" of the mortgaged property.

Authority is unsettled as to the portion of section 48 applicable to such a decree, Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind (3) being relied on by plaintiff as justifying the view that the twelve years' period runs from the date on which the particular provision in the decree in question becomes executable, and Jaimangalbati Misrain v. Badan Chand Das (5) and Jnanendra Nath Bose v. Khulna Loan Co. Ld. (1) by defendant as showing that the twelve years' period must be applied to the decree from the date on which it was passed. The effect of the only decision of this Court which calls for mention, Venkatamma v. Manikkam Nayani Varu (2), is indecisive. We think it sufficient that the decree before us was never at any time, after it was passed, inexecutable and that it did not provide for the payment of any money by defendant on a certain date. In veiw of these facts we apply section 48 (1) (a) and hold that execution is barred. The result is that the appeal is allowed and the execution petition dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Partition, entries made in course of, binding effect of—Meaning of 'ghair maurusi 13 years' and 'khud kasht 19 years'.

The parties to a partition are bound by the entries made in the course of partition. The entry 'ghair maurusi 13 years' would not mean an occupancy tenure but a non-occupancy one as the emphasis is on the nature of the tenure. Similarly, 'khudkasht 19 years' means a non-occupancy tenure and cannot mean an ex-proprietary tenure.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 1st September 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Gorakhpur District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

TWEEDY, J. M.—(March 16th, 1914.)—The facts are clearly stated in the Commissioner's judgment but I cannot agree with his view of the law. It is a sound proposition that the parties to a partition are bound by the entries made in the course of the partition, but in the present case they do not mean what the Commissioner supposes. As to No. 5 the entry is "ghair maurusi 13 sal". Here the emphasis is on the nature of the tenure and not on the period of cultivation. It is clear that this holding, even though described as of 13 years' standing, was treated as non-occupancy at the partition. As to 32/1 the entry is "khud kasht 19 years". This is an absurd entry, for in partition it became a tenancy of some kind and could not remain khud kasht. If the respondent had claimed the land as his sir and it had been so decided at the partition, the tenancy would have been recorded as ex-proprietary. It is clear, therefore, either that he did, not claim the land as his sir or that if he did the claim was decided against him. The meaning then to be attached to these two entries is the same, namely, that the holding referred to has been treated as non-occupancy in the partition.

I would, therefore, decree the appeal as to Nos. 5 and 32/1 and dismiss it as to No. 7/4. Costs on parties.

BAILLIE, S. M.—I would concur in Junior Member's decision, dated 16th March 1914.

Malabar Tenants' Improvements Act (I of 1900), s. 5—Decree determining tenancy and directing payment of compensation—Non-payment of compensation—Continuance of tenant on land—Improvements subsequent to decree—"Tenant" entitled to claim compensation under Act.

A tenant continuing in possession pending receipt of compensation holds subject to the terms of the previous lease, that is, holds as a tenant and retains that status until his improvements are paid for. [p. 560, col. 1.]

Kummatha Vittil Kunhi Kuthalai Haji v. Antoni Gaveas, 19 Ind. Cas. 563; (1913) M. W. N. 339; 13 M. L. T. 350; 24 M. L. J. 472, followed.

The fact that no rent was paid by the tenant or that the decree determining his tenancy credited the value of improvements towards the arrears of rent due, does not alter his position. He is, therefore, a "tenant" under the Act entitled to claim compensation for the improvements effected by him subsequent to the decree. [p. 560, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 2 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Badagara, in Original Suit No. 687 of 1910.

Mr. J. L. Rozario, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Ryru Nambiar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that this appeal must be allowed, since the learned Subordinate Judge made two mistakes in his disposal.

Firstly, he held that the appellant's cause of action was the same in this and the previous suit. In fact in the previous suit it was the 1st defendant's holding prior to it. That holding was terminated by the decree in it, and the holding after decree constituted a fresh cause of action.

Next, though compensation for improvements was awarded by the previous decree, the learned Subordinate Judge did not keep in mind the provisions of section 5 of Act I of 1900, and the fact that a tenant continuing in possession pending receipt of compensation holds subject to the terms of his previous lease, that is, holds as a tenant. Kummatha Vittil Kunhi Kuthalai Haji v. Antoni Goveas (1). It follows that the 1st defendant must have held as a tenant after the decree against him, and that the learned Subordinate Judge's conclusion to the contrary, based only on the absence of payments of rent is unsustainable.

In reply our attention has been invited to the form of the previous decree, Exhibit I, and the fact that it requires no payment by the plaintiff but credits the compensation due from him against the arrears of rent payable by the 1st defendant. But the result of this is only that the payment must be treated as having been made by credit to the defendant on the date of the decree. The 1st defendant has still to show how further compensation would not be due to him for further improvements, which might have been made, when delivery might be applied for: and in fact the District Munsif's present valuation of improvements, to which the 1st defendant has taken no objection, shows that some have been made since the previous decree was passed. Again, till they are paid for, he will retain his status as a tenant and there will be no ground for a decision that he has held adversely or that the suit is barred under section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The second appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court being set aside and that of the District Munsif being restored with costs throughout.

Time for deposit of value of improvements will be six months.

Appeal allowed.

Grove, mortgage of—Mortgagor dying without heirs—Mortgagee, whether can be ejected—Grove, if constitutes improvement.

A tenant who had acquired occupancy rights over certain land subsequently planted a grove over it and mortgaged the same usufructuarily. Upon the death of the tenant without heirs, the zemindar sued the mortgagee for ejectment on the ground that he was a non-occupancy tenant of less than 12 years' standing:

Held, that as the transfer of the grove by mortgage was a valid transfer and the rights of the mortgagor passed to the mortgagee, the mortgagee could not be ejected. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the order of ejectment in such cases implies the confiscation of existing valuable rights under a law which is entirely irrelevant and is, therefore, so serious a mistake of law as to amount to an illegality. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Held, also, that the grove having been planted before the Tenancy Act is not an improvement for which compensation can be allowed to the mortgagee and an order of his ejectment passed. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Application for revision from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 7th August 1909, confirming that of the Assistant Collector of Benares District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(August 7th, 1910)—The suit was for ejectment from land recorded as held with occupancy rights, which was in fact uncultivated grove land. The defendant, now applicant, was the mortgagee of the person formerly recorded as tenant and has, as such, been in possession for some years. It is now alleged that the recorded tenant has died without heirs and that, therefore, the tenancy has determined. The same question has on several occasions been lately before the Board. In Beni Rai v. Ram Parsad Rai (1) a similar order was revised by the concurrent opinion of Mr. Porter and myself. Whilst we held that following Selected Decision No. 1 of 1908, the Revenue Court had jurisdiction to decide as to the ejectment, we considered that the principles laid down in Badri Prasad v. Bhimsen (2), still fully apply to all groves planted before the Tenancy Act came in force. That ruling laid down that the custom usual in regard to groves is that "subject to the delivery to the landholder of his share of the produce by the occupant, the latter should continue to occupy the land as long as the grove of trees continued to stand upon it. This condition is altogether apart from and independent of the question of the land having been cultivated by the tenant before the grove was planted, and of his having by previous occupation acquired a right of occupancy under the terms of section 8 of the Rent Act. The tenure of persons having the status of tenants in a mahal upon groves of trees rests upon a contract, express or implied, as to the occupation of the land to which contract section 8 is not necessarily applicable. The right to dispose of the trees forming a grove is not uncommonly held by tenants. The landholder cannot be allowed to eject the present grove-holder by notice under section 36 of the Rent Act". These principles fully apply. There is in the undisturbed possession of the defendant reason to believe that the usual custom by which rights of a tenant in groves are transferable, existed in this case. The transfer of these rights transferred also the right to occupy the land so long as the grove was standing. Applicant was, therefore, not liable to ejectment in a suit under section 58.

(1) Petition No. 15 of 1908-09.

It is claimed for respondent that the mistake made by the lower Court is not ground for revision. As I have said, the Board have already in previous instances held that a mistake such as this which implies the confiscation of existing valuable rights by ejectment under a law which is entirely irrelevant, is so serious a mistake of law as to amount to an illegality. I consider that there is ground for revision.

Applicant has also claimed that if it is found the mortgagee has a right in the grove, that he (the mortgagee) be compensated for that right as for an improvement. This claim must be dismissed. The grove planted before the Tenancy Act came in force is not an improvement. I would allow the revision and dismiss the suit for ejectment imposing costs on respondent throughout.

(2) Selected Decision No. 2 of 1892.

REYNOLDS, J. M.—I am not prepared to dissent from the previous ruling of the Board that section 185 does give revisional jurisdiction in such cases, and as to the merits of the case I concur entirely.

Application allowed.

Where on the death of K, a Hindu Gorewaha Rajput of the Garhshankar Tahsil, Hoshiarpur District, his widow held the land and after her death mutation was effected in favour of the collaterals who took possession: On a suit for possession by the daughter of K

Held, that she had failed to prove that by custom among Hindu Gorewaha Jats of Garhshankar Tahsil, Hoshiarpur District, a daughter was entitled to succeed to the ancestral property of her father in preference to his collaterals in the fifth degree. [p. 562, col. 2.]

Ranjhi Khan v. Musammat Kamun, 17 P. R. 1889, distinguished.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur Division, at Ludhiana, dated the 7th October 1910.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Appellant.

Lala Dharam Das Suri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the land of Khazana, who died about 20 years ago. His widow held the land till her death in 1907. Then mutation was effected in favour of the collaterals, who took possession. So Musammat Shiami, a widowed daughter, brought this suit for possession. Musammat Radhi, another daughter (married) of Khazana, was made a pro forma defendant. The claim was decreed by the first Court, but dismissed by the lower Appellate Court, so a further appeal was preferred to this Court by both the daughters, though what right a defendant had to appeal is not clear.

While the appeal was pending in this Court, Musammat Shiami died, and as Counsel had no instructions from Musammat Radhi, it was understood that she did not wish to press the appeal, so it was dismissed by order of this Court, dated 12th January 1914. Since then Musammat Radhi has moved this Court. She is the representative of her sister. We set aside the order of 12th January 1914, and, having heard arguments on behalf of the appellant, we proceed to decide the appeal on the merits.

A preliminary objection, that the appeal was time-barred, turned out to be ill-founded and was not pressed.

The parties are Hindu Ghorewaha Rajputs of the Garhshankar Tahsil of the Hoshiarpur District.

A good deal depends on the question, who should bear the initial burden of proof in such cases. In the present case the collaterals are related to the last male owner in the 5th degree. No doubt there is no general presumption that among agricultural tribes in the Punjab collaterals, however remote, exclude daughters. But it can safely be said that near collaterals do, as a general rule, exclude daughters from succession to ancestral property and it has not been even suggested to us that the land in suit is not ancestral. Where the collaterals are very distant, no presumption in their favour can be made.

It is apparently impossible to lay down any definite limit as to the degree of relationship, but it seems pretty obvious that the more remote the collateral, the less right he has to claim that any presumption should be made in his favour. In the present case, if no presumption is made in favour of either side, we can only fall back on the general rule, and hold that it is for the daughter, who is out of possession and invokes the aid of the Courts, to prove her right to oust the collaterals.

On behalf of the daughter's claim, stress is laid on Ranjhi Khan v. Musammat Kamun (1), which held that among Naru Rajputs of the Hoshiarpur Tahsil daughters were entitled to succeed in preference to collaterals beyond the fourth degree. This decision, however, was based largely on the provisions of the riwaj-i-am of the Hoshiarpur Tahsil, which distinctly lays down that daughters succeed in the absence of descendants of the great-grandfather.

This ruling, we note, was followed in a later ruling published as Fatteh Din v. Ram Rakha (2). But the ruling is distinguishable, since the riwaj-i-am of the Garhshankar Tahsil lays down that, as a general rule, daughters have no right of succession and can only succeed in the absence of collaterals (karabatian jaddi wa goti). It is urged on behalf of the appellant that such an entry, unsupported by instances, can have no weight, and that we should presume that the true custom has been incorrectly stated and should be presumed to be the same as in the Hoshiarpur Tahsil. We note, however that the riwaj-i-am of the Dasuya Tahsil also is against the daughters, stating that they never succeed. There is no reason why, if we are to allow the riwaj-i-am of a neighbouring Tahsil to have weight, we should adopt the Hoshiarpur custom rather than the Dasuya one.

No instances in the daughter's favour have been proved and there is no authority which has been cited in her favour except Ranjhi Khan v. Musammat Kamun (1), which, for reasons already stated, cannot be regarded as a guide to follow in the present case.

Then it is urged that, if the custom is uncertain, we should take it that the custom favours the daughter because Hindu Law would favour her. But the parties are governed by custom, and it is not a case in which we can hold that no custom exists and that the case must be decided according to the personal law of the parties.

We agree with the learned Divisional Judge that the plaintiff has failed to prove her right to oust the defendants, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal, second—Question of fact decided without there being evidence to support finding—Question of law.

Where a Court decides a question of fact without there being any evidence whatever to support its finding, there is a question of law and the Board will interfere in second appeal.

Application for revision from an order of the Collector, Ghazipur (as Commissioner), dated the 19th June 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Ghazipur District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 20th, 1915)—This case has not been well tried by either of the lower Courts. The ground of appeal before the Collector with the powers of a Commissioner was that the defendant cultivated the land without the landholder's consent and without paying rent and, therefore, could not acquire occupancy rights. The only evidence on the record is that of the patwari, who states that the rent of the holding No. 123 consisting of 10 fields is Rs. 10-12-0, and the extract of the khatauni which the patwari also files and attests as correct, which shows that this holding is divided into two parts, the first being composed of the plots in suit plus plot No. 500 which are entered as bila tashkhis, and three other numbers not in suit of which the rent is recorded as Rs. 10 odd. The extract of the khatauni filed by the patwari should be taken as correct, and it was clear that there was an error made in recording his statement, as he could not have said that the rent of Rs. 10 odd was entered in respect of the plots in suit in face of the khatauni. I find, therefore, that there is no evidence whatever to support the finding that the tenant cultivated with the landholder's consent. On the contrary, what evidence there is, shows that the land was held without any rent being assessed and is against contention. The fact that the Court decides the question of fact in one direction without any evidence whatever to support his finding is treated as a question of law. In this view I would hold that the Collector has fallen into a gross and palpable error of law which may cause substantial injustice.

I would, therefore, remand the case for a finding on the issue:—

"Did the defendant cultivate the land in suit with or without the landholder's consent?"

Fresh evidence to be taken, if necessary. Objecton in 10 days; if none filed, I will not necessarily fix another date.

Babus Mohini Mohan Chakravarti and Khitish Chandra Sen, for the Appellants.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastgir, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is concerned with certain dags, which I may classify as group I and group II. The argument as regards group I is that the appellants must be taken to be occupancy raiyats in the estate sold to the plaintiffs, and they claim a protected interest in the dags covered by this group as against the plaintiffs, who as auction-purchasers of the taraf were entitled to cancel all the encumbrances. We have been referred on this point to the pattah granted in the year 1848, set out in the paper-book at page 13. From this it appears that what was given was a permanent raiyati interest described as istemrari kaimi raiyat and istemrari daimi kaimi pattah. If this was the grant of a permanent interest, and if, as is admitted, at the date of this grant there was no occupancy right which had matured, then it seems to me not possible that an occupancy right could be acquired after the date of the grant. But if we read this document in reference to this permanency as relating solely to the fixity of rent, then I think the argument of the learned Pleader for the respondents avails, that the appellants would in that case be in the position of raiyats at fixed rates. It is not every raiyat who is protected, but only an occupancy raiyat, and I think the distinction on which he has relied and which is that set out in the Bengal Tenancy Act, distinguishing occupancy raiyats from raiyats at fixed rates and non-occupancy raiyats, must be borne in mind, and on this point he has referred to the case, Pachi Dasi v. Bala Das (1). I must hold, therefore, that the appellants were not occupancy raiyats. They were, therefore, not protected from eviction in respect of the dags covered by group I. It seems that less can be said as regards the dags of group II because the khatian records that the raiyati belonged to one Guru Das. The argument of the appellant has been that as the lands are recorded as being raiyati (though of some third party), he is entitled to reap the benefit of that record and to be protected But he is in no way connected with Guru Das. Whatever answer Guru Das, as a raiyat, if he be such, may have against the plaintiff, it is not a matter which seems to me to concern the appellants, who have stated that there was a dur-raiyati under the raiyati of one Mohesh.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[p. 565, col. 1.]

Held, further, that under the circumstances of this case to hold the service on the defendant to be a sufficient service was gross and palpable error of law which caused substantial injustice and that this was a ground for interference in revision. [p. 565, col. 1.]

Application for revision from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 10th December 1913, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Ballia District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(December 8th, 1914.)—The summons purported to have been served by affixation on the 3rd November. As to this the Assistant Collector wrote:—"The summonses were served on the applicant properly, as they were affixed to his house." The Additional Commissioner, though in no clear words, seems to have accepted this view. There is no evidence as to the service of the summons except the endorsement, which shows that, as the process-server did not meet with the defendant, he affixed the summons on his door: This is not a good service. It was his duty to make reasonable endeavours and reasonable search for the defendant. If the defendant were merely temporarily absent from his home when the process-server called, it should not have been noted that he could not be found: see rule 12, Board's Circular No. 2-II. There is no evidence then to support the finding of the lower Courts that the summons was properly served. There was thus a gross and palpable error of law which caused substantial injustice.

I would set aside the Assistant Collector's orders of the 18th and 21st August 1913 and the Commissioner's order and restore the case to the file of the Assistant Collector for re-trial of the suit for ejectment on its merits, respondent paying costs of all the proceedings so far.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 197—Suit for ejectment—Adverse possession—Jurisdiction—Issue not tried.

In a suit instituted in a Revenue Court for ejectment on the ground that the defendant was in possession without the plaintiff's consent and without the payment of any rent, the defendant pleaded that he was in proprietary and adverse possession of the land but this issue was not tried:

Held, that the District Judge on appeal ought to have acted under the provisions of section 197 of the Agra Tenancy Act and disposed of the plea of jurisdiction.

Balli v. Naubat Singh, 16 Ind. Cas. 120; 9 A. L. J. 771, followed.

Nandan Singh v. Ganga Prashad, 20 Ind. Cas. 892; 35 A. 512; 11 A. L. J. 786 and Selected Decision No. 30 of 1910, referred to.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Saharanpur, dated 30th April 1914.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted in the Court of an Assistant Collector. The suit as laid was for the ejectment of one Bhura. The Court of first instance passed an order for ejectment. Bhura appealed from the decree to the Court of the District Judge of Saharanpur. The allegation of the plaintiff was to the effect that the defendant was in possession of the land in dispute without the consent of the plaintiff and without the payment of any rent, and the defendant on the other hand raised the plea that he was in proprietary and adverse possession of the land. This issue apparently was never tried. The District Judge held that the suit did not lie under the Tenancy Act, as the Revenue Courts had no power to eject a trespasser. The learned Judge admitted in his judgment that he was bound by a ruling of this Court in Balli v. Naubat Singh(1), but he has preferred to follow what he himself calls an obiter dictum in Nandan Singh v. Ganga Prashad (2) together with Selected Decision No. 3 of 1910 of the Board of Revenue.

The learned Judge might with more propriety have saved himself all this extraordinary procedure on his part and confined himself to the law as laid down in section 197 of the N.-W. P. Tenancy Act.

I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send the case back to that Court, with directions to re-admit the appeal on its file of pending appeals and dispose of it according to law. Costs will follow the event.

Mortgage of sir land before the passing of the Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), effect of, on sir land.

NATIONAL INSURANCE & BANKING CO. v. BISWAMBAR CHOWDHURY.

A mortgage with or without possession before the 1st day of January 1902 has no effect whatever upon sir.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 13th November 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Ballia District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 23rd, 1915.)—The respondent relies on the High Court Full Bench decision of 1885, Harpal Singh v. Balgobind (1). In that particular case after the mortgage previous to the present Tenancy Act, the land ceased to be recorded as sir and the actual cultivators were recorded as tenants-in-chief apparently for a period of 36 years. The High Court held that, as the land ceased to be recorded as the sir of the proprietor and was not leased as the sir of a subsequent lessor, it had not retained its character of sir when the tenancy commenced and a right of occupancy therein could be acquired. The facts in the present case are somewhat different. The only period in dispute is the period between the mortgage and the sale, that is, between 1895 and and 1904. There is no evidence on record as to whether the land ceased to be recorded as sir or not during these years. Sir Duncan Baillie in the case referred to by the Additional Commissioner, Balgobind v. Bhakaun Pande, dated 19th March 1909, appears to have held that the tenant of a mortgagee of sir could acquire occupancy rights, the mortgage being before the present Tenancy Act. On the other hand, there is a later decision of Messrs. Tweedy and Baillie, dated April 1914, in Sultan Husain Khan v. Sewak Singh (2), which is opposed to this decision and to the view taken by the Additional Commissioner. It is stated in this decision that it has been repeatedly held by the Board that a mortgage with or without possession before the 1st of January 1902 has no effect whatever upon sir, and I have followed this view in a recent case.

(1) 7 A. 586; A. W. N. (1885) 134.
(2) 27 Ind. Cas. 586; 2 O. L. J. 11.

I would, therefore, hold that the respondent was merely a sub-tenant of sir before 1904. I may add that the respondent admits that there are certain plots in which he has not twelve years' cultivation and only contests the suit in respect of certain plots. I would set aside the order of the Commissioner and restore that of the Assistant Collector, respondent paying costs throughout.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—I agree.

A revision application based mainly on the ground that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, an objection which was never taken in the lower Court, has no merits and the High Court will not interfere. [p. 567, col. 1.]

Babu Probodh Kumar Das, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—It does not appear to us in this case that there are any merits which should induce us to interfere upon this appliction, which is mainly based upon the ground that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. No objection of this kind seems to have been taken in the lower Court and from the report which the learned Munsif has submitted to us, it would appear that no such objection was taken. He says that if such an objection had been taken, it would have been found mentioned in the findings or the judgment as is usually done in other cases. He further points out in his report that "it is significant that Bona Charan Nandi, who swore two affidavits on behalf of the petitioners, did not mention this fact in his first affidavit, and on receipt of intimation from Calcutta he swore a second affidavit to that effect".

We may point out, further, in this case, the disadvantage to which the plaintiff might be put by the absence of objection as to jurisdiction and the allowance of this application—in that, though his claim was for Rs. 156 he abandoned Rs. 56 of that claim in order to bring the matter within the jurisdiction of the Court. In these circumstances, it appears to us that the matter being one of discretion we should not interfere and we accordingly discharge the Rule with costs. As this Rule has been three times argued, we assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

KISHOR CHAND, LIQUIDATOR OF THE ENGINEERS AND CONTRACTORS COMPANY, LIMITED—RESPONDENT.

Companies—Right to forfeit shares, when properly exercised and by whom—Liability as contributory.

A right to forfeit shares must, in order to be effectually exercised, be pursued with the greatest exactness by the proper parties, i. e., by the Directors properly appointed and by the requisite number of them and in the proper manner and for proper cause. The right must be exercised bona fide for the purpose for which it was conferred. [p. 567, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, the Board of Directors passed a resolution authorizing the Managing Director to settle the matter of the appellant's liability with him and to place the result of such settlement before the next meeting of the Board for consideration and the Managing Director thereupon wrote to the appellant informing him that his shares had been forfeited, but the matter was never laid before the Board which, under the Articles of Association, was the only body empowered to forfeit the shares:

Held, that the Managing Director's action was altogether ultra vires and not binding upon the Company and that on the Company going into liquidation the appellant was rightly placed on the list of contributories and his name could not be removed. [p. 567, col. 2; p. 568, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous appeal from an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 6th of October 1914.

Mr. Obedulla, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point for decision in this appeal is whether the shares allotted to the appellant, Lala Kanshi Ram, were duly forfeited before the commencement of the winding-up. It appears that, on the 7th July 1912, the Board of Directors passed a resolution authorizing the Managing Director to settle the matter of the appellant's liability privately with him and to place the result of such settlement before the next meeting of the Board for consideration. The Managing Director thereupon wrote a letter to Lala Kanshi Ram on the 6th August 1912, informing him that his shares had been forfeited. It is quite clear that the matter was never laid before the meeting of the Board which, under the Articles of the Association, was the only body empowered to forfeit the shares, and it seems to me that the Managing Director's action was altogether ultra vires and is not binding upon the Company. There is reason to believe that the action taken by the Managing Director was not altogether bona fide.

A right to forfeit shares must, in order to be effectually exercised, be pursued with the greatest exactness: it must be exercised by the proper parties, i. e., by Directors properly appointed, and by the requisite number of them and in the proper manner and for proper cause. The right must be exercised bona fide for the purpose for which it was conferred. The power to forfeit is a trust, the execution of which will be narrowly scanned by the Court. It cannot, for example, be exercised surreptitiously, for the purpose of expelling a share-holder, nor by connivance, for the purpose of assisting him in getting rid of shares and retiring from the Company in fraud of the other share-holders. A Court will not sanction or recognise as valid a forfeiture made mala fide for any such purpose (vide Lindley on Companies, pp. 726—727).

For the aforesaid reasons, I am of opinion that the appellant was rightly placed upon the list of the contributories and that his name must remain there. I, therefore, affirm the order of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 194—Decree passed against several persons—Whether one of them can appeal without others joining him.

Section 194 of the Tenancy Act does not apply to appeals. Therefore only one out of a number of persons against whom a decree has been passed can sustain an appeal even though others do not join him.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 14th March 1914, reversing that of Assistant Collector, Bijnour District, in the a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—Though I must say that the burden of evidence appears to me in favour of the finding of the Court of first instance, the question involved is one of fact and I am unable in second appeal to interfere. The question was, whether the appellant or Man Singh was the tenant-in-chief during the three years for which Man Singh's name is recorded. The Commissioner has found that Man Singh was the tenant and apparently that appellant the sub-tenant. As I have said, this is a question of fact. It is urged that section 194 bars one party sustaining an appeal on behalf of others who do not join in it, but I do not think that section 194 applies in the case of an appeal. The law on the subject is laid down in the Civil Procedure Code and allows one party to sustain an appeal, even though others did not join him.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellants.

Dr. S. M. Suleman, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ibn-i-Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point of law raised by this second appeal is whether a suit by one person claiming to be the occupancy tenant of a certain holding against another person also claiming to be the occupancy tenant of the same holding, in which the relief sought is a declaration of the plaintiff's title or in the alternative recovery of possession, where the zemindar to whom the rent of the holding is payable is no party, is maintainable in a Civil Court. Sitting singly we have both of us been disposed to take the same view on this controverted point as did another learned Judge of this Court, on the strength of whose reported decision the lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit. We find, however, that so far as reported decisions of two Judges of this Court go, there is a strong concensus of opinion the other way. We may refer to the cases of Bhup v. Ram Lal (1) and Kanhi Ram v. Durga Prasad (2). We think it better that there should be uniformity of decision upon a question of this sort; and whatever our personal opinion regarding this point of law may be, we are satisfied that we should, sitting as a Bench, follow the trend of authority

Where there is no specific and definite evidence on record to show that any co-sharer other than the lambardar collects rent of a definite portion of a holding, Selected Decision No. 2 of 1910 will not apply and the lambardar alone will be entitled to eject tenants by notice.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 10th August 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Fyzabad District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(March 3rd, 1915.)—The appellant first contends that this village falls under section 126 (2) of the Oudh Rent Act being a pattidari estate. On the whole, in view of the entry in the mahalwar assessment statement at last Settlement, I cannot say he is wrong.

The appellant next says that, even if section 126 (1) is applicable, the lambardar must be considered to be a manager authorised to collect the rents on behalf of all the co-sharers, and refers me to Selected Decision No. 1 of 1897 and Deepa v. Udai Ram (1), and also to a case reported from the Judicial Commissioner's Court, Bhan Partab Sahi v. Manohar Lal (2), in which it is held that the word "manager" referred to in section 126 (1) of the Oudh Rent Act means the lambardar, and "that, speaking generally, a lambardar in an undivided mahal is entitled to collect the rents". Against this the respondent refers me to Selected Decision No. 2 of 1910, which lays down that "the mere fact of being lambardar does not empower a co-sharer who does not collect the rent to eject tenants." It is a pity that the Commissioner did not examine the patwari in more detail on the question of collection, for the evidence on the record is not very definite on this point. The impression on my mind is on the evidence that, as a rule, the lambardar collects in the shamilat patti in which this land is, but that sometimes one or other of the two co-sharers collects as well. We have an indefinite statement by one of the co-sharers, Shankar Lal, that he collects some of the rent in the holdings in dispute and Babu Ram, the lambardar, collects some. There are apparently at least three holdings in dispute and there is no definite allegation in respect of any one holding that the other co-sharer either collects rent or a definite portion of it. This being so, I do not think that Selected Decision No. 2 of 1910 applies.

I would, therefore, set aside the orders of the lower Courts and dismiss the suit to set aside the notice of ejectment, parties bearing their own costs throughout in the circumstances of the case.

Government Tenants (Punjab) Act (III of 1893)—Re-grant of lapsed occupancy tenancy by Revenue officer—Civil Court, whether can interfere.

The Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to interfere with the arrangements made by the Revenue authorities in the matter of the re-grant of a lapsed occupancy tenancy which is covered by the Government Tenants Act, III of 1893.

Second appeal from a decree of the Divisional Judge of the Gujranwala Division, dated the 8th April 1913.

Mr. Morton, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question to be here determined is whether the Civil Courts have any jurisdiction to interfere with the arrangements made by the Revenue Authorities in the matter of re-grant of a lapsed occupancy tenancy which is covered by the Government Tenants Act, III of 1893.

It is not in dispute that Sawan Singh, the original occupancy tenant to whom the grant was made, has died without heirs, as determined by section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. As has been held in Sahibzada v. Jawaya (1), the Revenue Authorities were then entitled to treat the grant as having lapsed, and to re-grant the tenancy to any one they pleased. They did in fact re-grant it to the present appellants, near collaterals of Sawan Singh, by the order of the Collector, dated 9th September 1910.

The plaintiff-respondent has claimed half the land as being a collateral in the same degree as the appellants. His relationship has been found to be established as a fact and this is a finding which cannot be interfered with in second appeal. It does not, however, follow that the plaintiff has any right to half the tenancy, and the learned Divisional Judge appears to me to have misconstrued the ruling in Ali Mardan v. Bakar Khan (2), as justifying him in giving plaintiff a decree. He has done so on a qualified statement by one of the appellants which he has treated as an admission of plaintiff's rights, and has thereby gone a good deal further than was contemplated by the ruling quoted.

I take it to be quite immaterial whether Kesar Singh's statement should be treated as an admission or not. The tenancy is limited to the existing grantees under section 6 of the 1893 Act and no one else has rights which can be recognised by the Civil Courts. It is open to Kesar Singh to allow the plaintiff to join with him in cultivation of the land if he pleases, though I do not understand his statement to mean that he is willing to do so. But it is quite another matter to treat the plaintiff as having a definite share in the tenancy without authority from the representatives of the Local Government.

I cannot follow the argument of the lower Appellate Court in its suggestion that Government should be put to the trouble of ejecting the plaintiff or otherwise enforcing the conditions of the tenancy, if so advised. The position seems to me to be the reverse one. If plaintiff considers that he has any right to share in the new grant, his remedy is not by suit in the Civil Court but by application to the Revenue authorities to modify their orders of 1910. Whether they would listen to him or not is a matter which no Civil Court can say, but it is easy to understand that they might strongly object to an addition to the existing grantees, and to my mind it is clear that the Courts cannot go over the heads of the responsible authorities in a suit to which Government is not even a party. It is their duty under the law to scrupulously refrain from any sort of encroachment on the powers of the Local Government where their action has no legal authority and may prove embarrassing.

The defendants' appeal is accordingly accepted. The decree of the lower Appellate Court in plaintiff's favour is set aside, and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout to the defendants.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 149, scope of—Court-fees, deficiency of, made up after several orders, effect of—Discretion—Appeal.

A plaint was presented to a Civil Court on the 19th April. On the 29th April an order was made on the plaintiff to pay the deficit Court-fees within a week. This was followed by several other orders providing for payment on later dates. Ultimately there was an order on the 7th August under which the balance was to be paid within five days, but it was paid the next day, the 8th August:

Held, that there was an order and also payment in conformity with that order within the meaning of section 149, Civil Procedure Code.

A discretion exercised properly under the section cannot be challenged in appeal.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Alipur, Zillah 24-Perganas, dated the 12th of May 1913, confirming that of the first Munsif, Sealdah, dated the 29th of June 1912.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Dhirendra K. Roy, for the Appellant.

Babu Jogendra Narayan Mozumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Alipur, affirming the decision of the first Munsif at Sealdah. The suit was for recovery of money and it was presented in the Small Cause Court at Sealdah on the 18th April 1911. That Court had no jurisdiction, so it was returned on the 19th. On the same date it was presented to the Munsif's Court. On the 29th of April an order was made on the plaintiff to pay the deficit Court-fees within a week. This was followed by several other orders providing for payment on later dates. Ultimately there was an order on the 7th August under which the balance was to be paid within five days. In fact it was paid the next day, the 8th August. Notwithstanding this, it has been held that the suit was not within time and must be dismissed. This appears to me to be an erroneous reading of section 149 of the Code, which provides for the power to make up deficiency of Court-fee and for that purpose vests the Court with powers, in its discretion, at any stage to allow the person, by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part, as the case may be, of such Court-fee, and upon such payment the document, in respect of which such fee is payable, is to have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance. In this case we have such an order as section 149 contemplates and there was payment in conformity with the terms of the order. So that I can see no reason why the provisions of section 149 should not apply.

Some doubt has been suggested as to whether the Judge exercised his discretion in making the various orders to which I have referred. It appears to me impossible to go into a question of that kind. He must be taken on the record, as it stands to have, exercised his discretion as provided by section 149. The result is, in my opinion, the decree of the Subordinate Judge and of the Munsif must be set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance in order that it may be heard in accordance with law. Costs hitherto incurred will follow the result.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 33, 79—Tenant holding under a heritable, non-transferable lease—Enhancement or alteration of rent.

Where a tenant holds a lease of sir land under a heritable but non-transferable lease, the rent of such a tenant cannot be enhanced under section 33 of the Oudh Rent Act, but it can be altered under section 79 of the Land Revenue Act at the time of Settlement. [p. 572, col. 1.]

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 6th May 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Fyzabad District, in a case of enhancement of rent.

JUDGMENT.—I do not think it is necessary to add to any considerable length to the clear and well-reasoned decision of the Commissioner, with which in its entirety I agree. I realise that in so deciding I go against certain decisions of the Board of Revenue, and in particular, one by Messers. Evans and Roberts pronounced in 1901. I find it difficult to understand how the Board in that case did not refer more in detail to the way in which the Settlement Officer remarked on the nature of the rights decreed to the respondents. The Settlement Officer considered that the rights decreed to them were equivalent to non-tranferable sir and this interpretation by the Appellate Court of the decree in appeal before them must be regarded as authoritative and conclusive. Non-transferable sir, like Mr. Pet, I understand to imply a heritable and non-transferable lease and in such a case the rent must be fixed by the Settlement Officer under section 79 and cannot otherwise be fixed. This suit was brought to have rent fixed under section 33. Section 33 gives three grounds on which rent can be enhanced and none of these grounds in any way apply to this case even under the interpretation of the decree accepted by Messrs. Evans and Roberts.

I entirely agree with the Commissioner that no suit under section 33 lies and that the respondents are persons whose rent can be altered only at Settlement and by an order of the Settlement Officer under section 79 of the Land Revenue Act.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Custom—Ancestral land, whether liable to attachment in hands of widow of deceased proprietor—Onus—Effect of attachment.

The burden of proving that the deceased's estate in the hands of his widow is not liable for his just debts lies heavily on the person asserting this. [p. 573, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 16th May 1913.

The case was referred to a Division Bench by the following order delivered by SHAH DIN, J.—(December 10th, 1914.)—The question for decision in this appeal is whether, where a male proprietor governed by Customary Law has contracted a debt, in respect of which a simple money-decree has been passed against him, and thereafter has died leaving ancestral landed property, which has come into the possession of his widow on the usual life-estate, such property is liable to be attached at the instance of the deceased proprietor's judgment-creditor in execution of his money-decree.

This question is not directly dealt with in the Full Bench ruling of this Court, Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1), though the terms of the reference and of the answer of the Full Bench thereto are wide enough to cover it. As cases of this description are by no means uncommon, I think that it is desirable to have an authoritative decision by a Division Bench on the question involved; and I refer the case to a Division Bench accordingly.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Oertel, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The matter for the decision in this case is clearly stated in the referring order. Before us a fresh point has been raised, that the fact of the attachment of the property during the life-time of the debtor establishes a kind of charge on it.

It is, however, admitted that attachment does not quite amount to a charge on the property; the point is not pressed with any warmth, and we are aware of no authority or principle which would justify the conclusion at which we are asked to arrive.

Attachment of property does not affect any title therein, but merely prohibits its transfer. We notice also that in the case on which Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) is based, the property had there too been attached during the life-time of the original debtor.

The difficulty in this case proceeds from the necessity of determining whether the widow is to be considered the next holder, as the term is used in Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1).

The tenure of the widow is very different from that of the reversioner both in its nature and in its origin. The widow's life-tenure originated in her right to maintenance, but though originally her right was one only of maintenance which in course of time became a right to the enjoyment of the whole estate, whether it exceeded her needs or not, it is not now disputable that her right is to the whole estate.

That right she derives from her marriage; she is her husband's representative and so far has this principle been carried that in many tribes she represents her husband even in collateral succession.

Had her husband remained in existence, he could not have resisted attachment of his property. How then can his widow, who derives all her right from her husband, claim a privilege which her husband did not enjoy?

The reversioners, on the other hand, derive their right not from the last male holder, but from the common ancestor and their right is antagonistic to that of the last male holder.

In this view Jagdip Singh v. Bawa Narain Singh (1) would appear not to cover the case of a widow, nor is there any internal evidence in the body of that judgment that the case of a widow was present to the minds of the learned Judges who decided the case.

In the past, it has been a generally accepted proposition that a widow for necessity may alienate her deceased husband's property and the satisfaction of his just debts has invariably been regarded as necessity.

Now, as has often been remarked, custom is not always logical, and to seek to extend custom by logical processes, e. g., by analogy, is a dangerous proceeding which may lead to very untoward and unexpected results.

Not without good reason, therefore, has it been laid down that custom is not a matter of inference, but a matter of proof. Custom is, in fact, whatever can be proved to be the custom, nothing more and nothing less.

As remarked above, it has been customary to regard the deceased's estate in the hands of his widow as liable for his just debts, but, if that view is erroneous and is to be superseded, the burden of proving that it is incorrect and deserving of that fate, lies heavily on the person asserting this. But no custom, unless consecrated by time, has the force of law.

In regard to the question now before us, we consider the widow's estate a continuation of her deceased husband's and hold that his property, so long as it remains in her hands, is liable to satisfy his debts. In this view we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 23, 30—Money lent

for gambling purposes—Finding to be specific and clear.

Where in a suit upon a promissory note the defence is that it was executed in respect of money advanced for gambling purposes, to render the money irrecoverable under section 23 or 30, Contract Act, 1872, it is not enough for the Court to find generally that the debt was contracted for gambling purposes, but it must also find whether it was lent for future play or for past play and what portion of it was used for such a purpose.

Subbaraya v. Devandra, 7 M. 301, followed.

Petitions, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decrees and judgments of the Court of the District Munsif of Tirumangalam, in Small Cause Suits Nos. 449, 448 and 442 of 1912, respectively.

Mr. K. N. Aiya, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. R. Shenoi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In these cases the lower Court has held no satisfactory trial. It has in each formulated the points for decision far too generally, and has failed to consider that the defendant in each set up a particular case in evidence, to which he had made no definite reference in his written statement. The conclusion that the debts sued for were contracted for gambling purposes is not clearly sufficient to render them irrecoverable with reference to section 23 or 30, Indian Contract Act, since it might cover alike money lent (1) for payment to others for losses already incurred, or (2) to enable defendant to gamble in the future, or (3) even to pay the amount of loss already due to plaintiff for past play. It is not clear that money lent in each of these different sets of circumstances could be irrecoverable, vide, for instance, Subbaraya v. Devandra (1).

It is a further objection to these decisions that they do not refer to or contain any conclusions regarding the details of the defence evidence. For instance, in Small Cause No. 481, though the written statement denied receipt of consideration, the defendant in evidence admitted that in exchange for the promissory note chits, apparently representing costs, were given, yet the judgment contains no reference to this. Nor do the other judgments to similar points.

In Civil Revision Petition No. 544 we consider that the lower Court has dealt with the evidence, as though the burden of proof regarding the passing of valid consideration were on plaintiff. It should have imposed it on defendant.

In these circumstances the lower Court's decisions must be set aside and the Small Cause Suits remanded for re-admission and re-trial. The lower Court must call on the defendants to submit amended written statements, in which their pleas are set out definitely and particularly. It should then set out the points for decision clearly in each case in the light of the foregoing.

Costs will follow the result.

Petition allowed; Suit remanded.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit under section 12 of the Rent Recovery Act. The learned District Judge has found that the tenancy of the appellant was from year to year. We are not prepared to say that in deciding this question of fact the learned Judge has committed any such error as can be corrected in second appeal, and accept that finding. He has also found that there was in effect oral notice to quit at the time when the tenant was wrongfully ejected. On these findings the tenant was entitled to be in possession for a year after the period when he was ejected, and the learned Judge's decree giving one year's mesne profits as damages in lieu of possession is, therefore, quite correct.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 127 of 1911 (A. S. No. 408 of 1910 on the file of the District Court of North Arcot), preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Ranipet, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1909.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and Hamid Hassan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Mir Sultan Moideen, Mir Zyauddin and S. Dorasami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Both the lower Courts have held that the land which forms the subject of the suit was portion of a burial ground, actually used at some time as such. It is not denied by the appellants that it was so used till about 20 years ago. On the other hand, there is some evidence that burials have taken place in the land until four or five years of the suit. On this finding the decree of the District Munsif (confirmed by the lower Appellate Court) was quite correct.

We have had some difficulty in following the argument before us. Authorities were cited to show that in some cases land which has once been used as a burial ground may be utilised for other purposes. These authorities distinguish a graveyard from land which has been dedicated for a mosque: the latter can never be used for any other purpose, whereas the former may, if it is no longer in use as a burial ground and if certain conditions (which need not be specified) are fulfilled. But those authorities can have no bearing on the question which is now sought to be argued before us. It is elementary law that if a piece of land is dedicated to one purpose, it cannot, contrary to the terms of the dedication and except in cases which fall under the cy-près doctrine (or its equivalent in Muhammadan Law), be utilised for any other purpose. No attempt was made to bring the present case under any of the special rules or exceptions.

The decree under appeal must stand and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the decree and judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wallis, dated the 17th of September 1913, in the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of this Court, in Civil Suit No. 317 of 1912.

Messrs D. Chamier, K. Krishna Pandalai, Rencontre and Tirumalai Pillai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. W. Barton, Branson and Branson, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Chief Justice, then Mr. Justice Wallis, sitting on the original side. The suit was brought by Monsiour Max, a merchant living in Marseilles, against Messrs. Hope Prudhomme and Co. for damages for breach of two contracts to supply ground-nuts. The contracts were admitted by the defendants, who claim to have been entitled to avoid them as they were procured by fraud and misrepresentation. The sole issue settled was whether the plaintiff made certain representation and, if so, whether the representation was false and whether the defendants were entitled to cancel the contract. The representation alleged in the written statement was that the plaintiff stated as a fact that he was sufficiently known to the National Bank of India here and that his drafts will be promptly discounted without banker's credit. The learned Judge found that there was no misrepresentation and that even if there was, the consent of the defendants to the contract was not caused by the misrepresentation within the meaning of section 19 of the Contract Act and that the defendants were accordingly not entitled to avoid the contracts. He, therefore, gave judgment for the plaintiff with damages based on the difference between the contract rate of 30·5 francs per 100 kilos and 33 francs, the price which the plaintiff had to pay in March in Marseilles for the same class of ground-nuts.

On appeal Mr. Chamier, for the defendants, renews the argument put before the learned Judge, further contends that the representation was a term of the contract and seeks to make out that the contract was not for delivery of ground-nuts in Marseilles, but for delivery to the National Bank of India as agents for the plaintiff in Madras on payment under discount of the bills drawn by the defendants upon M. Max. The first objection to this argument is that it was never set up in the written statement, and no issue was taken on it, and it was not urged before the learned Judge. Mr. Chamier contends that as it is a pure point of law arising on the construction of the correspondence, he can take it in appeal. We have allowed him to argue it and are satisfied that there is no foundation for the contention. The history of the contracts is set out by the learned Judge. The material facts are that the defendants opened negotiations with M. Max in May with a view to business during the ground-nuts season and suggested that payment should be by three months' drafts on him for 93 per cent. of the amount of the invoice against customary credits (vide Exhibit A). By Exhibit B the plaintiff stated that he was willing to do business, but that he could not accept for more than 90 per cent. of the net amount of the invoice, and with regard to the proposed customary credit he wrote as follows: "Letters of credit are not customary but I am sufficiently known to the National Bank of India in your city, so that your drafts will be promptly discounted." In Exhibit C the defendants renewed their demand for 93 per cent. of the invoice amount, and with regard to the other matter in dispute wrote as follows:

"As you are reluctant to open letters of credit, we shall give your counter-proposal a trial when an opportunity occurs and trust we shall have no difficulties in carrying out the same." There was further correspondence and the final letters are, Exhibit E, of the 14th October, from the plaintiff in which he stated he was willing to make a trial allowing the defendants to draw for 93 per cent., and Exhibit F from the defendants containing a clause headed

"Finance," which ran as follows: "We are very pleased to learn that you are now agreeable to accept our condition of drawing 93 per cent. of the invoice amount." The actual contracts were for 100 tons ground-nuts at 30·5 francs per 100 kilos C. F. Marseilles for December-January shipment and 200 tons at the same price and terms for January-February shipment. Mr. Chamier argues that the word "shipment" indicates that delivery was to be on board ship. When pressed as to the person who is to take delivery, he falls back on the reference to the National Bank and states that delivery was to be to them. It is sufficient to say that that was obviously not the contract. The contract was C. F. Marseilles and the word "shipment" has only reference to the period within which the ground-nuts might be shipped. This is made clear by the evidence of P. W. No. 2, who explains that the words mean that the goods may be shipped in the one case to the end of January and in the other case to the end of February at the opinion of the shipper. Another complete answer is that the defendants did not proceed on this footing; for they did not take the shipping documents to the National Bank at first but went to their own Bank, the Mercantile Bank, to get them discounted. It is, therefore, quite unnecessary to decide whether the language in Exhibit B could have been treated as a term of the contract if the defendants had themselves so treated it. But bearing in mind that they sought by Exhibit A to get as a term of the contract an agreement by the plaintiff that they should draw against customary credits and that the plaintiff at once repudiated the idea that there was any such custom and refused to give the credit, it would be very difficult to hold that the language "I am sufficiently known," etc., was an alternative term. The case relied upon by Mr. Chamier of Behn v. Burness (1) does not assist him. What was decided in that case was that the statement in a charter party that "the ship is now in the port of Amsterdam" was intended to be a substantive part of the contract and not a mere representation, the ruling being as follows: "With respect to statements in a contract descriptive of the subject-matter or of some material incident thereof . . . . . the true doctrine appears to be that, if they were intended to be a substantive part of the contract, then they become a condition precedent." It has only to be pointed and that in this case there is no formal contract and that the statements are not descriptive of the subject-matter and are not contained in the contract.

If the defendants could succeed, it could only be on the basis of a misrepresentation. This has been dealt with very fully by the learned Judge and we do not think it necessary to cover the same ground. It is sufficient to say that the words used are not a positive assertion of that which is not true. They mean nothing more than this: "I can assure you that as far as my credit is concerned, I am sufficiently well known to the National Bank for your drafts on me to be promptly discounted." That is certainly a statement of his financial status in Madras: but the rest of it is purely an inference. He had no power to compel the National Bank to discount any draft. That was a matter for the Bank itself. It appears that his confidence in his financial status was too great; for the Manager of the National Bank states in evidence that he regarded the plaintiff as a "weak name." But there is nothing to show that the plaintiff was not warranted by the information then in his possession in making the statement. The learned Judge has given reasons for holding this and we agree with him.

Further, it is abundantly clear that the defendants' consent to the contract in December was not caused by this representation, for in October they specifically state that they will give the plaintiffs' counter-proposal a trial when opportunity occurs—which can only mean that they were prepared to make the contracts and see if there was any difficulty in getting the drafts discounted. That this is the true view is clear from the facts that they did not take the drafts to the National Bank first, but went to their own Bank and when that Bank, the Mercantile Bank, refused to discount the bills, they cabled for a credit not on the National Bank, but on the Mercantile Bank and that they sought to have the contracts cancelled by

(1) 3 B. & S. 751; 32 L. J. Q. B. 204; 9 Jur. (N. S.) 620; 8 L. T. 207; 11 W. R. 496; 122 E. R. 281; 124 R. R. 794.

Exhibit W before they even went near the National Bank.

Lastly, we are strongly inclined to think that in any case the exception to section 19 would apply; for although it may be that the National Bank would not have made any statement about the plaintiff's credit to a casual inquirer, we can hardly doubt that if the defendants had before closing the contracts taken the letter, Exhibit B, to the National Bank and asked them whether they would discount the drafts for those contracts, they would have got an answer one way or the other from the Bank. For these reasons we agree with the learned Judge that the defendants were not entitled to avoid the contracts.

The only question that remains is the amount of damages. Mr. Chamier has argued that the damages should be assessed as at the date of Exhibit BB "The National Bank of India refuse to take up. If you cannot arrange with the Bank cancel the contract in consequence of, which is on the 3rd instant" (January), relying chiefly on his argument that the contract was for delivery to the Bank. We have already decided against him on this point: and further we are of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to await the arrival of a definite repudiation by letter before taking action, especially in view of the fact that the defendants had up to the end of January in one case and the end of February in the other case to fulfil the contract.

We cannot, however, agree with the learned Judge that the damages should be assessed on the price in March. The learned Judge was led to fix that date by the view which he expresses on page 12, that the goods ought to have been shipped by the end of January and the end of Feburary and would have been delivered in the course of Feburary and the course of March. We think that he has overlooked the evidence as to the option of the shipper; and we, therefore, take the price at the end of January, the date on which the plaintiff received the definite repudiation by Exhibit CC. The price then was 32·50 francs as against 33 given by the learned Judge. We allow the appeal to this extent but in the circumstances without costs.

Appeal partly allowed.

FACTS.—The plaintiff obtained a money-decree against the defendant, a member of a Malabar tarwad, and in execution of that decree, attached certain properties given to the defendant and his tavashi in lieu of maintenance. The defendant put in a claim counter-petition to raise the attachment, on the grounds that the property was not liable to attachment and that the karar under which he had got the property, prohibited any alienation by him except by way of lease, kurhikanom, etc. Both the lower Courts held that the defendant had an attachable interest in the property and following a decision in Govinda Pillai v. Meenatchi Achi (1) disallowed the defendant's claim. We agree that the appellant's interest is not exempt from attachment under section 60 (n) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is also argued that the property cannot be attached because appellant's tarwad will have a right to object to its attachment The appellant cannot rely on this objection. It can be dealt with if the tarwad makes it.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application on behalf of defendants Nos. 4 and 5 who are minors as well as on behalf of the other defendants who are majors, to set aside the ex parte decree passed against them. So far as the major defendants are concerned, we see no reason to differ from the conclusion at which the learned Judge in the Court below had arrived. The case of the minors is different. Notice was issued to the 1st defendant, their father, to show cause why he should not be appointed their guardian ad litem : the notice was not served personally, but was affixed to the house. The service has been held by the District Judge to be sufficient and we see no reason to differ from him. The 1st defendant did not appear ; nor did he intimate his willingness to the Court to be the guardian. Under these circumstances, he ought not to have been appointed as guardian. Order XXXII, rule 4 (3), makes it imperative that the consent of the proposed guardian should be obtained for the appointment. This was not done. The fact that in the subsequent proceedings the father applied on behalf of the minors to set aside the ex parte decree, will not validate the original invalid appointment. The decision of Sankaran Nair and Ayling, JJ., in Letters Patent Appeal No. 3 of 1913 is in point. Reference may also be made to Bal Kishan Lal v Tapeswar Singh (1) and Kunwar Partab Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (2).

We must set aside the ex parte decree in so far as the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are concerned, and ask the lower Court to try the case against them on the merits. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

The principle that, where money has been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant under compulsion of legal process which is afterwards discovered not to have been due, the plaintiff cannot recover it back in an action for money had and received, cannot apply in a case where money was deposited by the plaintiff, C, on the faith of an order which stated explicitly that the money would be retained in Court pending the determination of the question whether the money belonged to B, the then judgment-debtor of A, or to D, the alleged creditor of the depositor C, but where without holding any inquiry and without notice to the depositor and his alleged creditor the Court paid it out to A on his application. JUDGMENT.—The problem which requires solution in this appeal may be concisely stated. On the 30th June 1909 A sued B for recovery of money. On the same day A obtained an order for attachment before judgment under rule 5 of Order XXXVIII, Civil Procedure Code. The property attached was a debt due obviously from C to D; but the debt was attached on the allegation that B, and not D, was the person beneficially interested in it. The result was that a prohibitory order was issued upon C. On the 13th August 1909 A obtained an ex parte decree in his suit against B. C was then called upon to pay into Court the money due from him ostensibly to D. On the 8th October C applied to the Court and intimated that he was willing to bring the money into Court, provided he was absolved from liability to pay a second time to D and provided also that interest ceased to run upon his debt from that date. The Court thereupon ordered that the money, if deposited, would be retained in Court till the adjudication of the question, whether B or D was beneficially interested therein. On the faith of this order the money was brought into Court on the 13th December 1909. Thereafter, without notice to C or D, the Court on the application of A paid out the money to him. D, who had no intimation of these proceedings, subsequently sued C and recovered judgment against him on the debt. C now sues A to recover the money which he had deposited in Court and which, without notice to him or to his creditor D, had been withdrawn by A. The Courts below have decreed the claim and A has appealed to this Court. The substantial question in controversy on the merits in this litigation consequently, plainly, is whether B or D was beneficially interested in the debt. The Courts below have concurrently answered this against A, and have found that B had no interest in the money, in other words, that not B but D was the real creditor of C. This is a finding of fact which cannot be successfully challenged in second appeal, indeed no attempt has been made to assail it before us; but the question has been mooted, has C any cause of action against A? On behalf of A it has been argued that there is no cause of action, first, because the money was recovered under compulsion of legal process, and cannot accordingly be recovered by any form of suit; and, secondly, because by virtue of Order XXI, rule 46, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the money, as soon as deposited, ceased to be the money of the plaintiff; and that consequently, he is not entitled to recover it back. In our opinion there is no foundation for either of these contentions.

As regards the first ground, it is clear that the principle of the rule in Marriot v. Hampton (1), which has been the bulwark of the arguments for the appellant, is of no real assistance to his cause. The principle is that where money has been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant under compulsion of legal process, which is afterwards discovered not to have been due, the plaintiff cannot recover it back in an action for money had and received. The foundation of this doctrine was thus stated by Lord Kenyon:—"After a recovery by process of law, there must be an end of litigation, otherwise there would be no security for any person." To the same effect is the observation of Grose, J.:—"It would tend to encourage the greatest negligence if we were to open a door to parties to try their causes again, because they were not properly prepared the first time with their evidence." Lawrence, J., added that if the case alluded to, that is the decision of Lord Mansfield in Moses v. Macferlan (2), be law, it would go the length of establishing this that every species of evidence which was omitted by accident to be brought forward at the trial might still be of avail in a new action to overrule the former judgment, which is too preposterous to be stated. The principle was again formulated by Patterson, J., in Cadaval v. Collins (3): "Money paid under compulsion of law cannot be recovered back as money had and received. And, further, where there is bona fides, and money is paid with full knowledge of the facts, though there be no debt, still it cannot be recovered back." We refer to this statement in order to emphasize the qualification to the general rule formulated in the following terms by Kennedy, J., in Ward & Co. v. Wallis (4); "There must be bona fides on the part of the party who has got the benefit of his opponent's payment in order to bring the principle laid down in that case [Marriot v. Hampton (1)] into force; if the person enforcing a payment, under legal process has therein taken an unfair advantage or acted unconscientiously, knowing that he had no right to the money, the principle laid down in Marriot v. Hampton (1) may not prevent the defendant from recovering the money back."

Let us examine the application of this principle to the circumstances of the present case. Here money was deposited by the plaintiff C on the faith of an order which stated explicitly that the money would be retained in Court pending the determination of the question whether the money belonged to B, the then judgment-debtor of A, or to D, the alleged creditor of the depositor C. That inquiry was never made, but the Court, without notice to the depositor and his alleged creditor, paid out the money to the present defendant on his application. So that neither C nor D was allowed an opportunity to defend his rights. We need not hold that this conduct of A was in any way designedly fraudulent, but this much is plain that he was able to appropriate the money by what constituted a grave abuse of the process of the Court. The principle of the decision in Marriot v. Hampton (1) has no application to these circumstances.

As regards the second ground it is contended that under Order XXI, rule 46, the money, as soon as it was deposited, ceased to be the money of the depositor. Clause (3) of rule 46 is in these terms: "A debtor prohibited under clause (1) of sub-rule (1) may pay the amount of his debt into Court and such payment shall discharge him as effectually as payment to the party entitled to receive the same." This clearly contemplates a case where there is no dispute that if the suit results into a decree against the defendant or if there is a pre-existing judgment against him, the money is recoverable thereunder from the depositor. In the present case, the deposit was clearly conditional. The order of the Court makes it plain beyond all controversy that the deposit was made pending the adjudication of the question whether B or D was beneficially interested in the money. But it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that this order was irregular, as the Code neither contemplates an inquiry, nor provides for the issue of notices upon parties affected by its order. This argument overlooks the elementary principle that no judicial order can be made to the detriment of a person till he has been afforded ample opportunity to defend his rights. Our attention has been drawn in this connection to rule 5 of Order XLV of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England. An examination of that rule shows that there is no foundation whatever for the contention of the appellant. There the rule expressly provides for an inquiry in the events which have been happened here. Rule 5 is in these terms: "Whenever in proceedings to obtain an attachment of debts, it is suggested by the garnishee that the debt sought to be attached belongs to some third person, or that any third person has a lien or charge upon it, the Court or a Judge may order such third person to appear, and state the nature and particulars of his claim upon such debt." Rule 6 then provides that after the allegation of any third person under such order as in rule 5 mentioned and of any other person who by the same or any subsequent order may be ordered to appear or in case of such third person not appearing when ordered, the Court may order execution to issue to levy the amount due from such garnishee. Consequently the rules of the Supreme Court in England contemplate not an ex parte order to the prejudice of third persons who may be really interested in the debt due from the garnishee, but an inquiry in the presence of all the persons interested. Our Code does not contain any specific rule of the type of rules 5 and 6 of Order XLV of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England. But the Court has inherent power to guard against an abuse of its process and to ensure that its orders do not operate to the prejudice of persons who have no notice of the proceedings. In the case before us the Court was competent, indeed it was incumbent upon the Court, to make a conditional order of this description and to provide that the money deposited was not paid to the decree-holder till adjudication of the question of title to that money. Reference may in this connection be usefully made to the instructive decision of the Court of Appeal in Roberts v. Death (5). In that case the garnishee who was ordered to bring the money into Court contended that the money was due to the judgment-debtor, not in his personal capacity but in his capacity as a trustee. The question arose whether the money, if deposited, should be paid without inquiry. Lord Justices Brett, Colton and Lindley unanimously held that it would not be right to make the payment without an inquiry into the question, whether the money was trust money or not, and they directed that the money should be brought into Court to abide the event of an inquiry. In our opinion the money deposited in this case did not cease to be the money of the plaintiff, merely because he had brought into Court on the faith of a conditional order which directed its retention in Court pending inquiry into the question raised.

We feel no doubt whatever that the justice of the case lies entirely with the respondent and that the Court has full authority to compel the appellant to bring back the money into Court to be re-paid to the plaintiff, [Mrinalini Dasi v. Abinash Chunder Dutt (6)].

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

The fact that an assignment is set aside as being one in fraud of creditors under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, does not prevent the Court from declaring a charge upon the property assigned to the extent of the payment made by the assignee towards the redemption of a previous mortgage. Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 209 of 1912, preferred against that of the Subordinate Judge of Cochin in Original Suit No. 33 of 1910.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. L. Rozario, for the Respondents.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 2nd October 1914 the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is argued on the ground that in setting the assignment aside the lower Courts should have given the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 a charge for Rs. 500, the amount of Exhibit III. We think that appeal ground No. 10 in the lower Appellate Court was intended to raise this point, and we are not prepared to assume that it was abandoned there. Whether defendants made any payment for Exhibit III, and whether they are entitled to a charge in virtue of it, are questions on which the lower Appellate Court must now submit findings, as regards the latter with reference to Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Company Ld. (1). The findings are due in six weeks; seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above order of this Court, the District Judge of South Malabar submitted the following

FINDINGS.—It is directed that findings be returned on the questions

(1) Whether defendants made any payment for Exhibit III and

(2) whether they are entitled to a charge for it with reference to Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Company Ld. (1).

On the first question the evidence of payment is that of the 4th and 5th witnesses for the defendants. The 4th witness who attested the document of sale by the first defendant (Exhibit II) says that Rs. 400 were paid to Ayissumma on the date of Exhibit II and that she gave a receipt. He did not actually witness the receipt being given but saw the payment being made.

The 5th witness who attested the mortgage in favour of Ayissumma (Exhibit III), also states that she saw the payment made and Ayissumma giving a receipt. Both witnesses agree as to the source from which the money came but differ in details. The receipt (Exhibit VII) for Rs. 400 by Ayissumma to the 1st defendant and others is registered. On the whole I think that the payment of Rs. 400 is proved and find on the first question that Rs. 400 were paid towards Exhibit III.

On the second question, in Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Company Ld. (1) it was held that since the transferee had discharged a valid mortgage previously binding on the property, it would not be equitable to give the plaintiffs the relief for which they asked, except upon the terms of giving the defendant a charge for the Rs. 7,500 which he had expended in discharging a mortgage-decree against the suit property. In the present case, however, no complete but only a partial discharge of the mortgage evidenced by Exhibit III has been effected by the payment of Rs. 400, and it has been held that there can be no subrogation if any part of the debt remains unpaid. Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (2) (Ghose on the Law of Mortgage, 4th Edition, page 332). In this view I find on the second question that the defendants are not entitled to a charge for the payment of Rs. 400.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing on the 8th April 1915, after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—On the lower Appellate Court's finding of fact, which we accept, the case stands thus. The plaintiff sues for a declaration that the suit property is liable to attachment in execution of his money-decree against the 1st defendant. The defence is a prior conveyance of the property to defendants Nos. 2 to 6 by Exhibit II. That defence was rejected with reference to section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. But we were then asked to hold that, as Rs. 400 out of the total consideration of Rs. 1,000 for Exhibit II is found by the lower Appellate Court to have been actually paid towards discharge of a mortgage, Exhibit III, 2nd to 6th defendants (of whom 2nd and 6th defendants are the appellants) are entitled to a charge on the suit property for the amount they paid, the equitable principle referred to in Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Company Ld. (1) being relied on. That was the point dealt with in second issue stated in our order of remand.

On that issue and the question it raised directly, whether the existence of bad faith, which vitiated Exhibit II, also deprived defendants Nos. 2 to 6 of the right to a charge for what they actually paid, the lower Appellate Court has said very little. But we read its finding as being that defendants Nos. 2 to 6 would be entitled to such a charge, but for the further distinct defect in their position that their payment of Rs. 400 did not discharge Exhibit III, which was for Rs. 500, entirely. Argument here has proceeded on this interpretation of the finding, and we adopt it.

(1) 5 Ind. Cas. 33; 33 M. 334; 7 M. L. T. 167; 20 M. L. J. 211; (1910) M. W. N. 239.

(2) 1 Ind. Cas. 913; 36 C. 193; 5 C. L. J. 611.

Dealing then with the contention that defendants Nos. 2 to 6 are not entitled to a charge, because they did not pay off the encumbrance, Exhibit III, entirely, we hold that it is irrelevant in these proceedings. It rests on Hanumanthaiyan v. Meenatchi Naidu (3). But the basis of that decision was the impossibility of working out the rights of the different persons, each of whom had contributed towards the discharge of the mortgage in question, when a distribution of the sale-proceeds between them had to be considered; and it was held that, as their rights could not be worked out, they could not participate. In this case, however, at the stage it has reached and as between the parties to it, among whom the mortgagee under Exhibit III is not included, no such conflict is in question; and for all that appears none ever need be, since defendants Nos. 2 to 6 may prevent it by agreeing with the mortgagee under Exhibit III as to the distribution of any amount realisable on it or by obtaining an assignment of her rights. In these circumstances, whatever considerations may arise when defendants Nos. 2 to 6 attempt to recover, the mere grant of a charge will not necessarily be within the mischief contemplated in Hanumanthaiyan v. Meenatchi Naidu (3) and the lower Appellate Court's finding based thereon cannot be accepted. This conclusion is consistent with that of Sundara Aiyar, J., in Jaladanki Chinna Pitchia, In re (4), though the case relied on by plaintiff was not referred to by him. We allow the second appeal to the extent that defendants Nos. 2 and 6 will be given a charge for Rs. 400 on the mortgage amount in virtue of their payment evidenced by Exhibit VII dated 12th November 1907, but dismiss it in other respects. In view of the extent to which defendants Nos. 2 and 6 have failed, we make no change in the orders of the lower Courts as to costs and direct the parties to bear their own in this Court.

Mr. K. S. Ganapathi Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Rajagopalachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The District Munsif dismissed the suit, applying the decision in Venkatasami v. Kristayya (1) and assuming that the document was not registered through the defendant's default. The learned Subordinate Judge rightly distinguished that case on the ground that the document in the present case was in the possession of mediators, not of the planitiff. But he also then made an assumption, that the plaintiff was not in default in respect of the failure to register it. There is no finding of either Court as to the conditions on which the madiators had the document or on whose behalf they held it or whether the plaintiff could have got it from them and presented it for compulsory registration. He would be entitled to relief only if, in the words used in Subba Reddiar v. Visvanatha Reddiar (2), the non-registration was not due to any default on his part. Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and A. Srininvasa Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Exhibit VI, in our opinion, is valueless as evidence and the omission of the learned District Judge to refer to it is wholly immaterial.

As regards the alleged payment to one of the heirs of the original mortgagee, the Subordinate Judge finds that the alleged payment was a sham. The District Judge's judgment is obscure on that point. The Full Bench case in Mannava Annapurnamma v. Uppala Akkayya (1) only decides that the payment to one of the several joint promisees in a contract is binding on the others, and it does not decide the question whether payment to one of the several heirs of a single deceased promisee is binding on the other heirs. On the other hand, two at least of the three opinions incline against the view that such payment is binding.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The case in Kora Nayar v. Ramappa (1) merely decided that a request for return (of those title-deeds which the mortgagee was bound to return before he takes out the money from Court) accompanying a tender made under section 83 of Act IV of 1882, was not a condition vitiating the tender.

In the present case, the appellant insisted on a return of certain title-deeds which he was not entitled to a return of, as a condition of the tender and "refused to pay the money until he had recovered the documents and possession of the property" (paragraph 3 of the District Judge's judgment). Muhammadan Law—Dower—Father, whether can be made liable for dower-debt of his son—Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 2, applicability of.

Section 2 (a) of the Indian Majority Act provides that nothing in that Act shall affect the capacity of any person to act in the matter of dower and the fact that a Mussalman is a minor at the time of his marriage does not take away his liability to pay the dower of his wife.

Where the son was not a minor under the Muhammadan Law at the time of his marriage, his father, in the absence of a contract of guarantee, cannot be made liable for the dower payable by his son simply on the ground that the son has no property.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Cuddapah, in Original Suit No. 5 of 1910.

FACTS.—A Muhammadan boy's marriage was arranged for by his father. The boy married another wife. The first wife now brings a suit to enforce the mahar, both against the father in-law and her husband. The husband has no property and the lower Court decreed the suit against the father-in-Law. The appeal is against that decree.

Mr. S. Gopalasami Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We agree with the District Judge that the evidence establishes the fact that the dower of the plaintiff was fixed at 9 vakyas of gold, and we are unable to differ from his finding that the value of this dower is the amount claimed in the plaint. But on the 2nd issue in the suit we are unable to agree that the 2nd defendant is liable. The 1st defendant was according to Muhammadan Law at the time of his marriage a person capable of contracting for his marriage and for the dower payable to his wife. The plaintiff did not allege that he was a minor incapable of doing these things, and the District Judge does not find that he was incapable according to his personal law. Section 2 (a) of the Indian Majority Act provides that nothing in that Act shall affect the capacity of any person to act in the matter of dower, and the 1st defendant's capacity in respect of his wife's dower is, therefore, unaffected by that Act.

No authority has been shown to us which supports the view of the District Judge that the father can be made liable for the dower payable by his son, unless in cases where he has made himself surety for the payment and it is not alleged in the plaint or found by the District Judge that the 2nd defendant made himself a surety in this case.

The passage on which the District Judge relies applies only to the case where the son married as a minor is dead, and it may be that it applies only when he dies while a minor. Whether that is so or not, we cannot accept it as authoritiy warranting us in holding that where the son was not a minor under Muhammadan Law at the time of his marriage his father, in the absence of a contract of guarantee, can be made liable for the dower payable by his son, simply on the ground that the son has no property.

We allow the appeal, and modify the decree by dismissing the suit as against the 2nd defendant. But we think, as he joined the 1st defendant in setting up the case that the dower was already paid by a gift of jewels at the marriage, we should not require the plaintiff to pay his costs.

In other respects we confirm the decree. The 1st defendant must pay plaintiff's costs in both Courts and 2nd defendant must pay his own.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 92, 94—Mistake in description of property sold—Evidence to prove what was actually sold, whether admissible—Rectification of sale-deed—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 31.

Under section 92, clause (a), of the Evidence Act any fact may be proved which would entitle a person to a decree on the ground of mistake of fact or law, and there is nothing in the section giving such a right to a plaintiff alone. [p. 588, col. 2; p. 589, col. 1.]

Mahendra Nath Mukerjee v. Jogendra Nath Roy Chaudhry, 2 C. W. N. 260; Dagdu v. Bhana, 28 B. 420; 6 Bom. L. R. 126; Karuppa Gounden v. Periathumbi Gounden, 30 M. 397; 2 M. L. Where there is a misdescription of the property sold, the vendee can claim a rectification of the sale-deed under section 31 (a) of the Specific Relief Act. [p. 588, col. 2.]

Such a right can be used as a shield when possession is sought to be wrested from the party entitled to the rectification, and the fact that he is a defendant does not disable him from setting up the plea which could have availed him as plaintiff. [p. 589, col. 1.]

The combined effect of section 92, clause (a), Evidence Act, 1872, and of section 31, Specific Relief Act, 1877, is that the defendant can resist a suit on the ground that what was sold to him was different from what the sale-deed contained [p. 589, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 464 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 73 of 1912.

FACTS.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the suit land from the defendant. Both the defendant and the plaintiff claimed it under the same vendor. The defendant was a prior purchaser. His case was that a wrong survey number had been inserted in his sale-deed by mistake and that the intention of both the vendor and himself was to sell and purchase the suit land. The District Munsif went into the evidence and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The Subordinate Judge on appeal held that as there was no ambiguity in the sale-deed and as it applied accurately to existing facts, no evidence could be admitted in a suit for possession and the proper remedy was a suit for rectification of the instrument, and section 94 of the Indian Evidence Act did not apply. The defendant appealed.

Messrs. K. Parthasaradhy Aiyangar and R. Rangachariar, for the Appellants, contended that evidence was admissible under section 92 (a) to show the intention of parties in a case where rectification of the sale-deed could be applied for under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act. Karuppa Gounden v. Periathumbi Gounden (1), Mahadeva Iyer v. Gopala Iyer (2) and Mahendra Nath Mukerjee v. Jogendra Nath RoyChaudhry (3) were relied on.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondent:—Section 94 of the Indian Evidence Act applied to this case and no evidence could be admitted. He also relied on Velappa Gounden v. Palani Gounden (4).

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to recover possession. Plaintiff's case was that he purchased survey No. 92B from the owners in April 1911 and that the defendant is wrongfully in possession of it. The defendant pleaded that the same vendors conveyed to him the property in dispute in 1908 and that although the conveyance (Exhibit II) describes the land sold as survey No. 90B, his vendors intended to sell, and he intended to purchase, only survey No. 92B. He also alleged that he was put in possession of this latter number under the sale-deed.

The issue raised in the case was whether it was survey No. 90B or 92B that was sold to the defendant. The Munsif agreed with the defendant's contention and dismissed the suit. In appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that evidence to prove that what was actually sold was inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act and decreed the plaintiff's claim.

We think the Subordinate Judge is wrong. The written statement clearly sets up a case of mistake in the description of the property sold. There can be no doubt that on the allegations contained in the written statement, the defendant would be entitled to claim rectification of his sale-deed under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act. Under section 92, clause (a), any fact may be proved which would entitle any person to any decree on the ground of "mistake of fact or law." Thus, it is clear that if he went to Court as plaintiff, the defendant could have claimed relief by way of injunction against the plaintiff from interfering with his possession and to have his sale-deed rectified. Does the fact that the defendant is resisting the plaintiff's claim disable him from setting up the plea which could have availed him as plaintiff. We think not. We find nothing in the language of section 92, clause (a), which indicates that its benefit can be invoked only by the plaintiff. In Mahendra Nath Mukerjee v. Jogendra Nath Roy Chaudhry (3), it was held that the defendant can protect himself by such a plea. See Dagdu v. Bhana (5). In this Court it was decided in Karuppa Gounden v. Periathumbi Gounden (1) and Mahadeva Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar (2), that a plaintiff can sue to recover the right property notwithstanding misdescription in his document of title. Reliance was placed in these two cases on the proviso to section 92. None of these cases have been considered by the Subordinate Judge. It is true that section 94 has no application as pointed out by him, but the combined effect of section 92, clause (a), and of section 31 of the Specific Relief Act leaves no room for doubt that the defendant can resist the suit on the ground that what was sold to him was different from what the document described.

(1) 30 M. 397; 2 M. L. T. 336.
(2) 8 Ind. Cas. 390; 34 M. 51; 8 M. L. T. 289; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 36.

Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar contends that on the facts he will be able to show that there was no mistake. We must reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remand the appeal for disposal on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

LAXMAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Appeal—Amendment of decree—Material alteration—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152.

An appeal lies from an amended decree where the amendment has the effect of appreciably adding to the right of the decree-holder. [p. 591, col. 1.]

Second appeal against an order of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, dated the 9th July 1913, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Wardha, dated the 7th November 1912.

Mr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. K. Barlinge, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, declining to interfere in appeal with an order for amendment of a decree passed by the junior Subordinate Judge, Wardha.

The decree in question was passed on the 27th October 1910. The facts leading up to that decree were stated by me in the order, dated the 30th April 1912, disposing of Civil Revision No. 70 of 1911, the parties to which were Musammat Lalita, widow of Ramchandra, as applicant and Laxman Rao, the present non-applicant. A brief resume will suffice for present purposes.

Laxman Rao sued Ramchandra and Dinaji and their father, Sheoram, on a bond which was executed during Dinaji's minority by Ramchandra and by Sheoram for himself and Dinaji. Ramchandra died between the 18th June 1910 and the 8th September following, and on the latter date Sheoram and Dinaji were substituted for him on the strength of being his legal representatives. Eventually Laxman Rao's claim was allowed in full. The decree aforesaid was then drawn up. It shows Dinaji and Sheoram as the sole defendants, without making any reference to the fact that either had been joined as legal representative of Ramchandra. Sheoram was directed to pay the sum found due on the bond with interest and costs, and the plaintiff was also authorised to realise the amount "from the joint property with the defendant Dinaji." The decree closed with a direction in the following terms:—

"This above amount will be recovered as far as possible from the property attached before judgment."

The property thus mentioned consists of a 5-annas 4-pies share in khel A of Mauza Dighi with a house, kotha and trees.

On the 23rd December 1910 a posthumous son was born of Ramchandra's widow, Lalita, and three months later Dinaji filed on this infant's behalf an objection to the continued attachment of Ramchandra's share (one half) in the aforesaid property, which is admittedly not "ancestral," having come to Ramchandra and Dinaji by gift from their maternal grandmother, Sattu. The Subordinate Judge declined to release what had been Ramchandra's share, on the ground that the decree made all his assets liable. In revision I held that the decree contained no words justifying execution against Ramchandra's separate estate and directed release of a 2-annas 8-pies share in khel A of Mauza Dighi.

Laxman Rao then moved the Subordinate Judge to amend both judgment and decree by adding a declaration that Ramchandra's estate is liable to satisfy the plaintiff's claim and that Sheoram and Dinaji are bound as Ramchandra's legal representatives to pay the sum due to the extent of Ramchandra's assets in their hands. This application was dealt with by the successor of the Subordinate Judge who passed the decree and in the end was granted, the following words being added to the decree as well as to the judgment:—

"The defendants shall also be liable to pay this amount from the assets of the deceased Ramchandra in their hands."

Sheoram and Dinaji appealed from this order for amendment. In the memorandum of appeal the claim is described as "appeal against the amendment of the decree." The Court-fee paid is Rs. 10, and no copy of the original judgment was filed with the memorandum of appeal, nor was the Court moved to dispense therewith. The learned Divisional Judge admitted the appeal provisionally and at the hearing intimated that if an appeal lay, Court-fee should be paid on the whole sum made payable by the decree. The appellant's Counsel who represents them here also declined to pay any additional Court-fee. The appeal was then dismissed on two grounds, namely:—

(1) an order amending a decree is an adjudication separate from the decree itself and is not appealable;

(2) the appeal could not be regarded as one from the original decree, inasmuch as no copy of the original judgment was filed, the Court-fee paid was insufficient and the Court was not in fact asked so to treat the appeal.

In second appeal the main contention is that the appeal to the Divisional Judge should have been treated as one from the amended decree. For the proposition that an appeal lies from an amended decree the authority of Visvanathan Chetti v. Ramanathan Chetti (1) is cited. The view there taken seems to be that inasmuch as an amended decree is itself a decree, an appeal lies therefrom under section 96, Civil Procedure Code. The learned Judges (Shephard and Bhashyam Ayyangar, JJ.) referred to Nanda Rai v. Raghunandan Singh (2) as authority for the opposite view and remarked that there Mr. Justice Mahmood overlooked the possibility of an appeal against the amended decree and for that reason came to the conclusion that revision, not appeal, was the only remedy available. Now the Allahabad case cited contains no reference to amendment of a decree, and I can only suppose that the one really dealt with was Raghunath Das v. Raj Kumar (3), in which Oldfield and Mahmood, JJ., differed and the Full Court later [Raghunath Das v. Raj Kumar (4)] on appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent for the High Court, North-Western Provinces, concurred with Mahmood, J. A precisely similar pair of decisions will be found in Surta v. Ganga (5) and Surta v. Ganga (6).

The only reported decision I have been able to find which expressly negatives a right to appeal from the amended decree, as distinguished from the order of amendment, is Hasan Shah v. Sheo Prasad (7). There the decree as originally drawn did not expressly allow interest during the pendency of the suit and after decree till satisfaction, though the plaint asked for such interest. The Court of first instance cut down by more than half the claim for principal and interest calculated to the date of suit and its decree ordered payment of that reduced, sum but dismissed "the rest of the claim." The decree-holder obtained an amendment which ordered payment of interest from date of suit till satisfaction. The learned Judges (Tyrrell and Blair, JJ.) said:

"We are constrained to hold that this order is open to revision and not to hold that the petitioner had his remedy by way of appeal from the amended decree. The Full Bench ruling in Raghunath Das v. Raj Kumar (4) is authoritative on this point."

On the other hand in Menat Ali v. Amdar Ali (8) Ghose and Pargiter, JJ., remarked:

"Our attention has, however, been called to certain cases, in which it has been held that an appeal does not lie against an order under section 206, Civil Procedure Code, 1882. No doubt, such an order, not being an order specified in section 588 of the Code, is not appealable, but it does not follow from this that an appeal does not lie against the decree as amended. That would be a new decree in the suit, and as such would, we are disposed to think, be appealable."

And in Amar Chandra Kundu v. Asad Ali Khan (9) Ghose and Pratt, JJ., went so far as to hold that where obvious clerical errors in a decree were corrected, the period of limitation for appealing should be reckoned from the date when the correct decree was prepared. For my part I find great difficulty in understanding why the addition of a clause to both judgment and decree which has the effect of appreciably adding to the rights of the decree-holder should not be treated as reviving the right to appeal from a decree which, apart from the amendment, a judgment-debtor was willing to accept.

The decision of Mahmood, J., in Raghunath Das v. Raj Kumar (3) is based to some extent on the fact that the Code of 1882, in the proviso to the third paragraph of its 206th section, required reasonable notice of the proposed amendment to be given to the parties or their Pleaders. No such provision appears in section 152 of the present Code. The learned Judge also remarked as follows:

"If we were to hold that this order (of amendment) was not a separate adjudication, we should be deciding in effect that after several years had passed, and after the time provided for an appeal had long come to an end, the Court might take up its decree and so amend it as to seriously affect the rights of the parties whom it concerned."

This result, however, would occur as well in a case where under the 2nd paragraph of section 5, Indian Limitation Act, delay in appealing is excused, and it is difficult to imagine a stronger ground for not preferring an appeal than the fact that as originally framed, the decree is not objected to by the party who later feels his interests prejudiced by an amendment.

The respondent's learned Pleader contends that the appeal preferred to the Divisional Judge was in fact one from the order of amendment and not one from the amended decree. The circumstance that the appellants did not file copy of the judgment delivered on the 27th October 1910 or ask the Divisional Judge to dispense with it, supports this contention. On the other hand, a copy of the entire decree of that date with the amendment complained of was put in and a Court-fee of Rs. 10 paid, although a fee of eight annas would have sufficed under Article 11, Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, had the intention been to appeal from a mere order not having the force of a decree. That the order of amendment per se could not be regarded as having the force of a decree is, I think, clear from the terms of section 152, Civil Procedure Code, under which the Subordinate Judge professed to act: his view was that his predecessor had accidentally omitted to include the clause which the present appellants now object to. I would also observe that in the third ground of the memorandum of appeal the appellants contended that they are not in fact the legal representatives of the deceased Ramchandra, a point which raises a question beyond the technical one whether on the admitted facts section 152, Civil Procedure Code, admits of the amendment prayed for being made.

I hold that the appeal to the Divisional Judge should be regarded as made from the decree of the 27th October 1910 in its amended form and that such an appeal lies

The case is now remanded to the lower Appellate Court with directions to re-admit the appeal under its original number in the register and to determine it afresh on the merits. A refund of the Court-fee paid here will be granted: other costs will be costs in the cause.

If the Divisional Judge still considers that additional Court-fee ought to be paid, he should record his reasons for so thinking and give the appellants time to make good the deficiency.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 141, 151, O. IX—Execution proceedings struck off through mistake of Court—Power to restore.

Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to execution proceedings and they cannot be restored under Order IX of the Code. [p. 592, col. 2.]

Even apart from section 151 a Court has an inherent power to rectify a mistake which has been inadvertently made by it. [p. 593, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, an execution application was fixed for hearing on the 6th January and was by mistake called up on the 5th and dismissed in the absence of the parties and the Court on the judgment-creditor's application set aside its order of dismissal:

Application for revison against an order of the first Class, Sub-Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Gopaldas Jhamatmal, for the Applicants.

Mr. Hirdaram Mewaram, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, an application filed by the judgment-creditor for execution of a decree awarding him a sum of over eight thousand rupees was dismissed by the Court, both sides being absent, on the 5th of January 1912. On the 8th of January 1914, the judgment-creditor applied for the restoration of his application for execution to the file on the ground that, at the previous hearing on the 14th December 1911, the 6th of January 1912 had been announced by the Court as the date of the next hearing and that date had, at the very time, been entered in the diary of the plaintiffs' Pleaders. The diary of the Court shows that the hearing had undoubtedly been fixed for the 6th January but that, subsequently, it had been altered to the 5th.

The Court apparently accepted the statements in this application; for on the 12th of January, it set aside the order of dismissal. The defendant on receiving notice of the further hearing of the application pleaded that the order of the 12th January was illegal; but the Court held that section 141 applied to execution proceedings and that it had jurisdiction to set aside the order. This view of the law, was in our opinion, erroneous. In Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council ruled that the Explanations to sections 647 of the old Code were not affected by Act VI of 1892, section 4, the effect of which was merely to express the true meaning of section 647 as it originally stood. And in Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (2) it was ruled that the purpose of the Legislature in omitting the Explanation from section 141 of the new Act was merely to do away with that which had been shown to be unnecessary by the Privy Council decision and to rely upon the terms of the section as interpreted by their Lordships. In our opinion, therefore, the Court erred in applying section 141 and it had no power to set aside the order under Order IX.

But Mr. Hirdaram relies on section 151 Civil Procedure Code, and urges that the Court had power to act under that section and should be deemed to have so acted. We consider that the case is one which is fairly covered by the maxim actus curiæ neminem gravabit—the act of the Court should not prejudice any one. The failure of the judgment-creditor to appear when the case was called on seems to have been due to the failure of the Court Officer to inform him of the altered date of the adjourned hearing. The mistake of the Court should not be used for purposes which are not consistent with justice.

In Raja Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council expressed the opinion that, even apart from section 151, a Court might rightly consider itself to possess an inherent power to rectify a mistake which had been inadvertently made by it.

The order of the lower Court, therefore, calls for no interference. We dismiss the application.

JUDGMENT.—These are appeals against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri, rejecting an application presented by the appellants for an order absolute under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. A decree nisi was passed in favour of two persons, Sheo Prasad and Tulshi Ram, on December 24th, 1900, and was confirmed on appeal by this Court with a slight modification on January 19th, 1914. That decree was passed against Musammat Indomati and others. The business of the decree-holders failed and their rights under the decree were put up for sale in execution of a decree held against them by Moti Lal and Fateh Lal. At the execution sale the share of the decree-holder, Sheo Prasad, was sold to one Ram Bharose and the appellants assert that on September 27th, 1905, the rights of Ram Bharose were transferred to Bisheshar Nath and that on May 3rd, 1906, Bisheshar Nath transferred his rights to Kamta Prasad, the appellant in Appeal No. 331. At the same execution sale the share of the decree-holder, Tulshi Ram, was sold to Ajudhia Prasad. Badlu Ram, the appellant in Appeal No. 332, says that on March 31st, 1905, Ajudhia Prasad transferred to him all his rights under the decree. The appellants, therefore, applied to the Court below for the passing of an order absolute in the capacity of transferees of the decree The application was resisted by the judgment-debtors on the ground that the applicants were benamidars and, therefore, could not maintain the application. The Court below on the question of fact has held that the appellants are no more than benamidars for the original decree-holders, Sheo Prasad and Tulshi Ram, who, it is supposed, have re-purchased their rights under the decree in the names of other persons in order to protect those rights from attachment and sale at the instance of their other creditors. The Court below has, in accordance with the decisions of the Calcutta High Court, held that the appellants as benamidars are not entitled to apply for an order absolute.

In appeal it is contended that the decision of the Court below on the question of fact is erroneous. We have been taken through the evidence regarding the purchases effected by the appellants, and we think it is sufficient to say that we agree with the Subordinate Judge that it is proved that the appellants are no more than benamidars for other persons.

Next, it is contended that even if the appellants are benamidars they are entitled to maintain the application. All the reported cases upon the question whether a benamidar can execute a decree as the transferee thereof, seem to have been decided by the Calcutta High Court, and we have been referred in the course of the arguments to a number of them. The net result of the Calcutta cases seems to be that a benamidar is not entitled to take out execution of a decree as the transferee thereof, but if he succeeds in doing so his application for execution may in some cases be sufficient to save a subsequent application by the real decree-holder from the bar of limitation. The question whether a benamidar may take out execution of a decree as the transferee thereof does not seem to have been decided by any other High Court. But this Court, agreeing with the Bombay and Madras High Courts, and differing from the Calcutta High Court, has held that a benamidar may bring a suit of any kind in his own name, see Yad Ram v. Umrao Singh (1), which was a suit for possession; Nand Kishore Lal v. Ahmad Ata (2), which was a suit for possession; Bachcha v. Gajadhar Lal (3), which was a suit for partition, and a very recent case of Parmeshwar Dat v. Anardan Dat (4), which was a suit for sale on a mortgage. It was pointed out by Sir Arthur Strachey in the case of Yad Ram v. Umrao Singh (1), cited above, that in those cases which have affirmed the right of the benamidar to sue, the right has been based partly on the fact that he is the transferee named in the registered instrument consituting the transfer and on the principle that the contract can be enforced by the parties who have entered into it, and partly on the view that the benamidar must be presumed to be suing on behalf of the beneficial owner or, to put the same idea in other words, that the suit is really brought by the beneficial owner through and in the name of the benamidar. It is well-established in this Court that a benamidar is entitled to maintain a suit. It seems to us that the principle upon which a benamidar has been allowed to maintain a suit applies equally to the execution of a decree. It was contended that Order XXI, rule 16 shows that it is only the real transferee, that is the person beneficially interested in the transfer, who can apply for execution of a decree. We cannot accept this argument. It seems to us that the considerations which have led this Court to hold that a benamidar can maintain a suit apply with even greater force to an application for execution by a transferee who is a benamidar. The transfer is in favour of the person who applies for execution of the decree, and it seems unreasonable that the Court executing the decree should be required to enter into the question whether the ostensible transferee is the real transferee or not, and in this connection we may refer to what was said by the present Chief Justice in the case of Intikhab Husain v. Rafi-un-nissa (5). He observed that it might be urged with great force that whether the assignment was real or not was a matter with which the judgment-debtor was not concerned.

In the present case, there can be no doubt whatever that the application for the order absolute was put in with the full approval and consent of the persons for whom the appellants are said to be benamidars. In our opinion, the application should not have been dismissed on the ground that the appellants were benamidars. As between the appellants and Sheo Prasad and Tulshi Ram on the one hand and the judgment-debtors on the other, we hold that the application of the appellants is maintainable. We put it in this form, because we have been told that in consequence of the decison of the Court below one Gopal Das, who held a decree against Sheo Prasad and Tulshi Ram, has in execution of that decree attached, brought to sale and purchased himself the rights of Sheo Prasad and Tulshi Ram under the decree nisi of Jaunary 1904, and we have also been informed that the present appellants have brought a suit for a declaration of their rights as beneficial owners of the decree nisi. It will be for the Court below to consider and determine the effect of the alleged purchase by Gopal Das and of any decision that may be arrived at in the suit brought by the appellants for a declaration of their rights. We would also point out that Gopi Narain and others resisted the application for an order absolute, on the ground that they are purchasers of two-thirds of a village called Pale Kalan, and they say that the suit was dismissed by the High Court against them and their property. This is a point which must be taken up and decided by the Court below.

We set aside the order of the Court below and sending the case back to that Court we direct that the appellants' application be restored to the pending file and disposed of according to law. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 42 (2), 112, applicability of—Survey and Boundaries Act (IV of 1897), s. 20 (3)—Contribution, recovery of.

Section 42 (2) of the Madras Estates Land Act applies to cases in which the area of a holding has been determined under the Survey and Boundaries Act.

Section 112 of the Madras Estates Land Act also applies to proceedings for the recovery of contribution of survey charges apportioned under section 20 of the Survey and Boundaries Act.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 34 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the Deputy Collector of Namakkal Division, in Summary Suit No. 64 of 1910.

Messrs. R. Shadagopachariar and Venkatachariar, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. Venkatramiah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Only two points are argued for the appellant: (1) whether section 42 (2) of the Madras Estates Land Act applies to cases in which the area of a holding has been determined under the Survey and Boundaries Act; (2) whether the limitation imposed by section 112 of the Madras Estates Land Act in point of time applies to proceedings for the recovery of contribution of survey charges apportioned under section 20 of the Survey and Boundaries Act.

On both points the decision of the District Judge appears to be correct. Appellant's Vakil relies on section 12 (3) of the Survey and Boundaries Act as declaring the finality of the determination of actual area of holding by the Survey Department: but this does not preclude the possibility of a "dispute" as to the amount of rent which the landlord is entitled to demand after the survey: and section 42 (2) seems to require that in all cases of dispute an application to the Collector shall be necessary.

As regards the second point, section 20 (3) makes the apportioned amount of survey charges recoverable as if it were an arrear of rent. The procedure to be followed, if advantage is sought to be taken of this provision, is laid down in sections 111, 112 et seq. of the Madras Estates Land Act: and the last sentence of the first paragraph of section 112, which says, "such notice shall be sent to the Collector within one year from the end of the Revenue year for which the arrear is due", applies equally with the rest of the section.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. XXXII, r. 15—Suit for possession—Plea of insanity—Decree—Suit for declaration that decree not binding—*Res judicata.

The defendant sued the plaintiff for the possession o certain property, the subject-matter of a sale-deed executed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff pleaded that he was of weak intellect and that advantage had been taken of him and that he had not received the consideration. The Court found against the plaintiff and decreed the defendant's suit. The plaintiff then brought the present suit to have it declared that the decree in the former suit was not binding on him as he, being of unsound mind, had not been properly represented:

Held, that the plaintiff, not having been adjudged a person of unsound mind at the time of the previous suit, was a party to that litigation, and was bound by the result. [p. 596, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahádur Sapru, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Madan Mohán Malaviya (with him Mr. Rama Kant Malaviya), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff Bishrup by his guardian, Ram Sarup, seeks to set aside a sale-deed dated the 6th October 1906 and a decree which was subsequently obtained by the defendant for possession of the property, the subject-matter of the sale-deed. It is alleged in the plaint that Bishrup was at the time of the sale a person of unsound mind incapable of understanding what he was doing; that the defendant fraudulently took advantage of his infirmity and induced him to execute the sale-deed; that no consideration was given; that the property was worth Rs. 10,000, while the amount of consideration was only Rs. 5,500. Then follows paragraph 5 of the plaint, which contains allegations which under certain circumstances might have been of considerable importance. It is there alleged that the defendant brought a previous suit on the 4th of May 1909 against Bishrup as a person of sound mind, while he well knew that he was a person of unsound mind, that by fraudulent means he made a man of the name of Bhola Nath pairokar for Bishrup who did not put forward a proper defence on behalf of Bishrup. It appears that a suit was brought by the defendant against Bishrup on the 4th May 1909 seeking possession of the property, the subject-matter of the sale-deed. Bishrup put in a defence to that suit, alleging that he was of weak intellect and that advantage had been taken of him and that he had not received the consideration. The sale was challenged on the same grounds as in the present suit, save the ground which relates to the value of the property. The case was tried by the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore who went into all the facts and held, first, that Bishrup was not of unsound mind, and secondly, that the full consideration had been paid. There was an appeal to the High Court by Bishrup in his own name. After considering the evidence the High Court confirmed the decision of the Court below granting the plaintiff a decree for possession of the property. The Court below in the present suit framed six issues. The first issue was whether the suit was barred by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There was no issue based upon the allegations contained in paragraph 5 of the plaint.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided that the previous litigation operated as res judicata. It is contended here that if Bishrup was in fact of unsound mind at the time the previous suit was instituted then the decision cannot possibly bind him. and it is then pointed out that since the previous litigation an enquiry has been held by the District Judge at Cawnpore and that Bishrup has been adjudged a person of unsound mind and his mother appointed guardian of his person and Ram Sarup guardian of his property. On behalf of the appellant we are asked to infer from the judgment of the District Judge that Bishrup must have been of unsound mind when the previous litigation was instituted. Sections 440 to 462 of Act XIV of 1882 (which was in force at the time of the previous litigation) provide how suits are to be brought by and against minors. Section 463 of the same Act enacts that the provisions contained in sections 440 to 462, both inclusive, shall mutatis mutandis apply in the case of persons of unsound mind adjudged to be so under Act XXXV of 1858 or under any other Act for the time being in force. In the present Code the provisions relating to suits by and against minors are applied not only to persons adjudged to be of unsound mind, but also to persons who are found by the Court on enquiry to be incapable of protecting their interests when suing or being sued, by reason of unsoundness of mind or mental infirmity, see Order XXXII, rule 15. Bishrup had not at that time been adjudged a person of unsound mind. He, therefore, was a party to the previous litigation and is prima facie bound by the result. In this view the finding of the Court below that the previous litigation operated as res judicata is correct.

It is said, however, that a decree obtained by fraud cannot operate as res judicata and that the Court ought to have taken evidence of the allegations contained in paragraph 5 and that the case should be sent to the Court below for that purpose. There are two objections to this contention. In the first place, the plainiff's advisers do not appear to have asked the Court to frame any issue on the question of fraud in connection with the previous litigation. Even in the memorandum of appeal to this Court this ground is not taken. The reasonable inference to be drawn from this is that the advisers of the plaintiff in the Court below felt that it would be impossible to sustain the allegations in paragraph 5. The whole history of the previous litigation renders it extremely improbable that the plaintiff could have adduced evidence to support the allegation that the previous suit was not fairly fought out, far less that the plaintiff in that suit by fraud prevented it from being fairly fought out. Even granted that Bishrup was not a man of strong intellect, it is quite clear that every possible defence that could be put forward on his behalf was put forward. Witnesses were called as to the condition of his mind and evidence was given as to the giving back of parts of the consideration. Legal gentlemen were employed not only in the Court of first instance but also in the High Court.

Under these circumstances, we do not think that the omission by the plaintiff's advisers to ask the Court to frame an issue on the ground of fraud was an accident or that we ought now to allow any such matter to be gone into. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Tatta.

Mr. Hassaram Jashanmal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff was formerly Secretary of the Tatta Municipality (defendant). On the 28th August 1911 a proposal was brought before a general meeting of the Municipality by the acting mukhtiarkar, Mr. Chandumal, that, as the expenditure of the Municipality was high and its income little the post of Secretary should be abolished for the present, and this proposal was carried (Exhibit No. 18). Mr. Chandumal, as acting mukhtiarkar, was an ex-officio member of the Municipality (as is admitted by respondent's Pleader), but there is nothing to show that he had been elected as Vice-President in place of the permanent mukhtiarkar for whom he was acting, as should have been done under section 23 (8) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901. There is, however, no reason to disbelieve Mr. Chandumal's evidence that, though he was not formally elected, yet he was tacitly accepted as Vice-President, it being understood that the mukhtiarkar for the time being is the Vice-President. This is corroborated by the extracts of resolutions which have been filed in this case, see in particular Exhibit 18, where Mr. Chandumal is referred to as the acting Vice-President. In the circumstances there was, I think, a tacit election of Mr. Chandumal as Vice-President, and the defect of there being no formal election is covered by section 28 (1) of the Act. However that may be (and for reasons I give subsequently it is not, in my opinion, a material point in this case), Mr. Chandumal certainly performed the duties of Vice-President, and in that capacity on the 10th September 1911 wrote as follows to the plaintiff:—

"The Municipality having abolished temporarily the post of the Secretary, his services are no longer in requirement; Mr. Assanmal (plaintiff) is, therefore, directed to deliver over charge to the Assistant Secretary by to-morrow i. e., Monday the 11th instant afternoon" (Exhibit No. 29). Accordingly on the 11th September, the services of the plaintiff were dispensed with, and he was paid his wages upto date. Plaintiff then applied to be given a post of clerk in the Municipality, on the grounds that he was being driven out without fault and he had given up a permanent post in order to take up the Municipality service, but this application was refused by the Municipality on 12th September 1912 (Exhibit No. 20). The plaintiff then complained to the Collector about his removal from the post of Secretary, and correspondence ensued thereon, in the course of which the validity of the resolution abolishing the post of Secretary appears to have been questioned by the Collector, on the ground that this was an appointment included in the authorised Municipal staff by rules under section 46 (b) (ii) of the Act, which could not be altered without the sanction of the Commissioner. A proposal was, therefore, made that in the circumstances some settlement should be come to with plaintiff, and the Municipality were asked to decide (1) whether they wanted to keep plaintiff in their service or not, and (2) whether the President should be authorized to effect a settlement with him, which it was suggested might take the form of his being given pay for the period intervening between his relinquishing charge on the 11th September 1911 and the date on which he is offered the settlement. This was discussed at a meeting held on 20th February 1912, and it was then resolved that Mr. Assanmal should not be kept in Municipal service, and that the authority mentioned should be conferred on the President, but that the final decision should be submitted to the Municipality for sanction (Exhibit No. 21). The minute of proceedings at the general meeting of 11th March 1912 (Exhibit No. 22) shows that the President proposed to plaintiff that he should tender his resignation to the Municipality and receive pay upto the 2nd March 1912, and that if he did not accept this within a week, he would be left to his remedy by suit and the Municipality would be free to appoint another Secretary. The Municipality resolved that this was sanctioned and applications should be invited by advertisement for the appointment of Secretary. There was some subsequent correspondence between the plaintiff and the Vice-President and President, which led to nothing, and on the 13th April 1912 he gave notice to the Municipality that he would file a suit. The suit was not, however, actually instituted till 10th October 1912.

In the plaint plaintiff says that on 11th September 1911 he was made to relinquish charge of his post of Secretary and finally on 11th April 1912 after a deal of correspondence, he was told that his services were dispensed with, without any charge being framed or his defence or explanation being taken. He asserted that the Municipality had no legal authority to dispense with his services and that he was entitled to recover his pay (Rs. 35 per mensem) from 12th September 1911 to 11th April 1912 and that after that to date of suit, he was entitled to damages at the same rate. He also claimed a further sum of Rs. 500 as damages for loss of reputation owing to defendant's illegal action. It may be at once said that this last claim was disallowed by the lower Court, and that plaintiff's Pleader does not press the cross-objection he has filed regarding it.

The defendant Municipality pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation and want of proper notice under section 167 of the Municipal Act, that plaintiff was not appointed permanently in such a way that his services could not be dispensed with, that the Municipality were justified in dismissing him, and that he had suffered no damages and was not entitled to recover any.

Among the issues raised were the following:—

3. Whether defendant was justified in dispensing with plaintiff's services on the grounds alleged in paragraph 3 of the written statement?

4. When were plaintiff's services dispensed with?

The Sub-Judge on the merits of the case held that the defendant was not justified in dispensing with plaintiff's services. The grounds put forward in paragraph 3 of the written statement are, he holds, insufficient. The first of these was that plaintiff's services to the Municipality were not satisfactory. The Sub-Judge held this not proved, and appellant's Pleader does not contest this in this Court. The second was that the defendant had to abolish the post of Secretary as an exeprimental measure. This the Sub-Judge holds cannot be relied on, as the action of the Municipality was illegal without the sanction of the Commissioner in Sind. The third was that plaintiff's services elsewhere had been bad and he had concealed the fact that he had been dismissed from other services. This was rightly rejected by the Sub-Judge as giving no justification on the general rule stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XX, page 98, paragraph 189. The Sub-Judge also held that plaintiff's services were dispensed with on the 11th March 1912, when the Municipality passed the resolution, Exhibit No. 22, and that as plaintiff was entitled to the additional period of one month's notice under section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act, the suit was not time-barred under section 167 of the Municipal Act. He awarded him damages at Rs. 35 per month from 11th September 1911 to 10th October 1912, the date of suit, in all Rs. 455.

I have given the facts and pleadings at some length, because it is, I think, important to bear in mind the difference between (1) the power summarily to dismiss a servant without notice on some ground such as misconduct, which may justify this and (2) the power to terminate a contract of service by reasonable notice. Though the defendant Municipality has in its pleadings attempted to justify the removal of plaintiff from his post under the former power, yet the latter is also pleaded by the defendant in the written statement, which contended that plaintiff was not appointed permanently in such a way that his services could not be dispensed with. The 3rd and 4th issues also use the phrase "dispensed with" and not "dismissed". And as a matter of fact, it is clear that the plaintiff was not dismissed by the Municipality for any reason falling under a master's power of summary dismissal for misconduct, etc., but that his services were dispensed with on the ground that the Municipality did not want to employ a Secretary any longer (Exhibits Nos. 18 and 29). Plaintiff himself admits this in the application referred to in Exhibit No. 22, and the resolution, Exhibit No. 21, also speaks of plaintiff's removal from his post, and not his dismissal. The Sub-Judge has rejected the Municipality's plea as to dispensing with plaintiff's services, because the abolition of the post of Secretary, on which that dispensing with his services was based, was illegal under the Municipal Act. He says: "Now, if in the general interests the Municipality thought it advisable to abolish the post of Secretary and to dispense with plaintiff's services, their course was obvious. They could have obtained the Commissioner's sanction for the abolition of the post and then said that they wished to dispense with plaintiff's services and then could have given him a month's notice or a month's pay, plaintiff being a monthly servant. A master is, of course, justified at all times in reducing his establishment and the plaintiff would have had no cause for complaint. Instead of this, however, they dismissed him illegally on plainly inadequate grounds." But, in my opinion, this confuses the real point. The word "dismissed" in such a case is generally used with reference to a master's power of summary dismissal for misconduct, etc., and (as I have already shown) plaintiff was not dismissed in this sense. The case really falls under the other power of master to terminate the contract of hiring and service, and should be so treated. There was a "permanent" post of Secretary, but Mr. Hassaram was quite right in his contention that a man appointed to that post has no right to occupy it permanently unless he is dismissed for some reason justifying summary dismissal. The contract is one terminable on either side by reasonable notice, and just as plaintiff could have left the post, if he had wanted to, after reasonable notice, so also the Municipality could dispense with plaintiff's services, after such notice. The circumstances are not such that plaintiff could be considered to be merely on a yearly hiring, as is the general presumption (See Halsbury's "Laws of England," Volume XX, page 92, paragraph 173), and the case falls under the rule stated in paragraph 187 at page 97 of that same work, viz. "if no custom nor stipulation as to notice exists, and if the contract of service is not one which can be regarded as a yearly hiring, the service is terminable by reasonable notice." Addison's Law of Contracts, 10th Edn., page 864, similarly states: "an indefinite hiring is determinable by a reasonable notice in the absence of any agreement or custom to the contrary." There is nothing that I can find in the Bombay District Municipal Act to the contrary. Clause (e) of section 46 clearly refers to "dismissal" in the nature of a punishment for misconduct, etc., and the Municipal Rule 102 can only refer to such a dismissal, for it speaks of the officer dismissed being heard in his defence and of the charge or charges brought against him. The general power of a master to get rid of a servant after reasonable notice remains entirely untouched by anything in that rule or section 46. Rule 108 that "pensions shall not be granted by the Municipality" also goes against any contract by the Municipality to allow the plaintiff to remain in service (if he wanted to) until any particular time.

It is clear, therefore, that what really gives the plaintiff a right to damages is not the fact that the Municipality's abolition of the Secretary's post was illegal, but that they did not give him reasonable notice. This does not of course make their removal of him legal, but it affects the question of damages. What is "reasonable notice" is a question which varies with the circumstances of the case. The Sub-Judge in the extract from his judgment given above puts it at a month, but I should be inclined to put it at three months, having regard to the standard generally adopted in England for "clerks in superior positions" [See note (p) at page 97 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XX]. The ordinary measure of damages in such a case is the amount of wages which the servant has been prevented from earning by reason of his wrongful dismissal, after taking into consideration the probabilities of his obtaining employment elsewhere, and in this connection it is laid down that it is the servant's duty to use due diligence in endeavouring to obtain employment (Halsbury, loc-cit, pages 112,113). In this case the Municipality to a certain extent kept the plaintiff in doubt as to whether he might not be re-employed by them, and it was not till 11th March 1912 that it was definitely decided that he would not be employed again as Secretary. He was also offered his pay up to 2nd March 1912. In the circumstances, I think he is entitled to more than three months' wages as damages, viz., to the wages for the period of six months from 11th September 1911 to 10th March 1912, intervening before he was definitely told he would not be employed. He is not, in my opinion, entitled to anything more, even if it be true that he seriously sought employment but failed to get any. The evidence on this point of plaintiff and his witnesses is not, however, of a reliable nature. The fact that plaintiff unnecessarily delayed bringing his suit till 10th October 1912 does not of course entitle him to damages up to that date.

As regards the plea that the suit is barred by section 167 of the Municipal Act, I hold that that section does not apply as this is an action brought on a contract, following the rulings in Ranchordas Moorarji v. Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay (1) and Municipality of Faizpur v. Nanak Dulat Shet (2). I do not agree with the Sub-Judge that plaintiff's dismissal or removal can be said to be something done, or purporting to have been done, in pursuance of the Municipal Act. It was not an act done under any power conferred on the Municipality by the Municipal Act, but under the general rule relating to contracts of service to which I have referred above.

It is unnecessary, therefore, to decide the point of limitation arising under this section 167. Nor does Article 2 of the Limitation Act apply to the case. In my opinion it falls under Article 115.

I agree with the Sub-Judge that if section 167 does apply the notice given was sufficient, and I am inclined to agree with him that plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act, a point on which there is some variance of judicial opinion. I also think that, in the circumstances of this case, the Sub-Judge is justified in taking the 11th March 1912 as the date of the "act complained of" within the meaning of section 167. But, as I hold that that section does not apply, these questions do not arise.

For the reasons given I modify the lower Court's decree by awarding plaintiff damages at the rate of Rs. 35 per month for six months from 11th September 1911, instead of up to 10th October 1911, i.e., for Rs. 210 instead of Rs. 455.

As each party has succeeded and failed to the extent of about half the amount in dispute in appeal, I order each party to bear half his opponent's costs of appeal, except that respondent must bear the whole of the costs of his cross-objections.

Decree modified.

JUDGMENT.—The only point arguable in second appeal, with which we have been pressed, is whether section 11 (3) of Act VIII of 1865 and the corresponding provision of Act I of 1908 should be given retrospective effect. Foulkes v. Muthusami Goundan (1) is against this.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVIII, r. (5), O. XXXIX, r. (1)—Mortgage of right to receive certain dues—Decree for sale—Order of attachment and injunction, whether competent.

The appellant mortgaged to the respondent his right to receive malikana dues from a number of villages and a decree for sale was passed on the mortgage, but before the sale the decree-holder obtained an order restraining the judgment-debtor from receiving the malikana dues:

Held, that the Court had no power either to attach the malikana dues or to prevent the appellant from receiving them. [p. 602, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Agra.

The Hon'ble Mr. Abdul Raoof, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiam Krishna Dar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an order passed in the course of proceedings taken to execute a decree dated November 23rd, 1911. It appears that in August 1901, the appellant mortgaged to the respondent his right to receive what are described as taluqdari malikana dues from a number of villages. A decree nisi for sale of the property was passed in favour of the respondent on November 23rd, 1911. There was an appeal to this Court which was dismissed in April 1913, and an order absolute for sale of the property was passed on February 10th, 1914. In March of the same year the respondent applied for sale of the property. Notice was issued to the appellant who put forward objections. Those objections were ultimately dismissed and an order was made that the property should be sold. On July 10th, 1914, the respondent applied to the Court to issue an injunction to the appellant restraining him from receiving the malikana dues. At first sight it seems to be an application under Order XXXIX, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but from certain expressions used in the application it may have been an application under Order XXXVIII, rule 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court ex parte made an order as prayed and issued injunction. Objections were put forward which were dismissed and the ex parte order of the Court was maintained. This is an appeal against the last-mentioned order.

As the appellant has a right of appeal whether it was an order of attachment or an order for the issue of injunction, it is unnecessary to consider whether it was passed under Order XXXVIII, or under Order XXXIX, of the Code of Civil Procedure. In appeal it is contended that the Court had no power either to attach the malikana dues or to prevent the appellant by injunction from receiving them. It is contended that all that the respondent is entitled to do, under his decree, is to have the property sold. For the respondent it is contended that it is competent to a Court to attach property in a case of this kind, at all events where it is clear that, in the event of the mortgaged property not realizing sufficient to satisfy the decree, a decree can be passed under Order XXXIV, rule 6. We will assume, for the purposes of this appeal, that the property mortgaged will not realize sufficient to satisfy the decree. It appears to us clear that the case does not fall either within Order XXXVIII, rule 5 or within Order XXXIX, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no suggestion that the appellant is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property, or remove it from the jurisdiction of the Court, or that any property in dispute is in danger of being wasted, or that the appellant intends to remove his property with a view of defrauding his creditors. All that the appellant in the present case insists upon doing is receiving the income of the property until a sale takes place. In the last resort it is contended that the Court was justified in passing the order under appeal either under clause (c) or clause (e) of section 94 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is a question whether the clauses referred to are intended to authorise a Court to grant injunctions or to make attachments in cases not provided for by the Orders or rules. We may assume that it was intended to give the Court powers outside the Orders and rules in exceptional cases. In the present case, we see no reason to take action of an extraordinary character. The order absolute for sale was not passed until February 1914, and it cannot be said that the appellant has for any great length of time prevented the respondent-decree-holder from enforcing his decree. Assuming, therefore, that section 94 can be construed in the way suggested by the respondent, we are not prepared to hold that the present case is covered by that section. It seems to us that the Court below was not justified in either attaching the malikana dues or restraining the appellant by injunction from receiving them. We allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Court below. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs of this appeal. The record should be sent back at once so that further execution may not be delayed.

Appeal allowed.

Mr. Hirdaram Mewaram, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to file an award under the Arbitration Act.

Khimanmal Chandumal (respondent No. 1) and Jethanand Harumal (respondent No. 2) had been carrying on business in partnership and had quarrelled. On the 29th June 1913, they signed a reference to arbitration in the following terms:—

"We Jethanand Harumal of the one part and Khimanmal Chandandas of the second part, carrying on business in the name and style of Harumal Pritamdas, do appoint Mr. Lalchand Kewalram the sole arbitrator, to hear our disputes and settle our accounts and divide the profits after hearing our arguments without recording anything."

What happened after this is told us by Lalchand. He states: "First there was a reference in my favour only. Both parties signed it. Jethanand then said he wanted another arbitrator also; then a letter was signed on a one-anna stamp paper; in that the names of both arbitrators were inserted; here it is (Exhibit B, dated 6th July)." It was agreed that as soon as Shamdas' name was inserted in the eight-anna agreement this was to be cancelled. Then the name of Shamdas was inserted in the original reference (Exhibit C) on the same day, the 6th July. Both parties initialled the alterations. The proceedings put in (Exhibit D) show that they commenced at 6-45 P. M. on the 6th July. Jethanand was examined at considerable length on that day. The second hearing was on the 18th July when again, Jethanand was examined at length. The third hearing was on the 19th July when Jethanand was questioned by Khimanmal. The fourth hearing was on the 23rd July when Jethanand was examined by Khimanmal. The final hearing was on the 28th July when Jethanand was again present and certain entries were seen and admitted by both parties. The award was given and published on the 4th October 1913. Jethanand has put in objections to the award on the following grounds:—

1. That there was no valid reference to the two arbitrators.
2. That the award is vague and indefinite.
3. That the arbitrators exceeded their authority in awarding Rs. 160-2-0 to charity.
4. That the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct in listening to respondent No. 1 in the absence of the objector and in other ways.
5. That the award was made after the expiry of the time allowed by law.

The reference was not entered on until 6-45 P. M. on the 6th July, so the award was made within the three months allowed by the third proviso of the first Schedule to the Arbitration Act.

The objector has not gone into the box to prove the alleged misconduct of the arbitrators. It is clear from the abstract of the proceedings above given that Jethanand was present at the hearings and had full opportunity to state his case. A balance-sheet was taken out by a Mehta in the presence of the parties; the Mehta was paid by Jethanand himself.

The arbitrator explains that, under the partnership agreement, one pice in every rupee of profit was to be given to charity. In awarding that Rs. 160-2-0 of charity was to be paid by Jethanand to the Karachi Panjrapole, the arbitrators did no more than settle one of the matters in dispute between the parties.

It is contended that the words "up to 1969" in paragraph 1 of the award leave it doubtful whether or not the year 1969 was included. The arbitrator explains that it meant up to the end of 1969. As Jethanand has seen the balance-sheet and knows for a certainty what the words mean, and has not gone into the box to say that they present difficulty of construction to himself, it may be taken that both parties are well aware what the words mean, and that to them they are neither vague nor indefinite.

This disposes of all but the first objection, which I will now deal with. Mr. Kalumal contends that the reference of the 29th June as originally executed was one complete instrument, and that when the words "and Shamoomal Teoomal" and the letter "S" after the word "arbitrator" were inserted and initialled, a second instrument chargeable with duty within the provisions of section 14, Indian Stamp Act, was written, and that, accordingly, the reference to the two arbitrators must be deemed to be unstamped, and the arbitrators could not act on it as they had not been legally vested with authority.

It may be conceded that if parties write a reference on a piece of stamped paper on which another reference has already been written, then such second reference does not clothe the arbitrators therein named with any authority. But the question is whether in this case, the insertion of the name of the second arbitrator converted the old reference into a second instrument; I think not.

A reference to arbitration consists of two essential elements: there is, firstly, the appointment of the arbitrator, the conferring on a certain person authority to give a quasi judicial decision on certain matters in dispute and there is, secondly, an agreement of the parties to accept such decision as final. Now the appointment of a certain person as arbitrator is not complete until such person has accepted the reference, and consented to act. Until such acceptance, there is nothing more than an agreement to refer to him, and there can be no question of revoking or cancelling his authority, for he possesses none. Any agreement may by consent of the parties be rescinded or altered, or the parties may agree to substitute another agreement, see section 62, Indian Contract Act. Now, if the agreement be rescinded, or if an entirely new agreement be substituted, then certainly the original agreement ceases to have any effective existence. But a mere alteration in an agreement does not operate to rescind it. The agreement to carry out the alteration is undoubtedly a new agreement, but this new agreement is not the agreement which is written on the first instrument; all that is inscribed is an amendment which is the effect or result of the new agreement. Though the arbitrator originally named as sole arbitrator was put into the box, Mr. Kalumal did not attempt to elicit from him that he had accepted the reference before the amendment of 6th July, and there is nothing on record from which I can assume that he did. I hold it not proved that the reference had been accepted. The agreement or reference could, therefore, be altered by consent of parties, for it was still an agreement and nothing more; no cancellation or rescission took place. I hold that the insertion of the words above mentioned did not constitute the agreement a second instrument within the meaning of section 14 of the Stamp Act.

In the course of argument Mr. Kalumal drew attention to the fact that only one arbitrator had signed the petition to file award and suggested that the terms of section 11 had not been fulfilled; but in "causing the award to be filed" at the request of a party the arbitrators are not acting judicially, they are performing a purely ministerial act which can be legally performed by one of their number.

I disallow all the objections. Let the award be filed. Costs of these proceedings to be borne by the objector, Jethanand.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 4th September 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Ghazipur District, in a case of determination of rent.

JUDGMENT.—In a proceeding under section 95 of the Tenancy Act, the Court has no power to fix the amount of rent when no rent has been fixed or agreed upon. The section only empowers a Court to ascertain what the amount of rent payable was. This view of the law has been, so far as I know, invariably followed by the Board. It is unnecessary to discuss the other points.

Held, (1) that the document did not transfer an interest in the property nor was there any existing or future debt or an engagement which might give rise to a pecuniary liability within the meaning of section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act; [p. 606, col. 1.]

(2) that it merely created a charge and did not fall within section 31 of the Limitation Act. [p. 606, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Nagapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 1040 of 1910, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 43 of 1910.

FACTS.—The plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant for possession of certain immoveable property and in execution of the decree applied for delivery. The Court made an order that the defendant should, on his furnishing security for mesne profits, remain in possession. The suit bond was executed by the defendant in favour of the Court on 7th June 1894. The suit was finally disposed of by the High Court in 1898. In 1910 the plaintiff brought a suit on the security bond executed by the defendant for mesne profits. Both the lower Courts held that the instrument sued on merely created a "charge" and was not a "mortgage" and the plaintiff could not claim the benefit of section 31 (2) of the Limitation Act, and dismissed the suit as barred. The present appeal is against that decree.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Appellant:—This is a suit to enforce the suit bond given during delivery of possession. The questions are what is the period of limitation and whether the bond is a "mortgage" or a "charge".

The security bond dates from 7th June 1894, being executed in favour of the District Munsif's Court of Tiruvalur. Suits were disposed of on 8th July 1895. Plaintiff obtained possession in September 1895.

Second appeal was disposed of by the High Court in 1898 and the present suit filed in 1910.

The period of limitation is 30 years. The security bond is a mortgage under section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act.

[SANKARAN NAIR, J.—There is no transfer of interest.]

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar.—It is a debt to be ascertained in future.

[SANKARAN NAIR, J.—There are no words transferring the interest.]

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar.—The words are "we have as security given the following properties." The property is described as specific and is given as security.

[BAKEWELL, J.—What is the Tamil word for "furnished"? In Girindra Nath Mukerjee v. Bejoy Gopal Mukerjee (1), the question was whether a security bond is a mortgage.]

[SANKARAN NAIR, J.—Is there any printed form?]

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar.—The document in Girindra Nath Mukerjee v. Bejoy Gopal Mukerjee (1) was intended to act as security bond. That is one of the ingredients.

(1) 26 C. 246; 3 C. W. N. 84.

There is the transfer of interest in favour of the Registrar. Aliba v. Nanu (2); Nagaruru Sambayya v. Tangatur Subhayya (3), Tokhan Singh v. Girwar Singh (4). The words are "put certain property as security."

Respondents were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is whether the security bond, Exhibit C, is a mortgage within section 58 or a charge within section 100, of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The document recites an order of the Court made upon an application that the possession of certain immoveable property should not be delivered over to the plaintiff and that the defendant in this suit should give security, and states that "we have for a sum not exceeding Rs. 300 made the properties mentioned below security." We are of opinion that this document does not transfer an interest in the property nor is there any existing or future debt or an engagement which might give rise to a pecuniary liability within the meaning of section 58. There is surely an intention that if the defendant should be found entitled to any damages by the Court, the amount should be realized out of the specific property. We are of opinion, therefore, that the document, Exhibit C, merely creates a charge, and does not fall within section 31 of the Limitation Act. We are clearly of opinion that time began to run from the date of the first decree in the original Court and that the present suit was rightly held to be barred.

In the result this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Suit on a lost bond—Admission of execution—Plea of payment—Burden of proof.

Where a suit was brought on a lost bond and the defendant admitted its execution but pleaded payment:

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Agra, confirming a decree of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Agra.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellants.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants to enforce a mortagage, dated the 10th of July 1884, alleged to have been executed by Randhir Singh and Partab Singh. Randhir Singh is dead and is represented by his son, Karan Singh, and his daughter-in-law, Musammat Radha, the widow, apparently, of a pre-deceased son. The share of Randhir Singh in the mortgaged property was sold to Chidammi Lal, whose minor sons, Daya Kishore and Jai Kishore, are the defendants Nos. 4 and 5. The defendant No. 2 is the mortgagor, Partab Singh, and defendant No. 3, Nahar Singh, is the son of Partab Singh. The case in our opinion was not properly tried. On the first date fixed for hearing the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit for default of appearance of both parties. On the same date, i.e., the 16th of September 1911, he restored the case to his file. On that date Partab Singh and Karan Singh filed a compromise and the learned Judge proceeded to hear the case ex parte against the other defendants and made a decree in the terms of the compromise. Subsequently an application was made on behalf of Nahar Singh and Musammat Radha to have the ex parte decree made against them set aside. This application was granted and the case was re-heard. It is clear that Musammat Radha has no interest in the suit. Strictly speaking Karan Singh also has no interest in the suit, because the plaintiff cannot enforce the mortgage against any property other than the mortgaged property and Randhir Singh's share of the mortgaged property was sold to Chidammi and is in the possession of the minor defendants, Daya Kishore and Jai Kishore. Nahar Singh filed a written statement in which he said that his father, Partab Singh, was of unsound mind and was under the influence of the plaintiffs and that the bond had been discharged by Chidammi (the purchaser of Randhir Singh's property) and had been returned to him. He denied the allegation of loss of the bond made on behalf of the plaintiffs. Partab Singh and Karan Singh admitted the claim. Musammat Radha denied the bond and Musammat Chironji (the mother and guardian of the minor defendants) did not enter appearance. The Court proceeded to try the suit and held that the claim was time-barred. This finding on the question of limitation was, as the lower Appellate Court has held, erroneous in view of the rulings of this Court. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, also tried the other issues framed by him. He was of opinion that the loss of the bond was not proved and that the bond had been discharged. He accordingly dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the learned District Judge, as we have said above, disagreed with the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of limitation, but he held that the loss of the bond had not been proved and accordingly affirmed the decision of the first Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the question of the loss of the bond was immaterial. It is said that it was Nahar Singh who denied the loss, but as he admitted the bond and only pleaded payment, the question of loss was only material for the purpose of determining whether the bond had been discharged and returned. We think this contention is valid. Nahar Singh, however, also stated that his father was of unsound mind and was under the influence of the plaintiffs. That was a question which the Court of first instance ought to have tried but did not try. I was alleged that the bond had been admitted by Musammat Chironji, the mother of the minor defendants, who are the real parties interested in the portion of the mortgaged property which belonged to Randhir Singh. That question also was not tried by the Court of first instance. If she admitted the genuineness of the mortgage and the liability of the property for the mortgage debt, that would be a strong piece of evidence in favour of the plaintiff, but it would have to be proved that she made the admission. For all these reasons we think that the case has not been properly tried. We, accordingly, discharge the decrees of the Courts below and remand the case to the Court of first instance, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number and try it de novo after framing proper issues. Costs here and hitherto will be costs in the cause Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 32, 91—Statement not against pecuniary or proprietary interest of person making it, whether admissible—Plaintiff relying upon document—Other evidence of transaction, if admissible.

A statement by a plaintiff as a witness to the effect that her father told her that he had mortgaged the land in suit to the defendant is inadmissible under section 32 of the Evidence Act. [p. 608, col. 1.]

Where the plaintiff relies upon a mortgage-deed produced by her but not proved, she is precluded by section 91 of the Evidence Act from giving other evidence of the terms of the transaction. [p. 608, col. 2; p. 609, col. 1.]

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. N. Basu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit to recover land in the possession of the defendant-respondent on the ground that it had been mortgaged by the plaintiff-appellant's father. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree which was set aside upon appeal, and the plaintiff now comes to this Court under section 13 of the Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation.

The land had admittedly been in the possession of the defendant for a great many years, and as the mortgage was denied, the burden of proving it was on the plaintiff-appellant. So far the Court of first instance was correct, but in recording and dealing with the evidence, the Court appears to have overlooked not only the provisions of the Evidence Act, but the numerous rulings of this Court explaining those provisions.

The plaintiff offered herself as a witness and said that her father had told her that he had mortgaged the land. Her father was dead, and this evidence could only have been admitted if it was admissible under the provisions of section 32 of the Evidence Act. It was not a statement against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making it, nor does it come under any of the provisions of that section, and this evidence was, therefore, inadmissible.

The next witness was U Kywe who said that he was present when the the original mortgage was concluded, and that it was recorded in a parabaik document. A parabaik document was produced in Court, and under section 91 of the Evidence Act no evidence of the terms of the mortgage was admissible except the document itself. The document was not shown to the witness nor was he asked to identify it, and his evidence was, therefore, inadmissible.

The next witness was a man who had been husband to the plaintiff. He deposed that he was present when a subsequent advance of Rs. 10 was taken by the mortgagor. His evidence was uncorroborated. He said that he did not know whether a document was written or not, that no one else was present, and his evidence was of very little value.

The next witness was Maung Hme who produced the Exhibit mortgage-deed, a parabaik. He says that he found it among the papers of one of the original mortgagees. Documents of this kind do not prove themselves, and unless they are admitted by the other side, it is necessary to prove them. This may be done by calling a witness who was present when the document was executed and testifies in Court that the document produced is that which was executed. This has not been done. It is also possible in certain cases to make certain presumptions with reference to ancient documents, that is to say, documents purporting or proved to be 30 years' old, under section 90 of the Evidence Act. The Court of first instance does not suggest that any presumption should be drawn in the case of the document produced. The necessity for caution in making presumptions as to ancient documents in Upper Burma has been insisted on repeatedly in the rulings of this Court, for instance, Ma Lon v. Maung Myo (1).

Maung Hme, the witness who produced the document, is admittedly on bad terms with the defendant-respondent.

The document which recites the transaction by which Rs. 50 is supposed to have been advanced upon the land, concludes with the words "total amount of the mortgage-money Rs. 60." It is not suggested that the amount of the mortgage-money was raised to Rs. 60 until the year 1252 B. E., that is less than 30 years ago, and if the whole document was written at that date, no presumption could be made with regard to it.

The very fact that these concluding words are in the document, apparently in the same handwriting and of the same date as the rest, shows how easy it is to alter or concoct these documents. The law does not require the Court to draw any presumption: on the contray as explained in the ruling of this Court, the presumption should not be drawn as a matter of course or without great caution. In the present case the document was produced in Court by a person who says he got it from proper custody, but who was shown to be on bad terms with the other side and whom it was not safe to believe. The document itself has either been wholly written or has had additions made to it at a date later than the date on which it purports to have been written. No presumption can clearly be drawn with regard to it and it has not been proved.

As the plaintiff relied upon a document produced by her but not proved, she was precluded by the terms of section 91 of the Evidence Act from giving other evidence of the transaction.

(1) U. B. R. (1892—96), II, 350.

The admission deposed to by the 4th and last witness for the plaintiff was so vague as to be clearly valueless.

There is, therefore, no evidence worth the name upon which the plaintiff-appellant could possibly hope to succeed.

The defendants had admittedly been in possession for at least 34 or 35 years and there is a long series of rulings of this Court laying down that a long and peaceable possession should not be disturbed except upon substantial and satisfactory evidence.

It should not have been necessary to repeat these elementary rules of law. Cases, however, constantly come before this Court in which not merely the parties and Advocates but the Judges fail to distinguish between evidence which is admissible and that which is not. All that can be done is to repeat the more important of these rules, in the hope that they will sooner or later be learnt and understood.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

DAYARAM—RESPONDENT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (i),(ix)—Foreclosure suit—Appeal for enhancement of mortgage-money—Court-fee to be ad valorem.

The appellants sued to obtain foreclosure of a mortgage and joined as one of the defendants a co-mortgagee who, they alleged, had parted with his rights to their predecessors-in-title. The co-mortgagee also filed a suit and admitting appellants' right to the extent of a half share, made them defendants as they refused to be co-plaintiffs with him. The suits were tried jointly and two different decrees were passed. The appellants filed an appeal for enhancement of the mortgage money payable to them:

Held, that they must pay ad valorem Court fees on the amount by which enhancement was sought. [p. 610, col. 1.]

First appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 30th April 1914.

Dr. H. S. Gour, Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and K. V. Deoskar, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for determination at this stage is, whether the memorandum of appeal is sufficiently stamped.

The appellants sued on the 19th July 1910 to obtain foreclosure of a mortgage. They joined as one of the defendants a co-mortgagee named Chinba, whom they alleged to have parted with his rights to their predecessors-in-title. That suit bears No. 176 on the file of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, and is the one out of which the present appeal arises.

Just 10 days earlier Chinba had instituted Suit No. 156 in the Additional District Judge's Court. He claimed on foot of the same mortgage as that which the appellants made the basis of their suit, but admitted their right to the extent of a half share and made them defendants as they refused to be co-plaintiffs with him.

A single trial was held in the two suits, but two decrees were drawn up. The Additional District Judge held that Chinba was still a co-mortgagee, his interest being one half. A certain payment proved by the mortgagors was credited against the present appellants' share only, and the decree in each suit directed payment to the plaintiff therein of the sum found due to him.

The total sum payable on the mortgage up to the 30th October 1914 was held to be Rs. 6,736-11-6. The decree in Suit No. 156 ordered payment of Rs. 4,409-13-0 to Chinba, while that in Suit No. 176 ordered the mortgagors to pay Rs. 2,326-14-6 to the appellants.

The object of this appeal is to obtain a decision that the entire sum payable under the mortgage belongs to the appellants, and that the said sum is Rs. 11,229-14-0, i. e., more by Rs. 8,902-15-6 than the Additional District Judge decreed to them.

In the memorandum the relief claimed in appeal is described as a declaration, but in argument the appellants' learned Counsel contended that the Court-fee should be calculated on the principal sum secured by the mortgage, namely, Rs. 2,000. Dhiraj

Singh v. Rajaram (1) is relied on, the argument being that in a suit for foreclosure by a mortgagee the value for purposes of Court-fee is the same at all stages of the litigation, being that prescribed in clause (ix), section 7 of the Court Fees Act. For the respondent Chinba reliance is placed upon Onkar v. Lakmichand (2) and Court-fee is said to be payable on the amount by which the appellants seek to have the mortgage-money increased, namely, Rs. 8,902-15-6.

We are very clearly of opinion that the respondent's contention is correct. We have ascertained from our brother Stanyon, who decided Dhiraj Singh v. Rajaram (1), that he did not intend to lay down therein that Court-fee is payable on the principal sum secured even if the subject-matter of the dispute in appeal is merely the amount payable. On the contrary, he meant by the penultimate paragraph of the placitum to convey that where a mere enhancement or reduction of the mortgage-money is sought by the appellant, Court-fee must be paid ad valorem according to the sum so put in question. So far then as the matter before us is concerned, there is no difference between the view taken in Onkar v. Lakmichand (2) and that expressed obiter in Dhiraj Singh v. Rajaram (1). We are in complete agreement with the ratio decidendi in the former case and would further observe that the obiter dictum with which the judgment of Edge, Chief Judge, in Pirbhu Narain v. Sita Ram (3) concludes supports the respondent's contention. In that case the mortgagor had sued for redemption, alleging the debt to have been completely satisfied and had appealed against the amount the Court of first instance had ordered him to pay. The learned Chief Justice said :—

"If, on the other hand, the decree below had decreed redemption on payment of, say, Rs. 500, and the defendants-mortgagees were appealing on the ground that the amount due was Rs. 2,00,000, I am of opinion that the amount of Court-fee should be calculated on the difference between Rs. 500 and Rs. 2,00,000."

In the case before us the appellants not only seek enhancement of the mortgage-money, but also to appropriate the entire sum to themselves. We see no difference in respect of the principle to be applied between a claim like this and one by the mortgagor to obtain reduction of the mortgage-money. The appellants must, therefore, pay an additional Court-fee of Rs. 425, the full fee payable ad valorem on Rs. 8,902-15-6 being Rs. 435 and Rs. 10 only having so far been paid. Time till the 15th January 1915 is allowed for payment and on that date an order regarding the hearing of the appeal on the merits will be passed.

NGA TIN AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS

NGA SAW—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 22—Cross-objections, whether can be urged against co-respondents.

A respondent in an appeal is not ordinarily entitled to urge cross-objections except against the appellant. [p. 611, col. 1.]

Where a plaintiff had sued two defendants who had no common ground of defence, and was successful against one only and on that defendant appealing, the plaintiff filed a cross-objection in which he claimed a decree against the other defendant:

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to file a cross-objection against the second defendant and to prove his case against him. [p. 611, col. 2.]

Mr. D. Dutt, for the Applicants.

Mr. J. C. Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued the two defendants to recover Rs. 124, the balance of a sum advanced for purchase of plantains, and obtained a decree against the 2nd defendant. The 2nd defendant appealed. The plaintiff in the lower Appellate Court filed a cross-objection in which he claimed a decree against the 1st defendant. The 2nd defendant's appeal was dismissed, and the lower Appellate Court gave plaintiff a decree against the 1st defendant. This application for revision states that the lower Appellate Court should not have given a decree against the 1st defendant in the absence of a separate appeal by the plaintiff.

It has been further argued that the present applicant was not a party to the appeal and he was not present, and that there was no evidence upon the record to justify the finding of the lower Appellate Court.

The provision of law which enables a respondent to take a cross-objection to a decree which has been appealed against, is contained in Order XLI, rule 22, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The first paragraph of this rule corresponds, with no material difference, with the first paragraph of section 561 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. There are a number of rulings under the old Code which lay down that a respondent in an appeal is not ordinarily entitled to urge cross-objections except against the appellant. The matter was considered at length in Bishun Churn Roy Chowdhry v. Jogendra Nath Roy (1), and the rule of law was there laid down that it was only by way of exception to the general rule that one respondent may urge cross-objections as against the other respondents, the exception holding good, among other cases, in those in which the appeal of some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-respondents. This has been quoted with approval in subsequent cases, e.g., Shabiuddin v. Deomoorat Koer (2). The same view was taken by the Allahadad High Court in Kallu v. Manni (3) though in the latter case, the opinion appears to have been based partly upon the words contained in paragraph 3 of section 561 of the old Code, which required the respondent to show that the appellant or his Pleader had received a copy of the objection. These words do not appear in the present Code, the words "party who may be affected by such objection" being substituted for "appellant." In the case of Shabiuddin v. Deomoorat Koer (2), following the observations of the Judge in Anwar Jan Bibee v. Azmut Ali (4) which were quoted with approval, it was held that the cross-appeal cannot re-open any questions which have been decided between the co-respondents, but must have reference to the appellant and the points which are in dispute between the respondent who takes the cross-appeal and the appellant: "It is quite possible that there may be cases in which, when an appellant succeeds in his appeal, questions will be opened up as between the co-respondents which would otherwise have been decided; and it is also possible when interests are identical that a respondent succeeding in his cross-appeal may open up questions as between himself and his co-respondent." But that is not the case in this litigation. It seems clear that if it had been intended that Order XLI, rule 22, should give a respondent an opportunity to take a cross-objection to the decree not only as against the appellant but as against all the other respondents, this intention would have been expressed unequivocally. But in the present case the applicant was not even a respondent in the appeal. He had successfully contested plaintiff's claim in the first Court and had not been made a party to the appeal until the plaintiff attempted to make him a party by filing a cross-objection. It is clearly unreasonable in a case where a plaintiff had sued two defendants who had no common ground of defence and has been successful against one only, and where that defendant appeals, that the plaintiff should be heard in the same appeal to prove his case against the other defendant. This view has more recently been reaffirmed in the case of Jadunandan Prosad Singha v. Koer Kallayan Singh (5) and Nursey Virji v. Alfred H. Harrison (6).

I am of opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to file a cross-objection in this appeal against the 2nd defendant, whose case was that he was not concerned in the transaction in question and who, the Court of first instance had found, had not in fact been a party to that transaction.

In this particular case, moreover, there appear to be other reasons why this Court should interfere in revision. The third paragraph of rule 22 requires that unless the respondent files with the objection a written acknowledgment from the party who may be affected by such objection of having received a copy thereof, the Appellate Court shall cause a copy to be served on him. The cross objection did not show that a copy had been served, and there is nothing on the record to show that this was done. Further, the record does not show that the present applicant was present. The objection, again, appears to have been filed on the 17th of February and the appeal came on for hearing on the 24th of February. It would appear that even if a copy was served on the applicant, the time allowed must have been entirely insufficient.

Again upon the merits, it does not appear that the lower Appellate Court had any clear conception of what the question in dispute was. It appears from the evidence that the plantains which were sold were the produce of the 2nd defendant's garden. Upon the pleadings, it was clearly a question whether, supposing the 1st defendant to have taken any part in the transaction, he was acting merely as an agent for the 2nd defendant or as a partner with him, and the judgment of the lower Appellate Court does not show that this point was considered or that the Judge considered it proved that he was a partner.

The application is allowed, and the decree of the lower Appellate Court, so far as it affects the 2nd applicant, is set aside with costs.

As far as 1st applicant, Maung Tin, is concerned, the application is dismissed.

Application partly dismissed.

Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856), s. 2—Alienation by widow of her deceased husband's property after her re-marriage—Suit by reversioner—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 141, 143.

The remarriage of a Hindu widow extinguishes her estate in the property of her deceased husband and the presumptive interest of the reversioners vests under section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act. [p. 612, col. 2.]

A suit by the reversioners to set aside an alienation by the widow of her deceased husband's property brought more than 12 years after her re-marriage is barred under Articles 141, 143 of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act. [p. 613, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Saugor, dated the 10th March 1914, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Damoh, dated the 18th September 1913.

Mr. M. Chuckerbutty, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The facts found are these. One Bhairon Lohar, the first husband of the defendent, Nai Bahu, died some time before 1899, leaving the house in dispute, the said defendant as his immediate heir and the plaintiff as his nearest reversioner. Nai Bahu took possession of the house and retained it continuously till the 12th May 1913, when she sold it to the second defendant, Jhalkan, though in 1899, in accordance with a custom of her caste, she contracted a valid marriage with one Chhabile and is still his lawful wife. On the 26th June 1913 the plaintiff lodged the present suit, on the allegations (1) that Nai Bahu's re-marriage was completed by a caste dinner given in the month of February 1908 and entailed forfeiture of the estate of Bhairon, (2) that, therefore, she had no interest to sell to Jhalkan in May 1913, the estate having vested in the plaintiff, and (3) that in any case the sale was made without legal necessity. The plaintiff, therefore, claims (a) possession of Bhairon's house or, in the alternative, (b) a declaration that the sale did not affect his reversionary interest.

The Courts below having found that Nai Bahu's re-marriage took place in 899 have dismissed the suit as time-barred. The plaintiff has, therefore, made this appeal. In my opinion the suit has been correctly decided. The re-marriage of Nai Bahu in 1899 at once extinguished her widow's estate in the property of Bhairon, and the presumptive interest of the plaintiff, as the nearest reversioner, vested under section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856). Time began to run against him for recovery of possession of the house which continued in the hand of Nai Bahu. The proper Article of the Limitation Schedule applicable to the case seems to be 143: but if Article 141 can be technically employed, then I am clear that by her re-marriage Nai Bahu, as the widow of Bhairon, incurred civil death, and her subsequent possession of the house was that of another person in the eye of the law, namely, the wife of Chhabile. That the civil death of a Hindu widow has the same legal result as her natural death would have, has been held in several cases, e. g., Nobokishore Surma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (1) and Hem Chunder Sanyal v. Sarnamoyi Debi (2); and the dictum in Bibi Sahodra v. Rai Jang Bahadur (3) would not apply to such a case.

The appeal fails and is dismissed without notice to the other side.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 41 OF 1914.

Present:—Mr. McColl, A. J. C.

U. TILAWKA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

NGA SHWE KAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Buddhist Law—Monk, whether can enter into valid contract.

A Buddhist monk is incapable of entering into a valid contract for his own personal benefit. [p. 614, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a Buddhist monk, sued for redemption:

Held, that he was prohibited by his personal law from buying, selling or mortgaging land and was debarred from suing for redemption. [p. 616, col. 1.]

Mr. A. C. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. San Wa, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant, who, as I have already held, must be taken to be a rahan, sued to redeem some land which he alleged he, another rahan and a woman had jointly mortgaged in 1245. He further alleged that he had inherited a share of the land from his father. The woman (Ma Po) was dead and plaintiff-appellant was the sole plaintiff.

An objection was taken in the written statement that the plaintiff had been a monk for 40 years and that he could, therefore, have no claim to the land. The point was noticed in his judgment by the Township Judge, but it was not adequately dealt with. The Township Judge gave plaintiff a decree for redemption.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the alleged mortgage had not been proved and dismissed the suit.

In this appeal the first question to be decided is whether the suit is not bad ab initio.

In Ma Pwe v. Maung Myat Tha (1) it was held that a Burman, on becoming a Buddhist monk, ceased to have any interest in the property of which he had up to then been the owner. The first Court held that this ruling did not apply, as the plaintiff-appellant was already as monk when he mortgaged the land.

The land in suit is alleged to have descended from the plaintiff-appellant's father, but there is no evidence as to when the latter died. The land is alleged to have been mortgaged by him, redeemed by the plaintiff-appellant and two others and re-mortgaged by them to the defendant-respondent's parents. There is also nothing to show when the plaintiff-appellant became a monk, except the allegation in the written statement that at the time the suit was brought he had been a monk for 40 years, a statement which has not been contradicted. If he became a monk after his father's death then the ruling cited above would apply, and it would be clear that the plaintiff-appellant had no right to redeem the land and that he had no interest which he could mortgage. If, however, at the time of his father's death he was already a monk, the question would arise as to whether a monk can inherit from a layman. This question was raised in Ma Taik v. U Wisenda (2) and was decided in the affirmative, but it is questionable whether that decision was not obiter, because in that case the plaintiff left the priesthood during the trial of the suit and it seems to have been held that that fact removed the legal difficulty.

(1) U. B. R. (1897—1901) II, 54.
(2) II Chan Toon's L. C. 235.

Of course assuming that the plaintiff-appellant has no title, that fact would not necessarily disentitle him to a decree. If the mortgage were proved and it was shown that the defendants-respondents' predecessors were let into possession by him, the defendants-respondents would be estopped from denying his title. But the question is a broader one than a mere question of title or estoppel. The question is whether a Buddhist monk is capable of entering into a vaild contract such as a mortgage not on behalf of the Sangha, but for his personal profit. A further difficulty arises that the mortgage is said to have been effected in 1245 B.E. and consequently the Indian Contract Act is not applicable, and though the Dhammathats show that, as the late Mr. Burgess said, "In mordern times the Burman Buddhist monk's vows of poverty sit lightly on him" and provide rules for the distribution of property acquired by a monk by trade or usury, I have been unable to find anything to show that such contracts would have been given effect to by the Burmese Courts prior to the annexation or that they were recognized as valid by Burmese jurists. The existence of such property could not be ignored and consequently rules were framed for its disposal, and it was provided that it was to be inherited by the monk's lay relatives and not by members of the order, "because it is not property given him by others as a religious gift" (Yazathat, section 409, U Gaung's Digest, Volume I, a passage which clearly indicates that a monk was debarred by the rules of his order from possessing property other than that given as a religious gift, either to him, another monk, a Gana or the Sangha and that the jurists recognized this rule as of force in their legal system). The text from the Kyannet given in section 152 of U Gaung's Digest, Volume II, shows that in the compiler's opinion the ordinary law was subject to the rules of the order, and that though a layman might have a certain legal right, that right could not be enforced by a monk if it was opposed to the rules of the order.

There can be no question at all but that the idea of a Buddhist monk buying and selling or mortgaging land for his own benefit is totally opposed to the rules by which Buddhist monks profess to be governed. In the beginning they were ascetics who gave up the pleasures of the world in order to gain the peace of a soul that had no desires of any kind, and there can be no doubt but that even at the present day they profess to live on charity. That many of them, owing to the piety of laymen as a matter of fact live in greater comfort than they would have done had they not embraced the religious life, in no way affects the question. They are not supposed to ask for anything and I believe this rule is nearly always kept, but on the other hand they cannot ordinarily refuse to accept a gift because to do so would be to deprive the intending donor of merit in the next world.

When a dispute between two monks is referred at the present day to Gaing Gyoks or the Thathanabaing, it is decided as far as possible according to the rules contained in the Vinaya and it seems to me clear that the personal law of Buddhist monks is to be found there and nowhere else, and that it cannot be said to have been modified to any extent by custom, as custom does not form part of the rules of decision adopted by the Ecclesiastical authorities.

The fact that many monks have so far strayed from the rules originally laid down by the Buddha as to trade and buy and sell land, therefore, is no reason for holding that they are subject to the same law of contract as laymen, and I think it is clear that a monk is debarred by the rules of his order from mortgaging property descended from his ancestors, and indeed from owning such property. No doubt the Dhammathats recognize that the flesh is weak and that monks do not always conform to the rules laid down for their guidance, and they, therefore, lay down rules for the succession by lay relatives in such cases, but those rules do not affect the personal law of the monks at all. That their personal law forbids trading and mortgaging land and so on, I think, there can be absolutely no doubt. The late Mr. Burgess in Ma Pwe v. Maung Myat Tha (1) showed clearly enough that on becoming a monk a Buddhist severs himself from the world and forsakes riches to practise poverty, but I would supplement his remarks by citing the following texts :—

"Whatsoever Bhikku shall receive gold or silver or get some one to receive it for him or allow it to be kept in deposit for him—that is a Pakittiya offence involving forfeiture".

"Whatsoever Bhikku shall engage in any one of the various transactions in which silver is used—that is a Pakittiya offence involving forfeiture".

"Whatsoever Bhikku shall engage in any one of the various kinds of buying and selling—that is a Pakittiya offence involving forfeiture" (Patimokkha Nissagiya Pakittiya Dhamma, sections 18, 19 and 20).

Thus a trading transaction was not only an offence requiring expiation, it was void, and the Bhikku was deprived of any profit he might have made. The translators of the Vinaya, Messrs. Rhys Davids and Oldenberg, describe the method of procedure on a breach of these rules. The guilty Bhikku had to give up the gold or silver to the Sangha, and a lay servant of the Bhikkus would either buy ghee or oil with it for the Sangha or would throw it away.

When dying the Buddha said that after his death the Sangha might, if it so wished, revoke all the lesser and minor precepts, and a certain number of Bhikkus wished that certain of the more irksome precepts might be done away with or altered, but a difficulty arose as to what were lesser or minor precepts, and so it was decided at the Council of Ragagaha that none of the precepts should be abolished or altered:

"Then the venerable Maha Kassapa laid a resolution before the Sangha, Let the venerable Sangha hear me. There are certain of our precepts which relate to matters in which the laity are concerned. Now the laity know of us that such and such things are proper for you Samanas who are Sakya-puttiyas and such and such things are not. If we were to revoke the lesser and minor precepts. it will be said to us 'a set of precepts was laid down for his disciples by the Samana Gautama to endure until the smoke should rise from his funeral pyre. So long as their teacher remained with these men, so long did they train themselves in the precepts. Since their teacher has passed away from them, no longer do they now train themselves in the precepts.'"

"If the time seems meet to the Sangha not ordaining what has not been ordained and not revoking what has been ordained, let it take upon itself and ever direct itself in the precepts according as they have been laid down. This is the resolution—whosoever of the venerable ones approves thereof let him keep silence. Whosoever approves not thereof let him speak. The Sangha has taken upon itself the precepts according as they were laid down. Therefore, does it keep silence. Thus do I understand". (Kullavagga Bk. XI., i., 9).

Then again at the Council of Vesali to which was submitted the question whether on ten points the rules laid down for the monkhood should be relaxed, it was decided that they should not. One of these was the rule against accepting gold and silver and another was as to whether a precedent could be taken as an excuse for not conforming to the rules. It was decided before 700 Bhikkus that the rule as to gold and silver should not be relaxed and that a precedent was no excuse for doing what was forbidden. (Kullavagga, XII, 2, 8.)

I am, of course, well aware that many monks in modern times disregard part of the 18th Nissaggiya Pakittiya, and though they do not actually handle gold and silver themselves, accept money through a 'Koppiya' who keeps it for them, but as a precedent is to be no excuse and as such conduct does not appear to have been sanctioned by the Sangha as a whole, it must be held that monks who act thus break the rules of their order and are liable to have the money confiscated to the Sangha.

As showing to what length some monks are willing to go in disregard of their vows, I would mention that at the hearing of this appeal it was stated that some years ago, a Buddhist monk brought a suit in the District Court of Mandalay for restitution of conjugal rights, though sexual intercourse is the first of the four cardinal sins which a monk can commit. It is to be presumed that that monk was refused relief, and it must, I think, be held in the present case that the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to no relief. If the Contract Act had been in force at the time, the alleged mortgage would have been void so far as plaintiff-appellant is concerned under section 23 as defeating the plaintiff's personal law, and although the Contra Act cannot be applied, as the question f decision is one regarding religious usag the Buddhist Law must form the rul decision, and I think it must be held that so far as the plaintiff-appellant is concerned the alleged mortgage was void, just as it would certainly be held that a Buddhist monk could not contract a valid marriage or sue for restitution of conjugal rights so long as he remained in the priesthood.

Further, assuming that the mortgage was valid because Ma Po was one of the mortgagors and that the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to inherit from his father because he became a monk before the latter's death—a point which I am not prepared to admit—he must still be debarred from suing for redemption as one having an interest in the mortgaged property, because a monetary transaction, such as a redemption, is forbidden by his personal law.

No doubt this decision may have very wide consequences, but a Buddhist monk, who has taken vows of poverty and who professes to have abandoned the pleasures of the world, bringing a suit for his own personal profit is not an edifying spectacle, and I do not think such monks have any cause for complaint if their vows are regarded by the Courts in a more serious light than they regard them themselves. I cannot conclude this judgment better than by quoting the late Mr. Burgess:

"But there can be no doubt that such relaxation of ancient austerity has to be confined within reasonable limits, and that it does not extend to the renunciation of the world involved in the formal adoption of the religious life. The service of God and Mammon cannot be combined. To retain the sensual enjoyments of the secular and at the same time to pretend to the sanctity of the sacred life would be to turn the whole thing into a sham and farce, and would be unquestionably offensive to popular sentiment."

I accordingly hold that the plaintiff-appellant cannot succeed in his suit and dismiss the appeal with all costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu Hari Bhusan Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner before us was the judgment-debtor in an execution case, in the Court of the Munsif, in which the decree-holder had attached a holding for sale. He objected to the sale on the ground that the holding was an occupancy holding and, as such, was not saleable. This objection was raised by him on the 3rd November, the sale having been fixed for the 6th. The Munsif held that the application had been filed too late and that the sale, therefore, should not be postponed. At the same time, he directed the application to be put up on the 26th of November for hearing. The holding was sold on the 6th of November, and, on the 26th the application of the petitioner having been put up before the Munsif, he took evidence in the matter and came to the conclusion that the holding was not saleable, and accordingly set aside the sale. On appeal by the decree-holder, the learned District Judge set aside the order of the Munsif dated the 26th November, on the ground that the Munsif could not go into the qustion whether the holding was liable to sale or not, after the sale had already been held. The petitioner thereupon obtained this Rule from this Court calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the order of the District Judge should not be set aside.

We are of opinion that the proceedings of the Munsif in allowing the application to stand over till the 26th November and at the same time holding the sale on the 6th November were wholly irregular. He ought not to have held the sale without making inquiries into the objection raised by the judgment-debtor on the ground that the property was not saleable. The proper procedure ought to have been for the judgment-debtor to appeal against the order refusing to postpone the sale or directing the sale to take place, notwithstanding the pendency of the application in which the question of the saleability of the holding was raised. But before the period for appeal against the order expired, the Munsif took up the application on the 26th November and set aside the sale. So, although the proceedings of the Munsif were irregular, the order ultimately passed by him appears to be right. Under the circumstances, we think that the order of the District Judge should be set aside and that of the Court of first instance dated the 26th November restored.

Order set aside.

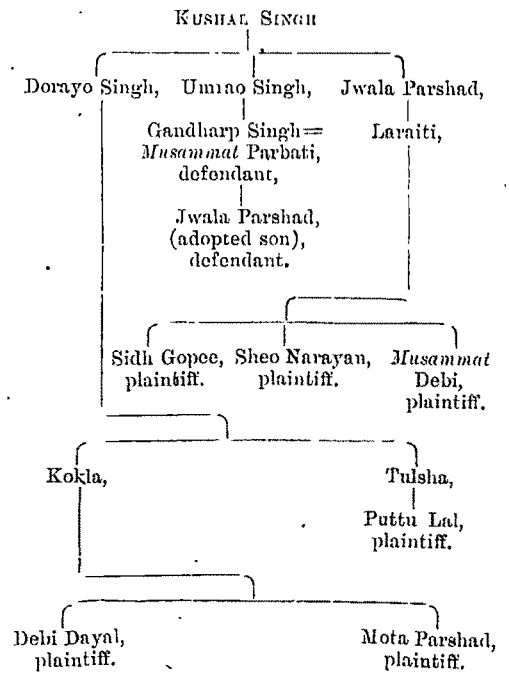
Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Allahabad, dated December 15th, 1909, reversing a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri, dated May 18th, 1908.

FACTS. The following pedigree will show the relationship of the parties in the suit:



Gandharp Singh was a Kulin Brahman He owned considerable zemindari and having no issue of his own wished to adopt to perpetuate his name. With the end in view he took upon himself that education of the boy Jwala Parshad, Parbati's brother's son, and performed the kanchedan (ear-boring) ceremony. While on his death-bed he directed his wife, Parbati, to adopt Jwala Parshad. Soon after his death in January 1899, Parbati applied for mutation of names on the authority given to her. In April 1899 she adopted Jwala Parshad with the necessary rites and ceremonies. In June 1902 she performed the upanayana (ceremony of investiture with the sacred thread) of Jwala Parshad and celebrated his marriage. In June 1907, the plaintiffs-appellants brought the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri, who, in a very elaborate judgment, dissenting from the decision of the High Court in Jai Singh Pal Singh v. Bijai Pal Singh (1), decreed the claim. On appeal to the High Court the judgment of the lower Court was reversed and the decree set aside. The plaintiffs-appellants then obtained leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Lowndes, for the Appellants, contended that Dattaka Mimansa, section II, 26, 33 and 34, laid down that a widow could not adopt her brother's son inasmuch as she could not be married to her own brother. The relationship must be of the nature that the adopter could marry the mother or father of the adoptee. The authority of Dattaka Mimansa was fully recognized by the Privy Council in two decisions of Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshmamma and Radha Mohan v. Hardai Bibi (2) and Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (3). Sir Thomas Strange's book on Hindu Law (6th edition), page 83, Chapter IV, paragraph 2 (on adoption), thought that the point under consideration had never arisen. The estate of the husband remained vested in the widow and she could not alienate without valid necessity. In Musammat Battas Kuar v. Lachman Singh (4) it was held that a woman could not adopt her brother's son and the authority of Nanda Pandita was quoted with approval. Sir F. Macnaughten in Hindu Law, paragraph 67, dealt with the subject at some length and held that a widow could not adopt her brother's son. So did West and Buhler, Volume II, page 1032. Nanda Pandita did not approve of the view that a widow in adopting was acting as agent of her husband. The reason why it was objected to was that the property should remain in the family and adoption by the widow of her brother's son would defeat that end. The decision in Jai Singh Pal Singh v. Bijai Pal Singh (1) was opposed to the text of Dattaka Mimansa. The only authority in favour of the adoption of the a nephew by a widow was Bai Naini v. Chunilal (5).

[LORD ATKINSON:—You contend that a widow can adopt her brother's son to the property of her husband.]

Reference was made to Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshmamma and Radha Mohan v. Hardai Bibi (2); Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (3); Bai Naini v. Chunilal (5); Musammat Battas Kuar v. Lachman Singh (4); Sriramulu v. Ramayya (6) and Jai Singh Pal Singh v. Bijai Pal Singh (1).

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., (with him Mr. Dube), for the Respondents, contended that if the widow adopted, the effect was that she was divested of the property in her possession. The Subordinate Judge had wrongly gone beyond the authority as laid down by the High Court. Dattaka Mimansa, paragraph 15, section 5, did not draw any distinction between adoption by man and woman. The whole test was whether the adoptee could become a son as understood in the Hindu Law. There were many kinds of son known to Hindus. The widow was competent to adopt Jwala Parshad as she was directed to adopt him. The authority given to the widow must be strictly followed and could neither be varied nor extended. If she was directed to adopt a boy, she could not adopt any other even though he should be unattainable. The judgment in Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal (7) was very learned and laid down that a widow in order to adopt must have the authority of her husband. The Subordinate Judge was wrong in going behind it and challenging the law laid down therein.

Reference was made to Dattaka Mimansa, section 5, paragraphs 16 and 15, section 1, paragraph 27; Jolly's History of Law, pages 162 and 163; Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal (7); Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorga Soondary Dossee (8); Mayne's Hindu Law, section 114; Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (9) (wherein are authorities on Hindu Law).

PUTTU LAL v. PARBATI KUNWAR.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, dated the 15 December 1909, which reversed a decree of the Subordiate Judge of Mainpuri, and dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiffs brought their suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri on the 15th June 1907 to have it declared that Jwala Parshad, who is a defendant and one of the respondents, was not the adopted son of one Tiwari Gandharp Singh, deceased, who had been the husband of Musammat Parbati Kunwar, who is the other defendant and respondent. The adoption which is impugned was made by Musammat Parbati Kunwar in March 1899 to her deceased husband, Tiwari Gandharp Singh. who had died on the 9th November 1898 without issue surviving him, and had been a Brahman. Jwala Parshad was the son of a brother of Musammat Parbati Kunwar. The plaintiffs, who claimed as reversioners, denied that Jwala Parshad had been in fact adopted, and alleged that Tiwari Gandharp Singh had not given to Musammat Parbati Kunwar authority to adopt Jwala Parshad to him, and further alleged that Jwala Parshad, being a son of a brother of Musammat Parbati Kunwar, was in law ineligible for adoption by her as a son to her deceased husband.

The Subordinate Judge framed six issues; two only of the issues are now of importance. It was concurrently found by the Courts below that the adoption was in fact made. The two issues which have to be decided in this appeal are as framed by the Subordinate Judge:—

"(4) Did Gandharp Singh give permission to his wife to adopt Jwala Parshad?"

"(6) Is the adoption invalid, inasmuch as the boy is the son of the adoptive mother's brother?"

The authority to adopt Jwala Parshad was alleged to have been given to Musammat Parbati Kunwar by an oral Will of her husband, Tiwari Gandharp Singh, a few days before his death. The Subordinate Judge held that the evidence that the authority to adopt Jwala Parshad had been given was untrustworthy, and found that no authority to adopt Jwala Parshad was proved to have been given.

The High Court on appeal saw no reason whatever for doubting the trustworthiness of the evidence of the witnesses who had deposed to the fact that Tiwari Gandharp Singh had given permission to his wife to adopt Jwala Parshad as a son to him, and after a careful consideration of the evidence and the surrounding circumstances found as a fact that the permission to adopt Jwala Parshad had been given. In their Lordships' opinion the learned Judges of the High Court could have come to no other conclusion unless they had perversely disregarded the evidence and all the probabilities of the case. The direct evidence that the authority to adopt Jwala Parshad had been given by Tiwari Gandharp Singh to his wife was clear, and in their Lordships' opinion was unassailable, and other facts showed that it was probable that such an authority would be given. Tiwari Gandharp Singh was a man well advanced in years; he had been thrice married; he had no surviving issue; there was no sagotra sapinda in his family; he was the last male of the male line; he was a man of some considerable estate and position; and he had taken Jwala Parshad, when a child of four or five years of age, to live in his house with the object of adopting him as his son, should Jwala Parshad prove himself to be a boy worthy of adoption as his son. Their Lordships agree with the finding of the High Court that the authority to adopt Jwala Parshad had been given. That authority was not a general authority to Musammat Parbati Kunwar to adopt a son to Tiwari Gandharp Singh, it was a specific authority to her to adopt Jwala Parshad as the son to her husband.

Their remains to be considered the question of law raised by the sixth issue which had been framed by the Subordinate Judge. The Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri is a Court which is subordinate to the High Court at Allahabad, and the Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri is bound to follow the decision in law of a Bench of the High Court to which he is subordinate, unless the decision of the Bench has been overruled by a decision of a Full Bench of that Court or unless it has been overruled expressly or impliedly on an appeal to His Majesty in Council, or unless the law has been altered by a subsequent Act of the Legislature. As the Subordinate Judge was well aware, it had been decided five years before this suit was instituted by a Bench of the High Court at Allahabad, composed of Sir John Stanley, the then Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Banerji, in Jai Singh Pal Singh v Bijai Pal Singh (1), that an adoption by a Hindu widow, in virtue of an authority to adopt given to her by her deceased husband, of her brother's grandson or son is not, according to Hindu Law, an invalid adoption, as the adoption by the widow is not an adoption to herself but is an adoption to her deceased husband, and that the test of eligibility of the adopted son for adoption in such case must be the test which would have applied had the adoption been made by the husband himself in his life-time.

The Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri, Chhajju Mal, professing disapproval of that decision of the High Court, which he was bound to follow, entered upon a consideration of Sanskrit texts bearing more or less upon the subject, and decid·d that as Musammat Parbati Kunwar could not have married her brother, the father of Jwala Parshad, the adoption of Jwala Parshad was invalid. It is difficult to follow the arguments of the Subordinate Judge, but he does not appear to have kept clearly before his mind that the question in this case was whether a Hindu widow, acting on her husband's authority, could validly adopt as a son to him the son of her brother, and was not the question as to whether a Hindu female could validly adopt to herself a son of her brother. On appeal, Sir John Stanley, C.J., and Banerji, J., applied the decision in Jai Singh Pal Singh v. Bijai Pal Singh (1), which had not been overruled, and accordingly decided that the adoption of Jwala Parshad was a valid adoption, and by their decree dismissed the suit with costs. From that decree of the High Court this appeal has been brought.

The foundation of the decision of the Subordinate Judge on this question of Hindu Law is the commentary of Nanda Pandita, which is known as the "Dattaka Mimansa." The "Dattaka Mimansa" is undoubtedly a high authority on the law of Hindu adoption and is treated with respect. The authority of the "Dattaka Mimansa" was considered by this Board in Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshmamma and Radha Mohan v. Hardai Bibi (2) and Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (3), and the view of this Board was that the "Dattaka Mimansa" is a work which has had a high place in the estimation of Hindu Lawyers in all parts of India and has become embedded in Hindu Law, but that caution is required in accepting the glosses of Nanda Pandita in the "Dattaka Mimansa" where they deviate from or add to the Smritis. It was pointed out by Banerji, J., in Jai Singh Pal Singh v. Bijai Pal Singh (1) on this question, as to whether a widow can lawfully adopt to her deceased husband a son of her own brother, that Nanda Pandita in the "Dattaka Mimansa" extended to adoption by females the rule of Hindu Law that no one can be adopted as a son whose mother the adopter could not have legally married, an extension by Nanda Pandita which is not based upon the authority of any of the Smritis or Institutes of Sages.

As Banerji, J., further pointed out in the same case, the extension of the rule by Nanda Pandita is not supported by any text of the "Dattaka Chandrika," or by any of the texts of the Sages Sannaka and Sakala from which most of the rules of the "Dattaka Mimansa" were deduced. It has not been shown to their Lordships that the extension by Nanda Pandita to which they are referring has been accepted as the law in India, at least so far as adoptions by widows to their deceased husbands are concerned. It is true that in the case of Musammat Battas Kuar v. Lachman Singh (4) Pearson and Spankie, JJ., said: —

"No sufficient reason is shown why the doctrine of Nanda Pandita, that a woman may not affiliate a brother's son, should not be accepted as correct; and why it should not apply to the case of a woman adopting a son with the sanction and on behalf of her husband. Indeed, it does not appear that the Hindu Law contemplates or provides for the adoption by a widow of a son in her own right."

It was not necessary for these learned Judges to express any opinion on the subject, nor is it clear how the case came on appeal to the High Court, as the two Courts below had concurrently found that it was not proved that the husband had given his wife authority to adopt a son.

It is quite clear that Tiwari Gandharp Singh could, in his life-time, have legally adopted Jwala Parshad, the son of his wife's brother, and had he done so the adoption would have been a valid adoption, and their Lordships fail to see any reason why Jwala Parshad, who was legally eligible for adoption by Gandharp Singh, should have become ineligible by reason of the death of Gandharp Singh. It must be remembered that the adoption was not by the widow in her own right and to herself; the adoption was to her deceased husband and under the authority which he had given to her. In Sriramulu v. Ramayya (6), the adoption of a son of a wife's brother was held to be a valid adoption, and it was rightly pointed out that the rule of Hindu Law, that a legal marriage must have been possible between the adopter and the mother of the adopted boy, refers to their relationship prior to marriage. In Bai Naini v. Chunilal (5), it was held that the adoption by a Hindu widow of her brother's son was valid. Their Lordships have not thought it necessary to discuss the texts and authorities which have been referred to, and are relevant to this question, as they have been fully and exhaustively considered by Sir John Stanley, C. J., and Banerji, J., in their judgments in Jai Singh Pal Singh v. Bijai Pal Singh (1).

This appeal fails, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that it should be dismissed. The appellants must pay the costs of the appeal.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, cls. 15, 16—Suit for recovery of balance of mortgage-money, whether maintainable in Small Cause Court—Damages for breach of contract.

A suit by a mortgagor, for the recovery of the balance of the mortgage-money not paid to him, being a suit for the specific performance of so much of an agreement as has not already been performed, does not lie. [p. 622, col. 2.]

Such a suit or a suit for the rectification of the instrument is not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. [p. 622, col. 2.]

It is, however, open in such circumstances to the plaintiff to sue in the Small Cause Court for damages for breach of contract provided the damages are within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. [p. 622, col. 2.]

Reference under rule 1, Order XLVI of the Code of Civil Procedure, by the Munsif, Iswarganj, Mymensingh, exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge, dated the 4th December 1914.

ORDER.—This is a reference by the Munsif of Iswarganj in a suit instituted before him as a Small Cause Court suit.

The plaintiffs allege that out of Rs. 150, the nominal consideration for a mortgage by conditional sale in favour of the defendants, the plaintiffs received only Rs. 104. The suit was brought to recover the balance together with interest and Rs. 11 as compensation. When the case came on for hearing, one of the defendants admitted that the plaintiffs had not received the full amount of the consideration but only Rs. 104.

The questions referred by the Munsif are :—

(1) Whether a mortgagor can sue for the recovery of the balance of the mortgage-money not paid to him.

(2) If so, whether such a suit is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes.

In regard to the first question it, is clear that the claim to which it refers can only be regarded as a claim for the specific performance of so much of an agreement to lend money as has not already been performed. Authority shows that such a claim is not maintainable.

In Rogers v. Challis (1) the defendant agreed to borrow the sum of £1,000 from the plaintiff on certain security. The defendant afterwards obtained better terms from a third person and refused to perform his agreement with the plaintiff. The plaintiff asked for specific performance which was refused. The Master of the Rolls (Sir John Romilly) said:

"It certainly is new to me, that this Court has ever entertained jurisdiction in a case where the only personal obligation created is that one person says, if you will lend me the money I will re-pay it and give you good security, and the terms are settled between them. The Court has said that the reason for compelling a specific performance of a contract is because the remedy at law is inadequate or defective. But by what possibility can it be said that the remedy here is inadequate or defective? It is a simple money demand; the plaintiff says, I have sustained pecuniary loss by my money remaining idle, and by my not getting so good an investment for it as you contracted to give me. This is a mere matter of calculation and a Jury would easily assess the amount of the damage which the plaintiff has sustained. I express no opinion whether an action (that is, an action for damages) would or would not lie....."

In that case an attempt was made to compel a man to borrow money. In Sichel v. Mosenthal (2) an attempt, conversely, to compel a man to lend money was equally unsuccessful. The same learned Judge said:—

"It would be quite new to me to hear that this Court could specifically enforce a contract to lend money, and as to compelling a person to borrow money according to his agreement, that was the point which I decided in Rogers v. Challis (1)." He went on to suggest that the proper remedy was an action for damages.

These cases were cited and approved by the Privy Council in Larios v. Gurety (3), where the agreement which it was sought to enforce took the form of a conditional sale.

Their Lordships said:

"The parties throughout the negotiation which led up to the contract were stipulating for advances of money on one side, and security for those advances on the other; the pleadings state and admit an agreement of that nature; and it seems impossible to treat the cause of action in this case as anything more than the breach of a contract to honour the drafts of the respondent to the extent of the amount agreed to be advanced, and placed to his credit. And, upon a full consideration of the arguments and authorities, their Lordships are constraine to admit that the Court of Chancery would not have entertained a suit for the specific performance of such an agreement, but would have left the party aggrieved by the breach of it to seek his remedy, where he would find an adequate remedy, in a Court of Law."

The case of the South African Territories v. Wallington (4) in the House of Lords is to the same effect.

Upon the principle so exemplified it is clear that the present suit, regarded as a suit for specific performance of the contract between the parties, does not lie. Nor would such a suit or a suit for the rectification of the instrument be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes (Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, Schedule II, clauses 15 and 16). Both the questions referred must, therefore, be answered in the negative.

On the other hand, it is open to the plaintiff to sue in the Small Cause Court for damages for the breach of contract, provided the damages claimed are within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court.

If the plaintiff is prepared to confine himself to a claim for damages within the jurisdiction of the Court to award, he may be given an opportunity to make the necessary amendments in his plaint and the suit may then be proceeded with. Otherwise the plaint should be returned to him.

Lala AMBIKA PERSHAD—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73, O. XXI, rr. 52, 63, O. XXXVIII, rr. 5, 10—Attachment before judgment, effect of—Decree-holder, if obtains priority—Other creditors, right of—Declaratory suit, whether maintainable.

BISHESHAR DAS v. AMBIKA PERSHAD.

An attachment before judgment confers no right on the party who obtains the order of attachment. [p. 623, col. 2.]

Certain property of a perishable nature was attached before judgment by the defendant and the property was sold and the proceeds deposited in Court. The plaintiffs also obtained a decree against the same party and applied for execution by attachment of the money in Court and obtained an order of payment. On the defendant taking objection, the order was cancelled. The plaintiffs then sued for a declaration that they were entitled to the amount of their decree out of the proceeds deposited in Court:

Held, (1) that the priority of attachment gave no priority of title to the defendants who could not, therefore, object to the money being paid to the plaintiffs; [p. 624, col. 2.]

(2) that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit. [p. 624, col. 1; p. 625, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad, dated the 21st February 1914.

Mr. Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Haribans Sahai and Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs sought a declaration that they were entitled to Rs. 627-9-6 out of a sum which had been deposited in Court. The facts are as follows. Ambika Pershad brought a suit against Mahbub and others. Before judgment he attached property which belonged to Mahbub, under the provisions of Order XXXVIII of the Code of Civil Procedure. The property being of a perishable nature, it was sold and the proceeds were lodged in Court on the 29th of March 1911. It is out of this sum that the plaintiffs seek to be paid the amount of a decree. The plaintiffs obtained their decree on the 12th of September 1911. They made an application for execution by "attachment" of the money in Court on the 10th of January 1912. The Court made an order on the 21st of February 1912, in which it is stated that the property having been attached the money should be paid to the decree-holders upon application. An application for payment was made on the 23rd of February 1912. On the 26th of February 1912, Ambika made an objection to the money being paid to the decree-holders on the ground that he had attached it before judgment. The Court on this objection refused to allow the money to be paid out to the decree-holders, who are the plaintiffs in the present case. Ambika got his decree on the 10th of April 1912. It seems to me that we have to consider, what were the rights of the decree-holders on the 23rd of February 1912, that is to say, were they entitled by law to have their decree satisfied out of the money deposited in Court? If they were, they are entitled to a decree in the present suit provided that their remedy lay by suit. Order XXXVIII, rule 5, provides for attachment before judgment. Property can only be attached before judgment upon the Court being satisfied that the defendant, with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be given against him, is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property, or that he is about to remove the whole or part of his property from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court. It seems to me absolutely clear that as it is only to prevent one or other or both of these things that attachment before judgment is allowed, such attachment confers no right in the property on the plaintiff who obtains the order. Everything remains as before the attachment, save that it has been taken out of the power of the defendant to dispose of the property attached or remove it out of the jurisdiction. If there was the least doubt about the matter, it is set at rest by the provisions of Order XXXVIII, rule 10, which is as follows:—"Attachment before judgment shall not affect the rights, existing prior to the attachment, of persons not parties to the suit, nor bar any person holding a decree against the defendant from applying for the sale of the property under attachment in execution of such decree." Supposing, therefore, that the property had not been of a perishable nature but had been simply attached before judgment, the plaintiffs would have been entitled to have attached the property, had it sold and obtained payment under their decree. Ambika would have had no right of any sort to object to the decree of the plaintiffs being discharged. Some attempt has been made to contend that the fact that the property has been turned into money altered the circumstances. I think that this is a most unreasonable contention. In my opinion the money, which represented the property which had been attached before judgment, is to be treated in exactly the same way as the property would have been, with this difference only that of course there is no sale. Under these circumstances it seems to me that the plaintiffs were clearly entitled on the 32rd of February 1912 to have had their decree satisfied out of the money deposited in Court.

It is next argued that the dispute between the plaintiffs and Ambika had to be decided by the Court in which the money was deposited and that no suit lay. Order XXI, rule 52, provides that "where property which has been attached is in the custody of the Court, any question of title or priority arising between the decree-holder and any other person not being the judgment-debtor, claiming to be interested in such property by virtue of any assignment, attachment or otherwise, shall be determined by such Court." Order XXXVIII, rule 8, provides that "where any claim is preferred to property attached before judgment, such claim shall be investigated in the manner hereinbefore provided for the investigation of claims to property attached in execution of a decree for the payment of money." Order XXI, rule 63, provides "where a claim or an objection is preferred the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." It seems to me that the effect of Order XXXVIII, rule 8, is to incorporate the provisions of Order XXI, and amongst them the provisions of rule 63. The Court accordingly having investigated the claim of the decree-holders, the plaintiffs in the present suit, and made an order against them, the effect of which was that they were not allowed to receive payment of their decree, they are entitled to institute a suit. I hold, therefore, that the present suit is maintainable. I would allow the appeal and decree the plaintiffs' claim.

BANERJI, J.—I have arrived at the same conclusion. The first question to be determined is, whether the Court below was justified in ordering a rateable distribution. It is clear from the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure that priority of attachment gives no priority of title. Order XXXVIII, rule 10, clearly provides that where property has been attached before judgment, that circumstance does not preclude any other judgment-creditor of the judgment-debtor from attaching the same property and proceeding to the sale of it. It is obvious from the provisions of that rule that notwithstanding an attachment before judgment, any other creditor, who has obtained a decree, may proceed to execution and cause the property attached to be sold. The effect of the attachment before judgment is only to prevent the debtor from dealing with the property, but the property still continues to be his. Therefore, the plaintiffs in the present case were entitled to attach the money which was in Court, being the proceeds of the sale of the property attached before judgment. As the Court made an order on the 23rd of February 1912, directing the money attached to be paid over to the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs were entitled to receive that money and the Court or the defendant Ambika Prasad could not deprive them of their right to get the money. Had Ambika Prasad already obtained a decree on the date on which the money was ordered to be paid to the plaintiffs and had he applied for execution, different equities might arise. It may be that when several decree-holders have caused the same property to be attached, but to whose case section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not strictly apply, they would be entitled to a rateable distribution on general principles of justice, equity and good conscience But that is not the case here. It is not necessary, therefore, to express any opinion on the point. In the present case, as I have said above, Ambika Prasad had not obtained his decree when the Court ordered the money in deposit, attached by the plaintiffs, to be paid over to them. Had the property not been of a perishable nature, and had it not been already sold, the plaintiffs would have been entitled to get it sold, and after the sale to have their decree satisfied out of the proceeds of the sale, and there is nothing in the Code to prevent their doing so merely because Ambika Prasad had caused the same property to be attached before judgment. He had not obtained a decree and had not applied for execution. Section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not apply to a case of this kind, because this was not a case in which several decree-holders had before the realisation of assets applied for execution of their decrees.

There remains the other question as to whether such a suit is maintainable. As has been pointed out by the learned Chief Justice rule 52 and the subsequent rules in Order XXI are, by reason of the provisions of Order XXXVIII, rule 8, applicable to cases of attachment before judgment. Under rule 52 of Order XXI the Court which holds the property is the Court which must decide all claims made in respect of it, whether arising from assignment or attachment or otherwise. The mode of investigation is provided for by rule 58 and the subsequent rules, but in all cases when an order is made, the defeated party is entitled to bring a suit to establish his right under rule 63. The language of that rule differs from that of section 283 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. Under that section a party was allowed to bring a suit when an order had been passed against him under sections 280, 281 and 282. There is no such limitation in Order LXIII and this alteration appears to have been deliberately made by the Legislature to include all cases of orders of this kind passed under Order XXI, including orders under rule 52. I find that under the old Code of Civil Procedure, it was held that where an order was made under section 272, which corresponds to the present rule 52, a suit would lie to set aside the order [Tikum Singh v. Sheo Ram Singh (1).] The present suit was, in my opinion, clearly maintainable. I also would allow the appeal.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal be allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all Courts, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 23, 65—Contract to appoint any one to public office—Suit for recovery of money paid thereunder, whether maintainable—Contract void ab initio.

Contracts which have for their object the influencing of appointments to public offices and the restricting of the discretion vested in public officers in the selection of persons are illegal and void. [p. 626, col. 1.]

A Court will not assist a party who has entered into a contract tainted by moral turpitude. [p. 628, col. 1.]

Where a contract is illegal because contrary to positive law or against public policy, an action cannot be maintained to enforce it directly or to recover the value of services rendered under it or money paid on it. [p. 627, col. 2.]

Section 65 of the Contract Act relates to the obligation of a person who has received an advantage under an agreement which is discovered to be void or under a contract which becomes void but not where the agreement is void ab initio. [p. 628, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside a decree of dismissal in a suit for recovery of money on the basis of a contract. The defendant is the Nazir of the Court of the District Judge of Barisal. The case for the plaintiff is that there was a contract between him and the defendant that if the latter provided his son with the post of a permanent peon within two years, the plaintiff would give the defendant Rs. 150, and that if the defendant failed to secure the appointment, he would return the money paid by the plaintiff. The plaintiff asserts that, in accordance with the terms of the contract, he has from time to time paid the defendant several sums aggregating Rs. 100, and that the defendant has failed to provide his son with the appointment, though the two years have elapsed. The plaintiff consequently sues to recover the money. The defendant denied the truth of the allegations of the plaintiff, and also pleaded that the suit was not maintainable as it was based on an illegal and void contract. The Court below has not investigated the facts, but has dismissed the suit as not maintainable on the face of the allegations contained in the plaint. The question for determination is, whether the agreement was void as its object was opposed to public policy within the meaning of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act.

It is well settled that contracts which have for their object the influencing of appointments to public offices and the restricting of the discretion vested in public officers in the selection of persons to be appointed, are illegal and void. The principle is that an officer, who has the power of appointment, should make the best appointment possible, and it is contrary to public policy that such officer be deprived of this discretionary power by a contract previously made or an obligation previously assumed; in other words, public policy forbids that a public office be made the subject of contracts; for the contrary view would inevitably tend to official corruption. Illustrations of this doctrine will be found in cases of high authority: Blachford v. Preston (1); Hartwell v. Hartwell (2); Thomson v. Thomson (3); Card v. Hope (4); Hopkins v. Preskott (5); Reg. v. Charrette (6); Parsons v. Thompson (7); Richardson v. Mellish (8); Gardner v. Grant (9), which all affirm the rule that the sale of a recommendation, nomination or influence in procuring a public office is illegal and void. The question has frequently come up for judicial consideration in the Courts of the United States, which have emphatically condemned contracts of this nature. Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Providence Tool Company v. Norris (10), observed as follows: "These offices are trusts, held solely for the public good, and should be conferred from considerations of the ability, integrity, fidelity and fitness for the position of the appointee. No other considerations can properly be regarded by the appointing power. Whatever introduces other elements to control this power, must necessarily lower the character of the appointments, to the great detriment of the public. Agreements for compensation for procuring these appointments tend directly and necessarily to introduce such elements. The law, therefore, from this tendency alone adjudges these agreements inconsistent with sound morals and public policy: Gray v. Hooke (11). Other agreements of an analogous character might be mentioned, which the Courts, for the same or similar reasons, refuse to uphold. It is unnecessary to state them particularly, it is sufficient to observe generally, that all agreements for pecuniary considerations to control the business operations of the Government, or the regular administration of justice, or the appointments to public offices, or the ordinary course of legislation, are void as against public policy, without reference to the question whether improper means are contemplated or used in their execution. The law looks to the general tendency of such agreements: and it closes the door to temptation by refusing them recognition in any of the Courts of the country." Equally explicit is the condemnation of such contracts by Mr. Justice Swayne in Meguire v. Corwine (12): "Frauds of the class to which the one here disclosed belongs are an unmixed evil. Whether forbidden by a Statute or condemned by public policy, the result is the same. No legal right can spring from such a source. They are the sappers and miners of the public welfare and of free government as well. The latter depends for its vitality upon the virtue and good faith of those for whom it exists and of those by whom it is administered; corruption is always the forerunner of despotism." To the same effect are the decisions in Marshall v. Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company (13); Hall v. Coppell (14) and Trist

v. Child (15). But it is needless to multiply authorities on the subject of trafficking in offices, which will be found collected in Greenhood on Public Policy, pages 338-349. Our attention, however, has been drawn to the decision in Pichakutty Mudali v. Narayanappa Aiyan (16). There the defendant had agreed, in consideration of a sum of money received by him, to obtain a more favourable assessment upon certain villages in respect of waste and cultivable lands, and in case of failure to re-pay the amount received. In a suit to recover the amount paid to the defendant, Scotland, C. J., and Frere, J., held that the contract was not vitiated by illegality. The reason assigned in support of this view was that there was nothing to show an understanding between the parties that the defendant was to have recourse to corrupt or illegal means of any kind, or that he would use personal influence which he professed to possess with any public servant. The case was thus treated as one where the defendant undertook the task of preparing and presenting before the Revenue Authorities the case of the tenants and made his claim to remuneration contingent upon his success. The case is, consequently, distinguishable, though we are by no means convinced that the decision is based on sound principles. We affirm without hesitation the rule that any contract to appoint one to a public office or involving the sale of a public office or securing an office for the promisor or recommending him for such office, is opposed to public policy and is consequently void. It is plain, therefore, that the contract, which is the foundation of this suit, is based on an unlawful consideration, is opposed to public policy and is void. It follows that under such circumstances when the illegality of the contract has been made to appear, the law will not extend its aid to either of the parties, who will be left to abide the consequences of their own acts. We are not unmindful that there are exceptions to the general rule that money paid or personal property transferred in accordance with the terms of an illegal contract cannot be recovered, notwithstanding the other party refuses to affirm his part of the agreement. It is plain that although where money has been paid under an unlawful agreement, but nothing else done in performance of it, the money may be recovered back, yet this exception will not be allowed if the agreement is actually criminal or immoral; where the contract is illegal, because contrary to positive law or against public policy, an action cannot be maintained to enforce it directly or to recover the value of services rendered under it or money paid on it. Lord Alvanley, C. J., observed in Tappenden v. Randall (17) that where there is moral turpitude in the contract, the Court will not allow the party who has advanced money on such a contract to recover it back. In the case before us, the substance of the matter is that the plaintiff, if his allegation is true, offered a bribe to the defendant to secure an appointment for his son and made part payments which were accepted by the latter. The parties are clearly in pari delicto and the Court will not assist either of them. In Collins v. Blantern (18) where money had been paid for the purpose of stifling a prosecution for prejury, Wilmot, C. J., said: "Whoever is a party to an unlawful contract, if he hath once paid the money stipulated to be paid in pursuance thereof, he shall not have the help of the Court to fetch it back again." To the same effect is the observation of Kenyon, C. J., in Howson v. Hancock(19), where money deposited upon an illegal wager had been paid over to the winner by the consent of the loser: "there is no case to be found where, when money has been actually paid by one of two parties to the other upon an illegal contract, both being participes criminis, an action has been maintained to recover it back again." The same principle is illustrated in Taylor v. Chester (20), where the consideration was immoral, and in Kearley v. Thomson (21), where the defendants were in substance bribed not to appear at the public examination of a bankrupt [see also Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co. Ltd. (22)]. The principle has been applied in this country in a case where money had been paid to a married woman to enable her to obtain a divorce and marry the plaintiff: Bai Vijli v. Nansa Nagar (23). The cases mentioned at the Bar related to marriage brokage contracts which, as is clear from the decisions in Bakshi Das v. Nadu Das (24) and Gulabchand v. Fulbai Harichand (25), stand on a special footing of their own and have no analogy to the case before us. The principle that the Court will not assist a party who has entered into a contract tainted by moral turpitude, should be strictly applied in the circumstances of the case now before the Court. If the Court were to assist the plaintiff to recover his money, bribery and corruption would be encouraged; every person in the position of the plaintiff will be tempted to say, "let me offer a bribe to get an appointment for my son, for I can do so with impunity and without risk of loss; if he secures the appointment, the end is achieved, if he does not, I can sue to recover back my money." No Court of Justice will tolerate such a position.

We may add that in the course of argument, reliance was to some extent placed on section 65 of the Indian Contract Act, but that section is of no real assistance to the plaintiff, as it relates to the obligation of a person who has received an advantage under an agreement which is discovered to be void or under a contract which becomes void. The case before us is, however, not that of an agreement "discovered" to be or "becoming" void. The agreement is void on the face of it, and it was void ab initio, while the words of the section can only be aptly applied in such cases as that of an agreement which is subsequently found to be void on account of some latent defect or of circumstances unknown at the date of the agreement, or of an agreement which is afterwards made void by circumstances which supervene.

The result is that the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge is affirmed and this Rule discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Mirza YAWAR BEG—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 15, 16—Contract to sell whole house—Vendor possessing only half share—Specific performance.

The defendant No. 1 on behalf of himself and as agent of the defendant No. 2 agreed to sell a house, in which each of the two defendants had one-half share, to the plaintiff. Defendant No. 1 had no authority to sell the half share of defendant No. 2. The plaintiff sued for specific performance of the contract:

Held, that the plaintiff was only entitled to a decree for specific performance for half the house on condition of paying the full price agreed upon for the entire house. [p. 629, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Benares, dated the 14th January 1914.

Messrs. M. L. Agarwala and W. Wallach, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell a house. The house belonged to Sheikh Muhammad Ali and Sheikh Muksud Ali, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It is alleged that the defendant No. 1 on behalf of himself and as agent of defendant No. 2 agreed to sell the house to the plaintiff, that then in breach of the agreement the house was sold to defendant No. 3, the sale being taken fictitiously in the name of his wife, defendant No. 4.

The Court below has found that the contract was entered into but that defendant No. 1 had no authority to sell his brother's share of the house. The Court accordingly made a decree for specific performance in respect of the half of the house which belonged to defendant No. 1, at half the price agreed upon.

In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the defendants that the Court ought not to have decreed specific performance of half the house. Section 15 of the Specific Relief Act is relied upon, and it is contended that the plaintiff was only entitled to a decree for specific performance for half the house on condition of paying the full price agreed upon for the entire house. On the other hand, the plaintiff relies on the provisions of section 16. The Court below considered that this section applied. The section is as follows: "When a part of a contract which, taken by itself, can and ought to be specifically performed, stands on a separate and independent footing from another part of the same contract which cannot or ought not to be specifically performed, the Court may direct specific performance of the former part."

It must be remembered that the contract as proved was a contract to sell the whole house for one lump sum as consideration. It can hardly be said that the contract consisted of "two parts, each standing on a separate and independent footing from the other," one part being to sell the share of defendant No. 1 and the other part to sell the share of defendant No. 2. This is illustrated by supposing for a moment that the suit had been by the defendant No. 1, against the plaintiff for specific performance of a contract to buy half the house. It seems quite clear that Mirza Yawar Beg could have pleaded that his contract was a contract to buy the whole house, and not half and that no Court would have forced him to take half the house In our judgment the decision of the Court below was wrong. As, however, in the course of the hearing the plaintiff has expressed his willingness to pay the full price, we think that he ought to have half the house on these terms.

We accordingly vary the decree of the Court below by giving the plaintiff a decree for specific performance for sale of half the house (the share of defendant No. 1) conditional upon his paying the entire price. The plaintiff will have his costs from the defendants other than the defendant No. 2. He will be entitled to set off his costs against the amount paid by him into Court. We allow him two months to pay the money into Court, but we direct that in the event of the money not being so paid within that time the suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Decree varied.

BIDYA PROSAD SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

BHUPNARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law (Mitakshara)—Mortgage by father—Debt neither antecendent nor for family purposes, nor immoral—Suit against sons—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 120, 132.

The decision of the Full Bench in the case of Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry, 5 C. 855; 6 C. L. R. 473; 3 Shome L. R. 143, has not been overruled by the Privy Council, nor has it been superseded by subsequent legislation, inasmuch as, where the mortgage is not operative as such against the sons, no question can arise as to the effect of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act (now re-placed by rule 1 of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908). [p. 632, col. 2.]

A suit upon a mortgage effected by a father governed by the Mitakshara Law for a debt which is neither antecedent nor for family purposes and not proved to be immoral, brought after the death of the father against the sons, some of whom were adult and some minors, at the time of the mortgage, is governed by Article 120 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, and not by Article 132, as there is no charge on immoveble property enforcible against the sons. [p. 633, col. 1.]

Reference to the Full Bench made by Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee and Mr. Justice Walmsley, two of the Judges of this Court, on the 31st of August 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the following Order of Reference:—

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—These two appeals arise out of one suit on two mortgage-bonds executed by a father, who was the karta of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law and consisting of himself and his sons, adult and minor. In both these documents he mortgaged what he called "all my rights" in certain mouzahs in which he and his sons jointly owned 2-annas 8-pie share, and in respect of which he was registered in the Collectorate as the owner of 5-annas 4-pie share (including the half share of his brother). The bonds were dated one in September 1901, and one in October 1901. The suits were brought on the 12th of August 1910. The mortgagee died in Aughran 1313—November 1905, and Hardeo Singh, the original mortgagor, died about eight years before suit (according to the defendants), i.e., about 1902.

The main questions in the case, so far as the appeals are concerned, are (1) whether the mortgagor mortgaged the whole share belonging to himself and his sons, or only his individual share as a member of the joint family; (2) whether the claim or any portion of the same is barred by limitation.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the mortgage was in respect of the individual share of the mortgagor and the suit was barred so far as it affected the shares of the sons.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge, who agreed with the first Court as to the construction of the bond of September 1901, but as to the bond of October 1901, held that the mortgagor intended to mortgage the whole share belonging to himself and his sons. It is not quite clear whether the defendants pressed their plea of limitation before him, but he evidently agreed with the first Court on this point.

There are two appeals before us, one by the plaintiff which is numbered 769 of 1912. This appeal is confined at the hearing to a claim to hold the entire 2 annas 8 pies liable under both the bonds, the other, which is by the defendants and numbered 617 of 1912, is on the plea mainly that the claim against the shares of the sons was barred.

As regards the construction of the two bonds, I am unable to find any real difference between the terms of the two documents. The words "Hakiat milkiat dakhli khud" (=right and property which is my own) in the first document have been paraphrased in the second into "Jo is wakt tak bila mosharakat ahde or bemodakhalat digre bakabz-dakhal mon mokir rahta chala aya hai" (=which up to this time has been in my possession without any other person holding possession or share therein). If the mortgagor had been mortgaging his own individual share in the family property, he would have described the same as his hissa or share. I think the most reasonable construction would be to hold that he was mortgaging that of which he was in possession as the head of his own family, consisting of himself and his sons. The other construction would make the mortgage null and void as an alienation of an undivided share in a Mitakshara joint family estate, and it is not reasonable to hold that the mortgagor gave and the mortgagee took what could not be given and taken under the law.

On the second point, that of limitation, it has been contended that there is a considerable divergence of judicial opinion on the matter and there should be a reference to the Full Bench. In the case of Surja Prasad v Golab Chand (1) Ghose and Harington, JJ., held, on the authority of the Full Bench case of Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2), that when a Mitakshara father executes a mortgage for a debt which is neither antecedent nor immoral, the mortgage is not binding on the son, and a suit brought against the son after the death of the father more than six years after the due date, must be dismissed as barred by limitation. This case was dissented from by Brett and Sharfuddin, JJ., in the case of Maheshwar Dutt Tewari v. Kishen Singh (3), the learned Judges holding that the Full Bench case had been virtually overruled by the Privy Council in the cases of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4) and Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (5). Then in the case of Kishun Pershad Chowdhry v. Tipan Pershad Singh (6) Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ, dissented from the case of Maheshwar Dult Tewari v. Kishen Singh(3) and refrained from making a reference to the Full Bench only because that was a case in which the suit had been brought within six years from the due date. This divergence of opinion came under judicial discussion in two recent cases. In the case of Bissonath Prosad Malita v Brindesri Prosad Singh (7) Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and N. R. Chatterjea, J., held that the law as laid down by the Full Bench in the case of Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2) had been practically altered by the provisions of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the later provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, which were substituted for the same. In the subsequent case of Sheo Narain Roy v. Mokshoda Das Mitra (8) Coxe and N. R. Chatterjea, JJ, followed the above case. In the first of the latter two cases, however, the suit was brought in the life-time of the mortgaging father, and in the second also some of the mortgagors were parties. These cases are, therefore, distinguishable from the present case, in which the suit was brought more than six years after the death of the father and more than six years after the accrual of the cause of action. The debts are not antecedent debts, they are not proved to have been taken for the purpose of the family or spent for the benefit of the same, nor are they proved to be immoral. The father could not, therefore, make a valid mortgage of the interests of his sons. This can be fairly deduced from Girdaree Lall v. Kantoo Lall, Muddun Thakoor v. Kantoo Lall (9) and Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (10). Then followed the Full Bench case in which the previous decisions of the Privy Council were discussed. Then came the cases of Gunga Prosad v. Ajudhia Pershad Singh (11); Khalilul Rahman v. Gobind Pershad (12) and Surja Prasad v. Golab Chand (1), and these latter two cases were, after the Privy Council cases, relied on in Maheshwar Dutt's case (3) as having overruled the Full Bench. With great respect for the learned Judges, I do not see how the particular phase of the law laid down by the Full Bench was overruled by the cases of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4) and Bhagbat Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (5). The only other way in which the Full Bench is said to have been superseded is the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, subsequent to it: with great respect for the learned Judges who hold the latter opinion, I cannot persuade myself to believe that the Legislature intended to alter any provision of Hindu Law by section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, or the section of the Civil Procedure Code which now stands in its place. These are mere matters of procedure and could not have been intended to take away any vested rights. In any case the Full Bench made an effort to save the Mitakshara doctrine of equal rights of the father and the son from utter annihilation and was accepted as good law by a number of very learned Judges for a number of years; it is the last hope of the Mitakshara son and keeps up the last vestige of Vijnaneswara's cherished doctrine of equal rights, and I do not feel myself justified in holding that it has been taken away by implication, either by the Privy Council or by the Legislature, until there is an express and authoritative decision to that effect.

In view of the conflict of judicial opinion above referred to, I would refer the following questions to the Full Bench:

1. Whether the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2) has been overruled by the Privy Council or superseded by subsequent legislation?

2. Whether a suit upon a mortgage effected by a father governed by the Mitakshara law for a debt which is neither antecedent nor for family purposes and not proved to be immoral, brought after the death of the father against the sons some of whom were adult and some minors at the time of the mortgage, is governed by the 12 years' rule of limitation under Article 132 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, so far as it claims to affect the shares of the sons?

WALMSLEY J.—I agree that there is such divergence of opinion expressed in the cases quoted that a reference is necessary.

BY THE COURT—Both the cases will be referred to the Full Bench.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

The questions referred for decision to a Full Bench have been framed in these terms:

(1) Whether the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Luchmun Dass v.

(8) 19 Ind. Cas. 878; 17 C. W. N. 1022.
(9) 14 B. L. R. 187; 22 W. R. 56; 1 I. A. 321.
(10) 5 C. 148 at p. 171; 6 I. A. 88; 4 C. L. R. 226; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 1; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 589; 2 Shome L. R. 242.
(12) 20 C. 328.

Giridhur Chowdhry (2) has been overruled by the Privy Council or superseded by subsequent legislation.

(2) Whether a suit upon a mortgage effected by a father governed by the Mitakshara Law for a debt which is neither antecedent nor for family purposes and not proved to be immoral, brought after the death of the father against the sons, some of whom were adult and some minors at the time of the mortgage, is governed by the twelve years' rule of limitation under Article 132 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, so far as it claims to affect the shares of the sons.

We have been invited by the plaintiffs-respondents to answer the first branch of the first question in the affirmative; they rely upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4) and Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (5) in support of their contention. The Rules of the Court (Chapter V, section 6) ordain that every decision of a Full Bench shall be treated as binding on all Division Courts and Judges sitting singly, upon any point of law or usage having the force of law, determined by the Full Bench, unless it is subsequently reversed by a Bench specially constituted consisting of such number of Judges as in each case shall have been fixed by the High Court or unless a contrary rule be laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The decision in Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2) has not yet been reversed by a Special Bench. A Special Bench was constituted in the case of Balaram v. Mangta Das (13) to consider the question; but the reference was disposed of on a preliminary ground. The only question, then, is, whether a contrary rule has been laid down by the Judicial Committee. The two cases mentioned do not expressly lay down any contrary rule; they do not even mention the Full Bench decision, which was not cited in argument before the Judicial Committee. It is said, however, that if the principles recognised in the two decisions of the Judicial Committee are logically developed, a result is reached which is contrary to the decision of the Full Bench. But it is important to observe that the decision of the Full Bench in Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (2) was based upon an interpretation of the earlier decisions of the Judicial Committee in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, Muddun Thakoor v. Kantoo Lall (9) and Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh(10). The two later decisions of the Judicial Committee in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4) and Bhagbut Persad Singh v. Girja Koer (5), so far as the question now before us is concerned, do not extend, though they possibly elucidate, the rule enunciated in the earlier Privy Council decisions interpreted by the Full Bench. The decisions by the Judicial Committee on the subject have in a large measure affected the strict doctrines of the Mitakshara Law, and the question now before us is essentially, to quote the language of Sir James Colvill in Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ram Chandra Dada Naik (14), "not so much whether an admitted principle of Hindu Law shall be carried out to its apparently logical consequences, as what are the limits of an exceptional doctrine established by modern jurisprudence." It is plain that the Full Bench decision is still binding on this Court, as no contrary rule has yet been laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

We have next been invited by the plaintiffs-respondents to answer the second branch of the first question in the affirmative, on the ground that the Full Bench decision was superseded by section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act (now replaced by rule 1 of Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908). In support of this contention, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Bisonath Prosad Malita v. Brindesri Prosad Singh (7) and Sheo Narain v. Mokshoda Das Mitra (8); the former of which was based on Lala Suraj Prosad v. Golab Chand (15). But where in accordance with the ruling of the Full Bench in Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur (2), the mortgage is not operative as such against the sons, no question can arise as to the effect of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act. The suit may have been framed as one to enforce the mortgage against the sons; but, if as laid down by the Full Bench, the mortgage as such is not enforceable against them, it is plain that section 85 cannot touch the question. Consequently the decision of the Full Bench has not been superseded by subsequent legislation.

(15) 28 C. 57; 5 C. W. N. 640.

The first question, in each of its two branches, must be answered in the negative.

As regards the second question, it follows that Article 132 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act has no application, as there is no charge on immoveable property enforceable against the sons. Consequently, Article 120 governs the case. The plaintiffs are thus entitled to sue within six years from the date when the right to sue accrues. Three alternatives have been suggested for this date: first, the date when the debt incurred by the father matures; secondly, the date when the creditor, after exhausting his remedies against the father, finds that the debt or a portion thereof is still unsatisfied; and thirdly, the date of the death of the father. The first of these dates was accepted as the starting point in Surja Prasad v. Golab Chand (1); but the question does not require decision in the present case, as more than six years have elapsed from each of the three possible points of time mentioned. While, therefore, we hold that Article 120 applies to cases of the description mentioned in the second question, we do not decide when the right to sue accrues for the purposes of that Article. The second question is answered in the negative and the rule of limitation applicable is held to be that embodied in Article 120.

The result of this view is that Appeal No. 617 of 1912 will be allowed with costs both here and before the Division Bench; the suit will stand dismissed as against the appellants in respect of the bond of the 27th October 1901, to which alone the appeal relates. The other Appeal, No. 769 of 1912, will stand dismissed with costs, here and before the Division Bench. Each party will pay his own costs in both the Courts below. A self-contained decree giving effect to these directions will be drawn up in this Court in supersession of the decree of the Court below.

Appeal No 617 allowed;
Appeal No. 769 dismissed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 197—Suit triable by Revenue Court—Appeal—Transfer of appeal by District Judge to Subordinate Judge—Subordinate Judge, whether can pass order of remand.

Where a District Judge transfers an appeal to a Subordinate Judge the latter may exercise all the powers vested in an Appellate Court by section 197 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Babu Nandan Prasad v. Changur, 16 A. 363 (F. B.); A. W. N. (1894) 113, followed.

First appeal from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 15th of April 1914.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Maulvi Shafiuzzaman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, setting aside a decree passed by the Munsif of Bulandshahr and remanding the suit to the Munsif's Court to be disposed of according to law. The Munsif had held that the suit was not cognizable by a Civil Court and had on that ground dismissed it. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who transferred the appeal to the first Additional Subordinate Judge for disposal. The latter officer was of opinion that the suit had been rightly instituted in the Civil Court and remanded the case to the Munsif for trial on the merits. In appeal to this Court it is contended that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court and that the Subordinate Judge had no power to make the order of remand. It is conceded that if the order of remand had been made by the District Judge, the case would have been covered by section 197 of the Tenancy Act and no objection could have been taken to the order; but it is contended that the Subordinate Judge had no power to act under that section. The case is covered by the decision in the case of Babu Nandan Prasad v. Changur (1). On the authority of that ruling we must hold that the Additional Subordinate Judge had power to make the order of remand. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Jungly and uncultivated land—Presumption—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 22, applicability of.

Where the land in a zemindari is waste land and uncultivated, the presumption is that the zemindar is the owner of both melvaram and kudivaram rights. In such a case the burden is on the ryot to show that he owns the kudivaram interest. [p. 634, col. 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Section 22 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases where the added or substituted plaintiff wants to litigate a right for himself independently of the right of the original plaintiff. Where, therefore, a plaintiff is added in consequence of the assignment of the rights of the original plaintiff, his right to a decree is not affected by section 22 of the Limitation Act. JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—We have already given judgment as to the boundary question which arose between the villages of Karakudi and Sekkalakattai and have now to deal with so much of the appeal as relates to the claim of the Kattaiyur ryots to the kudivaram rights in the Sekkalakottai village, in which we have decided the suit lands are situated.

It is admitted that the suit village is one of the villages of the Sivaganga zemindari and as such the zemindar is entitled to the melvaram rights in the village, and it is not now suggested that he has been dispossessed of these melvaram rights. It is said, however, that the onus is on him to show that he was in possession of the kudivaram rights within 12 years of suit. Now, as will abundantly appear from the Exhibits to which it will be necessary to refer, the suit land was waste land or jungle and mostly forest, and with regard the land of this character in a zemindari, the presumption is that the zemindar owns the kudivaram as well as the melvaram rights, and, therefore, the onus is on the ryots of the village to show, if they can, that the kudivaram right is vested in them.

Now applying these principles to the present case, we find the earliest document to which it is necessary to refer is Exhibit D, which is a decision by the Inam Commissioner in 1865 as to a dispute as to the boundary of the Sekkalakottai village between the Mahajanams as they are called, of the inam village of Kalanivasal on the one hand and the zemindar of Sivaganga and Ambalagars of the village of Sekkalakottai on the other. These Ambalagars, it was suggested, were only the peons of the village. On the other hand, for the respondents it is said, that they may be the descendants of peons but really they were ryots in Kottaiyur and it is in their right that the present suit has been defended. Now, that decision shows that in 1865 the suit lands were jungle lands. It is true that it is mentioned in Exhibit D that certain houses had been built by the inhabitants of Karaikudi a few years ago and a pond had been dug, but the evidence shows that what was there referred to was a certain Muthupattanam hamlet which, according to Exhibits Y and LL, and I think, the present Commissioner's plan, Exhibit XI, is clearly outside the bounds of the present suit land, to the north-west I think here. I may say in giving judgment in the other appeal, we relied upon the fact that the stone shown as No. 1 in Exhibit D was identical with the stone marked No. 19 in Exhibit XI. But this further evidence as to this hamlet of Muthupattanam, which is marked in Exhibit D. shows that the stone was not No. 19 but was a stone further east, probably the stone marked as No. 6 in Exhibit LL. The effect of the plan, Exhibit Y, is to show that it is only in the present suit that a claim has been made to the land extending west as far as the stone No. 19 in the Commissioner's plan. Having regard to the other fact that in Exhibit D the stone E in the plan annexed thereto is mentioned as the boundary stone of Karaikudi and Sekkalakottai and the rest of the evidence, this error as to the identity of stone No. 1 with stone No. 19 in Exhibit XI in no way affects the conclusion we have arrived at.

To come back to the present case, the effect of Exhibit D is to show that this was forest land in 1865. Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar relies upon the fact that the Kottaiyur ryots took part with the zemindar in the dispute with the adjoining inam village as a sort of assertion of their ownership of their kudivaram in Sekkalakottai. We are unable to attach any weight to that fact from this point of view. Kottaiyur ryots had been taking lands on patta from the zemindar in the Sekkalakottai village and they may well have been interested in seeing that the village boundaries were preserved in which at that time they, at any rate some of them, appear to have been filling up the position of Ambalagars or peons of the zemindar.

The next thing we come to is that about 1875 there was a demarcation carried out by the Survey Department of the boundary between Sekkalakottai and Karaikudi, and that is only material for the present purpose because the suit to contest that boundary line was brought by the Karaikudi ryots against the Kottaiyur ryots and the judgment is Exhibit V, and it is strongly relied upon for the respondents. The ryots of the Karaikudi village claimed that the kudivaram right was vested in them, and the plaintiffs alleged the defendants Nos. 3 to 10 (i.e, the Kottaiyur ryots) were exercising rights of ownership over the said 500 kurukkams just as if they belonged to Sekkalakottai that they are sued.....also as agents to the other proprietors of Sekkalakottai. The zemindar contended that he was improperly made a party to the suit, and Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar relies upon the fact that though it was alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendants were exercising kudivaram rights over the suit land, the zemindar took no objection and asked to be dismissed from the suit. This contention is no doubt entitled to considerable weight, but on the other hand it must be remembered, as appears from the evidence in the case, that at the time the suit came on for hearing the zemindarini, who was originally made a defendant, had died and that there was a contest which gave rise to considerable litigation between the claimants to the estate, and it is perhaps not surprising that in these circumstances minor matters of this sort should not have attracted very much attention. However, nothing was decideed on this point, and the suit was eventually compromised on the terms that the defendants should swear that the boundaries settled by the Commissioner were correct which they did.

The next thing we have to deal with is Exhibit E, which is dated the 12th March 1881, a cowle by which the zemindar assigned the melvaram rights in the suit land and a much larger tract, amounting to 100 kurukkams, to one Ulagappa Chetty. It is said by Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar that this was not inconsistent with the existence of kudivaram rights in the Kottaiyur ryots. I should mention that shortly before Exhibit E the zemindar's rights were recognised by Exhibits W and W1, which were petitions by Kottaiyur ryots for permission to construct houses and to reside in the suit land and this is relied upon by the plaintiffs as an admission that they could not reside there without such permission. This evidence is entitled to very considerable weight.

Then we come to Exhibit VII dated 17th June 1884. Exhibit E of 1881, in favour of Ulagappa Chetti, is said to have been benami for Arunachellam Chetti purchasing from 8 Kottaiyur ambalams or ryots the kudivaram, rights in 30 kurukkams of the 100 kurukkams which he had leased from the zemindar by Exhibit E for a sum of Rs. 8,000. Now the evidence is that the land so purchased has always been left waste, and the explanation given in the evidence as to why this purchase was made, was that it was for the purpose of convenience which does not seem to be a very satisfactory explanation. However, it appears that those lands were waste until the present day. Mr. T. Rangachariar has made various suggestions that the transaction is not what it seems on the face of it. But without going into that all that we think it necessary to say is we are not prepared to attach much weight to it as evidence of the rights claimed by the defendants in the suit lands.

Before coming to the facts which lead up to the present suit, I may refer to the oral evidence, which has been given of the possession of suit lands by the zemindar. There is evidence that the zemindar and his lessees had maintained watchmen and also had granted pattas for trees. Exhibits CC and EE are such pattas and Exhibit CC is shown to be for trees situated in the suit land. The granting of such pattas in forest land for trees only points rather to the kudivaram rights being in the zemindar than in the ryot. As I have said before the onus is on the ryots of a village in a case such as this to show that they have kudivaram rights in jungle lands of this nature. The suit land adjoins the village of Karaikudi where there are a number of wealthy Chettis; and that village having been built on the suit land formed a very eligible site for additional houses for this community and this, according to Mr. Rangachari, is the explanation of the dealing with it already mentioned. Our conclusion on the evidence is that down to 1890 it is not shown that there were any houses upon the suit land.

Now, Exhibit M is a report made to the Sivaganga lessees, who had just then entered on their lease, upon the Sivaganga zemindar's rights by their Plantation Superintendent. He reported that it was very necessary that watchman should be appointed for this forest situated near the houses of Karaikudi, that it was a suitable place for building houses and that the Chettis intended to build houses thereon and that the zemindar could derive an income therefrom. And the order on that is "of course it is necessary that kavalgars.....should be appointed". Exhibit M is another report much to the same effect on which the order is "ameen to be careful that Chettis make no encroachments in this jungle land". The next document Exhibit VIII of the 28th September 1891, is another document by which the Kottaiyur ryots purported to sell 7 and odd kurukkams in the Sekkalakottai village to the north of the suit lands for the price of Rs. 250. This again no doubt was an assertion of their title, but it was not part of the suit land. We do not know what was done upon it, and we are not prepared to regard this as an assertion of title by the Kottaiyur ryots as against the zemindar.

Then we come to Exhibit XII which has given rise to the present litigation. That is dated 18th January 1893 and purports to be a sale of what are practically the suit lands, though they are described as only 11 kurukkams whereas the suit lands are somewhat more. It simply recites that these 8 ambalams, as they describe themselves, have sold these 11 kurukkams of vacant land and trees in Kottaiyur village within the boundaries mentioned there for Rs. 2,500. Following on this we have Exhibit Q series; Exhibit Q is dated 20th May 1893. This shows that the estate servants reported that certain persons at Karaikudi were building on the plaint land. The order on that was Exhibit Q: "As it appears from the said arzi that the undermentioned persons construct buildings in the places appertaining the Sakkalakottai village, the head office also has been informed that what has been constructed up to date should be left alone and that the further construction of the said business should be stopped." Exhibit Q2 reports that accordingly they have been told to stop the work, and that they claimed under a cowle made to Ulagappa Chetty, that is to say Exhibit E of 1881. The supervisor reported that he thought the buildings were outside the limits of the grant to Ulagappa Chetty and he asked for a copy of the original in order to verify this, but no copy appears to have been sent to him. It afterwards turned out that these lands were really outside the boundaries of Ulagappa Chetty's grant. Mr. Rangachariar relies upon the fact that the persons building the houses relied upon this grant rather than upon the purchase under Exhibit XII from the Kottaiyur ryots, as showing that the latter was only a bogus title-deed. This building gave rise to litigation and two suits were filed: one Original Suit No. 18 of 1894 by the Karaikudi Chettis, that is to say, by the Chettis to whom the village of Karaikudi was leased by the zemindar, to establish that the plaint lands formed part of the Karaikudi village; while the other suit, Original Suit No. 4 of 1894, was brought by the Karaikudi ryots for the cancellation of Exhibit XII on the ground that they too had share with the Kottaiyur ryots in the kudivaram rights in the village of Sakkalakottai. The zemindar and the Sivaganga lessees sought to be made parties to Original Suit No. 18 of 1894, but their application was rejected by the Subordinate Judge. The suit, Original Suit No. 18 of 1894, was compromised and the compromise was that the Chettis recognised the khudivaram rights of the Sakkalakottai ryots in the suit lands and other lands which are not the subject of dispute in this suit; and it is suggested on behalf of the plaintiffs that this compromise was a collusive one, at any rate, it is not in any way binding upon them. This compromise was in 1895. The present suit was filed by the Sivaganga lesssees in the year 1901 and there have been some comments on the delay; but is to be remembered that these Sivaganga lessees had only recently come into the possession of the zemindari and that there were a great many other things to attend to besides this suit. I do not think this circumstance weighs very much against them. We think the defendants have not succeeded in proving that the suit was out of time, because for the reasons I have already given, we are satisfied that it is shown that the zemindar was in possession of the suit lands until 12 years of suit: we think it is only in the year 1890 or 1892 that these buildings began to be erected on the suit lands. This is all the evidence to which it is necessary to refer in detail. On the whole, we have come to the conclusion that, on the evidence in this suit, as regards the suit lands the Kottaiyur ryots have not shown that they were possessed of the kudivaram rights. It is perfectly true that we find assertions of such rights by the kudivaram ryots from time to time after 1877 – assertions which they endeavoured to give effect to by the conveyances which I have mentioned. As I have already said, the suit lands were a very eligible site for the extension of the Karaikudi village and for building houses by the Chettis and it is very material that the Kottaiyur ryots should be anxious to establish their claim to valuable pieces of property. But we are satisfied that the possession both of the melvaram and the kudivaram rights of what was originally jungle land was originally in the zemindari. We are not satisfied that he was ever effectively dispossessed of them by the Kottaiyur ryots, although they no doubt made claims to the kudivaram from time to time. In the result we agree with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

As regards the question raised by Mr. T. Rangachariar that the 5th plaintiff—to whom an assignment was made by the other plaintiffs in the course of this suit—that he ought to have been given a decree, I am unable to accept the respondent's contention that the suit, though instituted in time, is barred under section 22 of the Limitation Act as against the 5th plaintiff, the assignee from the other plaintiffs of their cause of action, who was allowed to continue the suit under section 372, Civil Procedure Code, because the period of twelve years had expired when he was brought on. The Limitation Act deals with the institution of suits; and section 22 should, in my opinion, be confined to cases in which the new plaintiff is added or substituted in his own right so that he may be considered to be instituting a suit, and not to cases in which a suit properly instituted is allowed to be continued by an assignee under section 372, Civil Procedure Code. That section was not like section 32 made subject to the provisions of the Limitation Act; to hold it to be so subject is, in my opinion, to defeat its object and bring about the undesirable situation which it was enacted to avoid. Both sections must be read consistently if possible, and I think section 22 very perfectly receives the restricted construction I have mentioned. The authorities in this Court which will be referred to by my learned brother do not preclude up from so holding.

As regards the memorandam of objections, the Subordinate Judge has found that the zemindar and his lessees are not entitled to recover possession of the buildings on the suit lands without compensation, on the ground that they encouraged the owners to build there. As I have mentioned already, the effect of the evidence is that in 1891 objection was taken when those who claimed under Ulagappa Chetty's grant built the building but they were not further interfered with. In these circumstances we are not prepared to differ from the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge has arrived.

For the reasons given the decree will be amended by giving the 5th plaintiff a decree and otherwise the appeal will be dismissed.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. I would add a few words on the question of law argued by Mr. T. Rangachariar. He asks us under Order XLI, rule 33, of the Code of Civil Procedure, to amend the decree of the Subordinate Judge by giving a decree to the 5th plaintiff for possession along with plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 assigned their rights to the 5th plaintiff in June 1908, when the suit was pending. The decree was passed in December 1908: and as the new Limitation Act of 1908 came into force only in January 1909, this question has to be decided under the Act of 1877. Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar contends that under section 22 of that Act, the claim of the 5th plaintiff was barred by limitation, as he was added as plaintiff in the suit more than 12 years after the accrual of the cause of action in 1893. The language of the section covers on the face of it all cases of addition and substitution of parties. But as contended by Mr. T. Rangachariar, the proviso to the section shows the classes of cases contemplated by it. I think he is right in his contention that the section should be restricted only to cases where the substituted or added plaintiff asks that his own rights should be adjudicated upon in the suit. And the section would apply also to cases where the original plaintiffs were not entitled to all the reliefs claimed in the plaint in their own rights. This view is strengthened by the amendment of the Act which places the assignee in the same position as the legal representative of the plaintiff. To hold otherwise would be practically to ignore section 372 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. That section enables the Court to permit an assignee of the rights of the original plaintiff to continue the suit. It would be anomalous to hold that the assignee who has the right to continue the litigation is not entitled to obtain a decree in his favour. I am of opinion that section 22 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases where the added or substituted plaintiff wants to litigate a right for himself independently of the rights of the original plaintiff. Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar relied very strongly upon the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Abdul Rahman v. Amir Ali (1). In that case the referring Judge and Mr. Justice Harrington were of opinion that the bar of section 22 will apply to the substitution of a plaintiff and not to the addition; and the only question referred for the opinion of the Full Bench was whether a case of substitution came within the mischief of section 22. I am unable to see how the case of addition can stand on a different footing from that of substitution. I must respectfully dissent from the Full Bench ruling, in so far as it lays down that where a new plaintiff is substituted under section 372 he will be affected by a period of limitation different from that which is applicable to the original plaintiff. The view of the learned Judges in Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswanath Mandal (2) lends support to the view I have taken. Mr. Justice Wilson in Subodini Debi v. Cumar Ganoda Kant Roy Bahadur (3) came to the same conclusion. Chunni Lal v. Abdul Ali Khan (4) is another authority for the same position. The decision in Fatmabai v. Pirbhai Virji (5) is not opposed to this view. Mr. Justice Miller in Subbaraya Iyer v. Vaithinatha Iyer (6) expresses a doubt regarding the correctness of the view taken by Mr. Justice Wilson in Subodini Debi v. Cumar Gancda Kant Roy Bahadur (3). Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair who took part in that case apparently does not share this doubt. On principle I am of opinion the right view is to hold that where a plaintiff is added in consequence of the assignment of rights from the original plaintiff his right to a decree is not affected by section 22 of the Limitation Act. The decree should be amended by giving the 5th plaintiff a decree for possession along with plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4.

Appeal dismissed; Decree amended.

Where the child to be adopted belongs to the same gotra as that of the adoptive father, the celebration of the ceremony of datta homam is not an essential to the legal validity of an adoption, that is to say, within the same gotra the ceremony is unnecessary. [p. 647, col. 1.]

Valubai v. Govind Kashinath, 24 B. 218; 1 Bom. L. R. 770, approved.

Allegations amounting to fraud, misrepresentation, coercion and undue influence should not be mixed together, as these are all separate and separable categories in law, though it is true that they may overlap or may be combined. [p. 647, col. 2; p. 648, col. 1.]

Fraud, misrepresentation, coercion and undue influence cannot be imported into a case by suggestions but must be specifically and distinctly pleaded. [p. 648, col. 1.]

With regard to fraud if there be any principle which is perfectly well settled, it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an avermeńt of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice. [p. 648, col. 1.]

A civil cause must be conducted in the ordinary and regular way and judged of by the evidence led therein. [p. 645, col 1.]

Unless it is proved that a "witness is dead or cannot be found, etc." the evidence given by such witness in a previous judicial proceeding is irrelevant for the purpose of proving in a subsequent proceeding the truth of the fact which it states, nor can it be used for the purpose of either contradicting or discounting the evidence of the witness in the subsequent proceeding unless the particular matter or point had been placed before the witness as one for explanation in view of its discrepancy with the evidence then being tendered. [p. 645, col. 1.]

If a witness is under cross-examination, he should be given the opportunity, if any documents are to be used against him, to tender his explanation and to clear up the particular point of ambiguity or dispute. This rule must be particularly enforced where a witness's reputation and character are at stake. [p 645, col. 2.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Bombay, dated September 23rd, 1910, reversing the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Poona, dated July 31st, 1906.

FACTS.—The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment of their Lordships.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., Sir W. Garth and Mr. Parikh, instructed by Messrs. Downer and Johnson, for the Appellants:—The High Court had held that there was no adoption, as it was brought about by undue influence and the boy not taken on the lap. The dispute was as to what constituted the proper ceremony. There was no ceremony necessary excepting putting on the lap in case of gotras. The appellants (Tilak and Khaparde) had nothing to gain and, therefore, the question of undue influence must fail. There was no inducement as the widow had throughout animus to adopt a son. Discussion for adoption lasted for three years and the claim of every eligible boy was duly considered from her point of view alone. She had access to them all. No issue as to coercion was raised in the lower Court. In the widow's written statement there was no mention of coercion. It was for the first time raised in the High Court, which decided against appellants on that point. There was no cross-examination on that point. The Subordinate Judge decided that adoption had taken place, but the High Court decided against us by drawing inference from documents. Nagpurkar was at the bottom of all these proceedings, but he was not called as a witness. There was a deed of giving in adoption executed by the father of the boy and a letter given to him by Tai that his son would be adopted. These documents were explicit and the natural father of the boy had no right in him. Adoption was complete in law on June 28th and now the taking of the boy on the lap was challenged. It was until July 6th that she said that she had not rather adopted another boy. It was three months after that the point that the boy was never adopted, was at all urged. On July 29th Tai took steps to revoke the trusteeship and on August 19th adopted Bala. There were further attacks on Tilak and proceedings were taken against him for perjury. The High Court dismissed the charge.

[Sir Robert Finlay:—The issue is different in the present case.]

[MR. AMEER ALI:—Section 43 of the Evidence Act is against you.]

Let us see what Justice Chandavarkar said on the point. There was no cross-examination and no issues framed on the question of undue influence. The charge of fraud must be specifically proved. The testator contemplated the adoption taking place after him. He expressly laid down the adoption of a minor, so that the debt on the estate might be paid off before the boy came of age and took in hand the property. A meeting was held on the question of adoption and all the acting trustees except Nagpurkar agreed upon the course to be followed.

[LORD SHAW:—Nagpurkar was not examined at all.]

Horoscopes of all the boys were examined, but that of Pandit was the best. The pedigree showed that Pandit belonged to the same gotra. Mere giving and taking were sufficient and no datta homam was necessary. The first constituted the real legal ceremony, while the latter was a religious one which was being weakened or relaxed wherever the influence of the Brahmins was removed.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., Lowndes, Dunne and Dr. Majid, instructed by Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. and Mr. Edward Dalgado, for the Respondents:—Datta homam was essential in the case of Brahmins. This was dispensed with in case of daughter's son and brother's son being adopted. The Subordinate Judge found that adoption took place on the 27th of June. As a matter of fact no Hindu adoption could took place in a Sikh temple. There are documents to show that no giving and taking on the lap took place with the intention of adoption. Mitakshara, Dattaka Mimansa and Dattaka Chandrika clearly laid down that datta homam was an essential ceremony. Adoption was a religious ceremony and the effect was that the adoptee was cut off from his natural family. No amount of seculiar proceedings could produce the religious result of removing a son from his father's family. The widow alone could adopt and the result was that she became owner on the death of her son.

[LORD SHAW:—You are entitled to say that in the absence of ceremonials proof of adoption must be clearly made out.]

She became owner of the property and, therefore, she was entitled to be supported in her wishes on the question of adoption. In adoption there must be free consent on the part of the adoptor. She repudiated her choice, if it was a choice at all, the first opportunity she got. The judgment of the Madras High Court was based on Jagannath's Digest and the view of Mr. Ellis and in Bengal it had not been followed. The case in Bhyrubnath Tye v. Mohesh Chunder Bhadooree (8) followed in Sayamalal Dutt v. Saudamani Dasi (9) expressly dissented from Sir T. Strange's view. In Bombay there was no authority dispensing with the important religious ceremony of datta homam.

The consent of all the trustees was not obtained. Nagpurkar dissociated himself from the other trustees as soon as he discovered the way in which things were conducted. One of the trustees had refused to act. It was laid down that such an injunction must be strictly followed. The Court had the power to determine a point on appeal if evidence on the record was sufficient and the case which it was set up to support was made out in the lower Court. It was equally so if the point in dispute was covered by the issues and evidence to decide them or the point appeared in the plaint or in the pleadings.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, dated 23rd September 1910, which reversed the decree of the first Class Subordinate Judge at Poona, dated 31st July 1906.

The main question to be determined on the appeal has reference to the validity of the adoption by the widow of the late Shri Vasudeo Harihar Pandit, alias Shri Baba Maharaj, of a son to her late husband. The appellant Jagannath claims to be the duly adopted son. This claim is resisted by the defendants and forms the issue in the case.

The adoption is challenged substantially upon three grounds—first, that it was never completed in fact. This in argument was reduced to the proposition that the whole transaction had been left at the stage of a proposal to be afterwards carried into effect. As to the adoption itself, it is maintained that there was never a complete giving and taking of the child, and in particular he was not taken upon the lap of the adoptive mother. Secondly, that the religious ceremony of datta homam, namely, the sacrificial burning of the clarified butter in accordance with the practice of the Hindu religion, was an essential requisite, and was not performed, and that on this ground also the adoption remained inchoate.

These grounds of challenge affect the completion and formalities of the ceremony itself. The third ground, however, is one of general law. There are difficulties on the pleadings and arguments in placing it within any definite category, and to this allusion will afterwards be made. But it may at least be said that almost every known ground of challenge is imported into the case by suggestion. Allegations amounting to or compounded of fraud, circumvention, coercion, and undue influence are all mixed together. The disentangling of these separate and separable grounds of action must undoubtedly have caused certain difficulties in the Court below. But the challenge appeared to their Lordships to preserve even at the Bar of the Board this mixed or jumbled character.

The facts of the case, briefly stated, are these : The late Baba Maharaj was a first class Sardar of the Deccan. He died at Poona on 7th August 1897, leaving a young widow, Tai Maharaj.

At the date of his death he made a Will appointing five gentlemen as his trustees. One of these, Ranh Sahib, declined to act; the other four obtained Probate of the Will on 2nd December 1897. These were Messrs. Tilak, Khaparde and Kumbhojkar the appellants. The fourth, Mr. Nagpurkar, while remaining a trustee, after a time dissociated himself in action from his three colleagues, and was properly convened as a defendant in the suit. The suit itself was brought in defence of the validity of the adoption (the adopted child being, of course, one of the plaintiffs), and for the administration of the estate in terms of the Will.

In the Will the clause material to the questions of adoption and succession is as follows:—

"My wife, Saubhagyavati Shri Sakvarbai, is now pregnant. If she does not give birth to a son, or if the son after birth is short-lived, then, for the purpose of continuing the name of my family with the Vichare of the above-mentioned gentlemen, a boy should be given, as often as may be necessary, in adoption on the lap of my wife in accordance with the Shastras, and the above-mentioned Panch should, on behalf of that son, carry on the management of the immoveable and moveable estate until he attains majority."

On 18th January 1898 the widow gave birth to a son, but he died within two months thereafter, namely, on the 9th March. The circumstances for giving effect to the testator's intentions by his widow performing an act of adoption thus arose. And it is an admitted fact in the case that for a period of over three years she and the four acting trustees made frequent inquiries and numerous efforts towards the securing of a suitable boy. The circle of relations was considerable, but for various reasons, none of which bear upon the present case, a suitable adoptee could not be found in the Kolhapur or Poona branches of her husband's family.

On the 18th June 1901 a meeting of the trustees was held, at which Tai Maharaj was present, and the facts which were otherwise spoken to by the witnesses are recorded in the minute, the substance of which was that there were no boys available in the Kolhapur family, that of all those available in the Poona family none were approved. The minute in this particular is of importance, because it shows that an anxious search had been made, that deference was paid to the wishes of the widow, and that objection is made to certain suggested adoptees on the ground of their being too old, one boy, the youngest named, of eleven years, being, however, stated to be in point of age suitable, although delicate. The minute then proceeds:—

"The only family which remains, therefore, is that descended from the brother of Shri Siddeshwar Maharaj at Babre. It is not yet known whether there is a boy or not in that family. But if there is a boy of that family, fit in point of age, etc., for adoption, it is our unanimous opinion that one should not be taken from any other family. And Shri Tai Maharaj is of the same opinion.

"Shri Tai Maharaj suggests that Messrs. Bal Gangadhar Tilak and Ganesh Shrikrishna Khaparde should both go to Babre, select boys, and return after settling as regards that family.

"Shri Tai Maharaj should go, see boys, and approve."

It should be mentioned that the trustees were, and had been since the testator's death, duly administering the testator's estate.

What followed upon the proceedings of the 18th June was that Messrs. Tilak and Khaparde accompanied the widow to Aurangabad, where the widow remained; the two trustees proceeded to Nidhone, a place near the Babre village, and selected five boys within the circle of relationship, and they came back, accompanied by their parents, to Aurangabad. The boys stayed with the widow for several days, being entertained and kept under observation. Certain astrologers, including Durga Shastri, who was one of her suite who had accompanied her to Aurangabad, cast the horoscopes of the children. These proved favourable to the appellant, Jagannath; and her personal likings appeared to point in the same direction.

All this course of conduct pointed to the entire acquiescence on the part of the widow in the testator's wishes and directions, and so far there is no substantial suggestion to the contrary. As to what happened at Aurangabad it is sufficient to say that, in their Lordships' opinion, the sworn testimony is abundant, is clear, and is overwhelming. It amounts to this. The widow's desire, the arrangement of all parties, and the horoscopes of the astrologers all pointing in one direction, on the 27th June a meeting of the Shastris and of other persons in Aurangabad was summoned. The father of the boy being present, it was announced by the trustees that the boy had been selected. The father was taken to the widow; in pursuance of the familiar procedure she asked him to give her his boy in adoption, and he ageeed. The fact of the arrangement was announced to the assembled guests, and there and then duplicate deeds of adoption were drawn up, the one being impressed with a Mogali, and the other with a British stamp, and both intended to be signed and attested by the widow. This deed was in due form and bore that the father gave the son in adoption. The second document was a letter from the widow addressed to the father and agreeing to take the boy in adoption. So far as giving and receiving of the child, these documents were prepared for and pointed to actual adoption in fact.

The preparation of the documents, however, occupied time, and the hour being late the proceedings were stopped, but were resumed early next morning. A gathering was accordingly again held early on the 28th. The deeds of adoption and the letter were duly executed, the boy was given in fact by its natural father to its adopted mother, he was received in fact by her on her lap in performance of the requisite essential in this caste of Hindus on occasion of adoption and—all being completed—the formal ceremonies and festivities were postponed, to take place afterwards at Poona, and the widow left Aurangabad.

The Subordinate Judge of Poona has gone into the circumstances with the utmost minuteness and detail, and he has weighed and considered every argument presented, and he comes to the conclusion that the adoption was in fact completed. Notwithstanding the judgment of the learned Judges of the High Court of Bombay, their Lordships have no hesitation whatever in entirely agreeing with the Judge of first instance. Reference in a little time will be made to the reasons assigned by the High Court for differing from him. But in the meantime it may be said that it appears to their Lordships that, viewed as a matter of evidence, no other conclusion was possible than that come to by the Subordinate Judge.

Their Lordships do not stop to examine the oral testimony in detail. It is really all one way. Upon the crucial question of whether the boy was received by being taken on the lap of the adoptive mother there can be no doubt. Witness after witness speaks of it. It would be very strange if it had not taken place, because it is conceded that it is among the very elements of the ceremonial of adoption, and entirely familiar. It is not only that Hindus of various classes were present and saw it, but it has to be borne in mind what the nature of the challenge of the transaction now is. It has come to be one in which the trustees, men of high postition, and some of them of learning and legal training, are accused of conspiring by fraud, duress, undue influence, and nearly everything that is improper, to have procured from the widow this act of adoption. It is not to be believed that if such a scheme were afoot, if deeds had been signed, horoscopes taken, and meetings gathered, the scheme would have failed because of the omission of that which was elementary to the knowledge of everybody, namely, the taking of the child upon the mother's lap.

It must, however, be borne in mind that against a body of evidence of 10 or 12 witnesses five witnesses are produced for the defendants. It is sufficient to say of this evidence that most of it was entirely irrelevant to any issue in the case, and such of it as was not was disbelieved by the Judge of first instance, a verdict with which the High Court saw no ground for interfering.

It may be added that when the party returned to Poona, Mr. Tilak wrote out a full account of the transaction, which was recorded in the minutes, and the trustees who had not taken part in the mission to Aurangabad were communicated with, to the effect that the adoption was complete. The sworn evidence is entirely in accordance with what has now been stated. Here and there, there are expressions in the letters out of which it may with ingenuity be possible to suggest a doubtful meaning; for instance, that the words "selected" and "decided" refer to something in the future. And it is also undoubtedly true that both the minutes of the trustees, and the letters, date the adoption as the 27th, whereas in point of fact, as has been seen, it began upon the 27th and was concluded on the 28th. But so far as oral evidence goes, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that it represented the truth, and that the fact of adoption was by it proved.

The Subordinate Judge says:

"Here there was a clear direction of the husband to this wife to adopt, the wife after his death was anxious to carry out the direction. There is no evidence to prove that any effort or cajolery was practised upon her, or that there was any suppression or concealment of facts from her; the plaintiffs had no personal interest whatever."

In another passage of his judgment he remarks:

"The evidence clearly shows, and it is undisputed, that on the 27th there was selection and verbal gift, and acceptance, and preparation of necessary documents. On the 28th there was execution of documents under corporeal acts of giving and taking."

In their Lordships' view these conclusions are well justified.

It is an admitted fact in the case that neither the trustees nor any of the witnesses for the plaintiffs had any interest whatsoever in the subject-matter of the suit, and that no motive can be reasonably suggested for them maintaining or testifying that the adoption of the boy mentioned was made, except that this represented the actual truth which occurred.

It is in these circumstances that their Lordships have viewed with surprise the charge which is made not only against the trustees, but against the whole body of the plaintiffs' witnesses, 10 or 12 persons in all.

"The account unquestionably, to my mind," says Mr. Justice Chandavarkar, "given by the witnesses appears to be a true account of many of the series of events, and a false account of at least one, and that the most important"

This event is the taking of the child on the lap. Later on in his judgment he states:

"We are driven to believe that a considerable number of men of good position have conspired together to give false evidence."

The conclusion thus made is of the most serious character, amounting to a plain judicial finding of conspiracy and of perjury.

Their Lordships will presently refer to one or two circumstances accompanying such a verdict, but meantime they will only observe that they do not think that one word of it is justified by the evidence in the case. Referring to Messrs. Tilak and Khaparde, Mr. Justice Chandavarkar observes that "they were men of mature years, of exceptional education and mental qualities, lawyers and men of affairs of great repute and good standing, and both men of dominating personality."

Some of the witnesses who gave evidence for the plaintiffs are also persons of considerable standing. It is a priori difficult to understand how these men, with no object to gain and no interest to serve, could be supposed to have entered into the conspiracy and committed the perjury which the High Court judgment found. Their Lordships think the conclusion come to by the learned Judges to be entirely unwarranted on the facts.

Their Lordships find themselves constrained to observe upon certain procedure in the case, the result of which was to introduce into it large masses of irrelevant matter.

It should be mentioned that, subsequent to the adoption at Aurangabad, the widow, upon returning to Poona and after having been a party to certain communications naturally following the adoption which had been made, fell under other influences, and in the month of July expressed a change of mind. And on the 19th August she went through the form of another adoption, viz., of Bala Maharaj—a married man older than herself—as her son. It is unnecessary to make any observations upon his claim. The widow, who, while she was a litigant, maintained that adoption, died on 30th September 1903. Her daughter who was, on her death, admitted to the suit as defendant, challenges not only the first adoption, but the second adoption also, her interest being to maintain that the provisions of the testator's Will with regard to adoption had failed, that the widow became the owner of the estate as heiress to her infant son who died, and that the property passes in this way to her heir.

It appears that the widow and Bala Maharaj left no stone unturned in the way of litigation. In July proceedings were begun to revoke the Probate granted to the trustees, and subsequently criminal proceedings were instituted in respect of perjury. Their Lordships regret to observe that not only are the circumstances with regard to the criminal proceedings referred to in the present litigation by the parties, but that the depositions therein become matter apparently of materiality in the judgment of the learned Judges of the High Court.

In the opinion of the Board this was an irregularity of a somewhat serious character.

They refer particularly to the depositions in the criminal case, which seem to have been imported in bulk into the present. There is a risk by such procedure of justice being perverted. A civil cause must be conducted in the ordinary and regular way, and judged of by the evidence led therein. Under section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, evidence given by a witness in a judicial proceeding in a criminal trial is relevant for the purpose of proving in a subsequent proceeding the truth of the fact which it states, but this only as the section proceeds—

"when the witness is dead, or cannot be found, or is incapable of giving evidence, or is kept out of the way, etc."

Not one of these circumstances was proved in the present case, and the depositions could not have been used with propriety even to support the evidence of the plaintiffs, which they apppear to have done. But there appears to have been no warrant whatsoever for using them for the purpose of either contradicting or discounting the evidence of the witnesses given in this suit, unless the particular matter or point had been placed before the witness as one for explanation, in view of its discrepancy with the evidence then being tendered. It was stated to their Lordships that the prosecution for perjury had in the end completely failed. With that their Lordships have nothing to do. The judgment now given is pronounced irrespective of the result of the criminal suit. Successful or unsuccessful, the introduction and use in this civil action of these criminal proceedings as above described were illegitimate.

A further mischance in point of procedure must now be mentioned. As already stated, the testimony of the plaintiffs' witnesses is not contradicted orally, and is internally a consistent body of evidence. But various minutes and documents are the subject of minute analysis, observation, and comment by the learned Judges of the High Court with a view to rebutting it. Their Lordships think it right to observe that in view of the serious nature of the verdict of the High Court, they have considered it within their province themselves to peruse the documents. Having done so, they are of the opinion that, taken together, they completely confirm the case made in the witness-box, and that there is no ground, in fact, for the conclusion that they either contradict the testimony or cast any reasonable doubt upon it.

But they must also record their dissent from the view that the use made of these documents in this case was justified by law. On general principles it would appear to be sound that if a witness is under cross-examination on oath he should be given the opportunity, if documents are to be used against him, to tender his explanation and to clear up the particular point of ambiguity or dispute. This is a general, salutary, and intelligible rule, and where a witness's reputation and character are at stake, the duty of enforcing this rule would appear to be singularly clear.

Fortunately the law of India pronounces no uncertain sound upon the same matter. By section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, it is provided that—

"A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing, or reduced into writing, and relevant to the matters in question without such writing, being shown to him, or being proved; but, if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him."

Their Lordships have observed with regret and with surprise that the general principle and the specific statutory provisions have not been followed. The verdict of the High Court is an inferential verdict—nonetheless sweeping on that account—but an inferential verdict actually of perjury. What are the premises upon which this inference proceeds? In no inconsiderable degree they consist of documents, statements, even turns of expression, which are used to confound the spoken word. Had the safeguards set up by the law with respect to the use of documents been observed? Not at all. Not only have documents been used for the purpose of contradicting witnesses without obeying the injunctions prescribed by law, but the inference thus derived, and improperly derived, from these documents has resulted, as stated, in an inferential verdict of perjury.

Heaton, J., deals elaborately with this portion of the case, and one example taken from his judgment will suffice. One letter out of many is taken, passages are cited from it, and a minute argument proceeds as to the expressions used, and why this was mentioned and that other omitted. Mr. Tilak was for five days under cross-examination before the Subordinate Judge, but not one of these things was put to him; and he was not asked in the witness-box to give one single explanation with regard to any of those expressions or omissions which are now alleged to compromise him. On this point of the case no more need be said.

One other matter of procedure may be mentioned. One of the trustees, Mr. Nagpurkar, dissociated himself from his colleagues, and in July appears to have written a minute of doubt or dissent with regard to certain proceedings. A letter from him resiling from this position is also produced.

The learned Judges have come to a conclusion which would be in some respect in accord with the so-called dissent. It is a striking circumstance that Mr. Nagpurkar, a relevant witness, intimately acquainted with what had gone on, and with the position both of the trustees and widow as regards adoption, and a party in the case aware of the charges launched against his colleagues, does not appear as a witness to explain the one or to support the other.

In the result, their Lordships are unable to agree with the view taken by the High Court on this part of the case.

The next argument is that the adoption was void because it lacked the ceremonial of datta homam, which ceremonial is declared to be essential to its legal validity.

Datta homam is the service of the burning of clarified butter, which is offered as a sacrifice by fire by way of religious propitiation or oblation. It is admitted that in this case the ceremony was not performed, and it seems to be fairly clear that it was one of those things which it was intended afterwards to carry out at Poona as part of the general ceremonial and festivities which were to be carried through there.

In certain circumstances the point might be the subject of a prolonged and very conflicting argument, as the authorities, ancient and modern, are not in accord on the point as to whether this is a legal as well as a religious requisite. There is a danger, on the one hand, of not paying due respect to those religious rites which are observed and followed among large classes of Indian belief, while, on the other hand, the danger must also be avoided of carrying these—except when the law is clear—into the legal sphere, so as to affect or impair personal or patrimonial rights. The subject of the requisites for adoption has, in recent years, been the matter of not infrequent consideration by this Board, and their Lordships refer, in especial, to the elaborate examinations of the authorities made by Lord Hobhouse in Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshmamma (18), and by Mr. Ameer Ali in Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (19).

The former case had reference to the validity of the adoption of an only son. From the religious point of view this is, in many writings of great authority, forbidden. There was, however, in India, considerable difference in the view as to whether the religious and legal injunctions on the subject were co-extensive. It must be admitted that if one has recourse to the ancient writings when Brahminical influence was most predominant, one finds the ceremonial part of adoption the subject of highly elaborate detail; and it is beyond all question that in the course of ages many of these details have disappeared as essentials within the legal sphere. As Lord Hobhouse observes:

"The further study of the subject necessary for the decision of these appeals has still more impressed them with the necessity of great caution in interpreting books of mixed religion, morality, and law, lest foreign lawyers, accustomed to treat as law what they found in authoritative books, and to administer a fixed legal system, should too hastily take for strict law precepts which are meant to appeal to the moral sense, and should thus fetter individual judgments in private affairs, should introduce restrictions into Hindu society, and impart to it an inflexible rigidity never contemplated by the original law-givers."

The case resulted in the decision that the adoption of an only son is not null and void under the Hindu Law.

The question whether the datta homam is a legal requisite in Bombay for adoption among the three twice-born classes does not, however, in the view of their Lordships, broadly arise in the present case. It is in no way necessary to canvas or call in question any dicta upon that general point, nor does the question arise whether, for instance, the principle extends to India at large of the decision of the Madras Full Bench in Govindayyar v. Doraisami(7) or of the Madras High Court in Singamma v. Venkatacharlu (11), both decisions being of value as containing a careful study of the authorities, and affirming that the ceremony of datta homam is not essential to a valid adoption among Brahmins in Southern India.

For, in the opinion of the Board, the necessity does not arise where the child to be adopted belongs to the same gotra as that of the adoptive father. It is an admitted fact that this was so in the present case. And their Lordships have come clearly to the conclusion that where this is so in fact, then the Law of India is that the celebration of the ceremony of datta homam is not an essential to the legal validity of an adoption. It is conceded in argument that certain exceptions to the alleged general rule do exist, but it is maintained that these exceptions are limited to the case of the adoption of a nephew, or of a daughter's son. In decided cases this may have been the relationship in fact, but the principle of all the decisions, and in their Lordships' opinion, of all the authorities, is that within the same gotra the ceremony is unnecessary. They agree with what, in their opinion, is the full and careful judgment of Chief Justice Jenkins in the case of Valubai v. Govind Kashinath (10), the decision being to the effect that among Brahmins in the Presidency of Bombay, the performance of the datta homam ceremony is not essential to the validity of the adoption of a brother's son. An examination of the judgment shows that it was not based upon the narrow particular degree of relationship but upon the broad ground of the identity of gotra.

Mr. Colebrook's annotation upon Mitakshara, 25, is as follows:

"Gotraja or persons belonging to the same general family (gotra) distinguished by a common name, these answer nearly to the gentiles of the Roman Law."

A good illustration of the point has reference to the law applicable to the Sudra caste. The use of the datta homam is not necessary for adoption within that caste, and why? The explanation is given in a sentence by Strange in his "Hindu Law," Volume 2, in which it is laid down that—

"Ceremonial adoption cannot be necessary in the case of a Sudra, since by the datta homam the adopted son is offered from the stock (gotram) of the natural to that of his adopted father; and Sudras have no gotra."

It may be added that in the treatment in the same Volume, page 104, of the celebration of the upanayana rite, or the investiture with the sacred thread, this is laid down:

"With respect to the non-eligibility of a person for adoption on whom the upanayana rites have been performed, it is much disputed. The more reasonable opinion would appear to be that he is eligible if of the same gotra (family); non-eligible if of a different gotra from the adopter; that if of the same gotra the datta homam, though proper, is not necessary."

Their Lordships do not pursue the investigation of the authorities further, adopting, as they do, the survey made in the last-mentioned judgment of the learned Chief Justice Jenkins.

In their opinion accordingly this part of the respondents' case also fails.

What remains is the attack which was made upon the transaction of the adoption itself, an attack in which the various grounds of rescission applicable to contracts in general were alluded to. Their Lordships hold that it is impossible to discover what it is that is really put forward by the defendants. Under the contract law of India, as well as by ordinary principles, coercion, undue influence, fraud, and misrepresentation, are all separate and separable categories in law. It is true that they may overlap or may be combined. But in the present case it is impossible to discover what ground or grounds are really taken up. There is a well-known rule of pleading expressed in the frequently quoted language of Lord Selborne that—

"With regard to fraud if there be any principle which is perfectly well settled, it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice."

The law of India is in no way different from this, and it has been decided over and over again, e. g., in Gunga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhry (4).

It is, in their Lordships' opinion, much to be regretted that the rule is not more strictly observed, and their Lordships are of opinion that in the present case much confusion and contention have been caused, together with much expense to the parties, in consequence of its neglect. No definite issue upon any one of the well-known categories of attack was settled for trial, the only issue on the subject being—Whether the plaintiff, No. 4, is a validly-adopted son of Bala Maharaj. From time to time, in the course of this case, it is clear that specific pleadings in Indian procedure have been abandoned altogether. In short, several of the careful prescriptions of the law and of the Legislature, all of which were intended to bring litigation within definite compass and to make articulate and clear the points of difference between the parties, have been lost sight of. Their Lordships, however, are unwilling, confused though the charges be, to dismiss this part of the case on such a ground.

The position upon the facts was this. The Will of the testator prescribing an adoption was clear; the wish of the widow and the trustees alike to follow it was clear; the trustees, so long as the testator's wishes were carried into effect, had no interest of any kind as to who the adoptee should be. It was also clear that the testator's Will indicated that a minor should be adopted, because express provision was made for the management of the estate till that minor should come of age. It was manifest that every consideration pointed to the advantage of keeping, if possible, within the gotra, and it was further clear that the trustees, in advising the widow, should pay due regard to her wishes, and that, so far as this could be accomplished, they and she should act together.

It is in these circumstances a strange situation that the adoption should be challenged upon the ground, nebulously stated as it is, of fraud. There is no evidence, says the Subordinate Judge, to prove that any fraud or cajolery was practised upon her, or that there was any suppression or concealment of facts from her. With this judgment it does not appear that the High Court differs, and their Lordships entirely agree with it. It was for some reason, however, held that the general issue above quoted did include allegations of coercion and undue influence. Coercion is by admission out of the case. There was nothing of the sort; and this is not now maintained. What remains accordingly is the judgment of the High Court to this effect that—"The question here is difficult; she was indeed willing to adopt, but was she a free agent when she adopted the fourth plaintiff, assuming that she adopted him, or was she forced into it against her will by unconscientious means used by the first two plaintiffs, that is, Messrs. Tilak and Khaparde, and unfair advantage taken by them of her ignorance and youth, and of other fiduciary relations between them."

The citation just made is from the notes of Mr. Justice Chandavarkar. With much respect to the learned Judge, it is, notwithstanding the protracted argument before their Lordships, even now somewhat difficult to gather what are the legal categories under which the attack upon this transaction is made. Unconscientious means are mentioned and unfair advantage is mentioned. It is needless to ask whether this implies fraud, because their Lordships are of opinion that no sort of unconscientious means was employed by these trustees from beginning to end of the transaction, and that no unfair advantage was either taken or meant throughout their whole course. It is true that the adoptive mother was a young widow, probably easily guided, and that the trustees are admitted to have been men of great influence and strong personality, but their Lordships are of opinion that these were used in no respect unduly, but with propriety and entirely in the interests of the proper administration of the estate. Their Lordships cannot approve of the idea that in India the law would make the possession of reputation or high standing an element of suspicion. If it were so, then the result in India would be to import pro tanto a disqualification and disability into the position of reputable men.

A reference is made in the Court of Appeal to the fiduciary relations in which the trustees stood to the widow, and in one part of the judgment impropriety of conduct upon the part of the trustees is alleged to lie in this, that they failed in their duty of informing her as to her rights. Upon inquiry as to what was meant by this, their Lordships were informed that the reference was to this effect, that if the widow had failed to adopt, then by doing so she would herself have come into the position of being heiress to her infant deceased child. The meaning of this is accordingly as follows:—Among Hindus the ceremony of adoption is held to be necessary not only for the continuation of the line of the childless father, but as part of the religious means whereby a son can be provided who will make those oblations and religious sacrifices which would permit of the soul of the deceased passing from Hades into Paradise.

The widow in the present case is said to have been injured because she had not been informed that she could win for herself his temporal estate, by violation of her husband's dying wishes, and at the price of sacrificing his soul's happiness. Their Lordships are not of opinion that it was any part of the duty of the trustees to suggest this infamous alternative to her mind. Their duty was to give effect to his wishes, and his wishes were in accord with the religious belief of Hindus in regard to adoption. It is to be recorded further that the widow herself did not put forward, during her life, any plea or suggestion of this sort; she was as anxious as the trustees that an adoption should be made.

Only a word need be said as to the argument put forward on behalf of the daughter, that neither the first nor the second adoption was valid. The only separate point put forward was to the effect that the trustees' consent had not been unanimous, one trustee out of five having declined to act. In their Lordships' opinion his consent in these circumstances was not required. Of the acting trustees it was said that one, Nagpurkar, dissented. Whether he did so or not, the question would remain as to the action of the majority of the trustees; but in their Lordships' opinion that question does not arise; because he did in fact not dissent, but consent. His dissent, or alleged dissent, was subsequently made under circumstances in which it is not necessary to inquire.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, the decree of the High Court set aside, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored. The appellants will have their costs here and in the Courts below.

Khan Sahib M. MUHAMMAD YAHIA —DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

*Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22—Zemindar's right to create subordinate rights—*Thekadar, meaning of.

The word "thekadar" in section 22 of the Tenancy Act is intended to apply not only to a lessee of proprietary rights but to any person who holds a tenure created by the act of the zemindar. [p. 650, col. 1].

Obiter dicta.—A zemindar has a right to create subordinate rights of any character he chooses, e. g., to fix a rent in perpetuity or to allow succession according to Hindu Law. [p. 650, col. 1.]

Application for revision from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated 28th June 1912, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Jaunpur District, in a case of determination of tenure.

JUDGMENT.—The present order disposes of four cases in all of which revision is asked of orders finding that the applicants have not got the rights of fixed-rate tenants. The applicants claim that they have these rights under an agreement in Court by which the respondents agreed that they should hold misl sharah muayin. The finding of the lower Courts, revision of which is asked for, is that succession under the rights thus created must be regulated by section 22 of the Tenancy Act. My own opinion is strongly against the correctness of this finding. A zemindar has a right to create subordinate rights of any character whatever that he chooses. He has a right to fix a rent in perpetuity. He has a right to allow succession according to Hindu Law, and when the zemindar declared that the rights of the applicants should be those of fixed-rate tenants, in my opinion he gave them a right of succession as provided in the law for a fixed-rate tenant. Section 22 of the Tenancy Act does not apply to thekadars and I consider that the word thekadar is intended to apply in this section not only to a lessee of proprietary rights but to any person who holds a tenure created by the act of the zemindar. I do not consider, therefore, that section 22 applies to the applicants.

The application, however, is for revision. A decision by Mr. Justice Banerji in the High Court [Bachchi alias Bachchia v. Bachchi (1)] has been brought to my notice and in that case Mr. Banerji has taken precisely the same view as the Commissioner has done in this case. It is clearly impossible for me in the face of Mr. Banerji's decision, even though I disagree with it, to declare that the error of law committed was so gross and palpable as to warrant revision. I am, therefore, obliged to hold that I cannot revise the Commissioner's decision on the ground that he has misinterpreted the rights of the applicants.

Another ground for revision is urged that the Commissioner overruled the previous decision of Mr. Darrah in which he held that the applicants were fixed-rate tenants. In this matter, I think, the reasoning of the Commissioner is correct. The only question in issue before Mr. Darrah was whether the zemindar had a power of enhancement. He was empowered to decide that issue and that issue only and his decision is, therefore, not res judicata as regards the right of succession to the tenancy. For these grounds I am obliged to dismiss these applications for revision. No costs.

Application rejected.

Custom—Succession—Pagwand or chundawand—Malkotra Rajputs, Una Tahsil, Hoshiarpur District—Difference between the plains and hilly districts.

Among the Malkotra Rajputs of the village Panjawar of Tahsil Una in the Hoshiarpur District, the rule of succession is chundawand, and not pagwand. [p. 651, col. 1.]

In the Punjab plains the custom of chundawand is slowly giving place to pagwand even where it may have been prevalent at one time, but there is no such certainty as regards the hilly tracts of the Province. [p. 651, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur Division, dated the 13th February 1909.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellants.

Mr. Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are the descendants of Khazana, a Malkotra Rajput of the village Panjawar of Tahsil Una in the Hoshiarpur District. The plaintiffs are his four sons by one wife and the defendants represent his two sons by another wife. On Khazana's death in 1906 there was a prolonged dispute in mutation proceedings over the question whether the land left by him should pass to his sons in equal shares (pagwand) or unequally (chundawand). The Revenue Assistant and the Collector eventually concurred in ordinary mutation by chundawand on the strength of the riwaj-i-am of 1869, with the result that plaintiffs became the recorded owners of half the land.

Plaintiffs assert that they are nevertheless in possession of two-thirds under the pagwand rule of succession, and on a further dispute in partition proceedings they were referred to the Civil Courts. They accordingly in November 1907 instituted the present suit for a declaration that they are entitled as owners to two-thirds of Khazana's estate of some 652 kanals.

The lower Courts have differed. The first Court dismissed the suit, but the learned Divisional Judge decreed in plaintiffs' favour, and the case is before us on further appeal by the defendants under the old Punjab Courts Act.

We have great respect for the views of the Divisional Judge on a matter of this kind, but we think that he has been misled by the general tendency of a series of rulings which are only applicable directly to the plains districts of the Province. It is doubtless correct to say that in the Punjab plains the custom of chundawand is slowly giving place to pagwand, even where it may have been prevalent at one time. We do not think that there is any such certainty as regards the hilly tracts of the Province. Mr. Lyall's Settlement Report for Kangra, quoted in Musammat Kundo v. Shib Dial (1) where this Court decided a Kangra case in favour of chundawand, is a notable authority to the contrary, and we can see no reason why there should be any broad distinction between the Kangra District and the adjoining Una Tahsil of Hoshiarpur.

The riwaj-i-am of 1869 is quite explicit in support of chundawand among Rajputs, and we cannot attach much importance to the fact that few instances could be quoted in proof of the reality of the custom stated so positively. It is notorious that custom changes very slowly in the hills, and we believe the real reason for paucity of instances to be connected with the peculiar conditions of life therein. Second marriages are uncommon for the reason that polyandry still prevails to a considerable extent. The question is discussed at pages 96 and 97 of Volume II of Tupper's Customary Law, and there is much force in the author's suggested explanation that chundawand is a relic of society which has begun to be polygamous without having entirely disused polyandry.

In the present case there is practically no proof that the riwaj-i-am entry is wrong or that the Revenue authorities went astray in following it. The plaintiffs' Pleader had to admit that no instance could be quoted of pagwand being followed among the Malkotra Rajputs concerned, while there is at least one genuine instance to the contrary. The plaintiffs did not start with any strong presumption in their favour and they have failed to establish anything like a conclusive case for interference with the existing entries in the record.

The appeal is accordingly accepted. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the first Court dismissing plaintiffs' suit is restored with costs throughout to the defendants. Counsel's fee Rs 50.

Appeal accepted.

Mutation—Oudh taluqa—Law of primogeniture—History of estate—Will of doubtful validity—Stranger—Male collateral.

An Oudh taluqa had always descended, until the death of one S, strictly according to the law of primogeniture, to the nearest male relative. Under a Will of S, at first his mother and upon his mother's death his daughter succeeded to the taluqa. Upon the daughter's death her husband claimed the estate under an alleged Will of his deceased wife:

Held, that having regard to the past history of the estate it should not be mutated in favour of an utter stranger on the basis of an alleged Will, until its validity was established in a Civil Court but should be mutated in favour of the nearest male collateral of S, who appeared to be the person best entitled to the property. [p. 652, col. 2.]

Third appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated 10th March 1914, confirming that of the Collector, Bara Banki District, who reversed the order of the Assistant Collector of Bara Banki, in a case of mutation of names.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—(January 11th, 1915.)—I am unable to agree with the Commissioner's decision in this case. The dispute cannot be decided upon the basis of possession, as the estate is held by the Deputy Commissioner. It is, therefore, necessary to decide under section 40(b) by summary inquiry who is the person best entitled to the property. The property in dispute is an Oudh taluqa, which until the death of Sher Bahadur Singh had always descended strictly according to the laws of primogeniture to the nearest male relative. Sher Bahadur Singh died without any direct male descendant, and consequently made a Will leaving the property in turn to

(a) His wife, who pre-deceased him;
(b) his mother, Mus:mmat Dilraj Kuar, and
(c) his two daughters, with only one of whom, Musammat Sheoraj Kuar, we are now concerned.

It is quite clear, from the wording of Sher Bahadur Singh's Will, that he was most anxious that the property should not go out of his family, though he gave preference to his own female relatives rather than to male collaterals. His mother, Musammat Dilraj Kuar, succeeded to the property on Sher Bahadur Singh's death; and on her death she left it by Will to Musammat Sheoraj Kuar, Sher Bahadur Singh's surviving daughter. This lady held the property, and has now died, leaving no issue. Her husband, however, claims the property on the basis of a Will, said to have been executed in his favour by his wife. While Musammat Sheoraj Kuar was still alive, civil suits were instituted against her by Sitla Bux Singh (the present appellant) and Kirat Singh, who claimed the taluqa as the nearest male relatives of Sher Bahadur Singh, and who asserted that Musammat Sheoraj's title to the property was invalid, whether as daughter of Sher Bahadur Singh or as legatee of Musammat Dilraj Kuar.

These suits had not been decided when Musammat Sheoraj Kuar died. None was substituted as defendant in her place. Gajraj Singh (the present respondent) took no action, though he claims to be his wife's heir. And there were obvious reasons why plaintiffs should not cite him as the lady's heir and thereby confer on him a title which they were anxious to dispute.

The suit was decided by the learned Subordinate Court, but his judgment does not, of course, act as res judicata against Gajraj Singh.

It does, however, decide as between Sitla Bux Singh and Kirat Singh that the former is the nearest male collateral relative of Sher Bahadur Singh.

I think I am also justified in deducing from the Subordinate Judge's decision that there are very serious doubts as to the validity of Musammat Dilraj Kuar's and Musammat Sheoraj Kuar's Wills, which form the basis of Gajraj Singh's claim to the property.

The Commissioner has ordered mutation in Gajraj Singh's favour upon the basis of these Wills. But this means that the taluqa will pass to an entirely new family: and considering the history of the estate I do not think that this should be allowed, until the claimant has established his title in the Civil Courts. I think that prima facie the nearest male relative of Sher Bahadur Singh has a much stronger title.

I would, therefore, set aside the Commissioner's order and restore the order of the Court of first instance, leaving each party to bear their own costs. I pass no orders as to the handing over of possession of the property until the record has been considered by the Senior Member.

HOLMS, S. M.—The case turns to a great extent on the point of view, adopted as to Musammat Dilraj Kuar's Will, whether it should be treated as valid until impugned in the Civil Court by a suit to which Gajraj Singh is a party or whether there are sufficient reasons to treat it as invalid for the purposes of this mutation case. In view of the history of the estate I am not prepared to dissent from the view taken by my colleague and I agree to the order proposed to be passed.

Appeal allowed.

Thakur BISHNATH SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 5—'Qabzadari', meaning of—Right of occupancy.

The word "qabzadari" in a decree made at the last Settlement is not to be invariably construed to mean right of occupancy. The meaning to be attached to the term must be ascertained from a careful consideration of the claim made before, and the judgment recorded by the Settlement Officer.

Where, therefore, the Settlement Officer's finding was that the appellant's ancestors were never the proprietors of the village but had been treated as proprietors on the strength of many years' possession of the village as lessees:

Held, that the appellant could not be deemed to possess a right of occupancy under section 5 of Oudh Rent Act.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Lucknow Division, dated the 4th September 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector of Rai Bareli District, in a case of enhancement of rent.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—(February 6th, 1915.)—The only point raised on behalf of appellant is that he is not an occupancy tenant as defined in section 5, Oudh Rent Act, and that, therefore, his rent cannot be enhanced under section 33. The lower Courts have found that he is an occupancy tenant; but in this I am afraid I am unable to agree with them.

Appellant holds his land under a Settlement Order of August 31st, 1870, by which he (and others) were decreed "kabzadari dawami kabil wirasat na-kabil intikkal". But the word "kabzadari" was so loosely used at that time that [as laid down in Baldeo Bakhsh Singh v. Chaudhrain Sahib-un-nissa (1)] it is necessary to examine the Settlement Officer's order to ascertain whether there is any reason to believe that the word "kabzadari" was not intended to mean occupancy rights.

When we do so, we find that the Settlement Officer's finding is that appellant's ancestors were never the proprietors of the village. Consequently they could not be deemed to possess a right of occupancy under section 5, Oudh Rent Act.

(1) Selected Decision No. 11 of 1912.

The Settlement Officer, however, goes on to say that appellant's ancestors had been treated as proprietors, on the strength of many years' possession of the village as lessees. He, therefore, treated them as quasi-proprietors (as an act of grace) and gave them "kabzadari dawami" in the land actually in their cultivation. We are thus faced with the anamolous position that appellant has not a stronger, but a weaker, status than the occupancy tenant, as defined in the Act: and yet he is in a far stronger position in reality than the latter, for on a strict interpretation of the law he cannot have his rent enhanced under section 33, but can only have it enhanced at the time of Settlement under section 79, Revenue Act, as the holder of a heritable, non-transferable lease holding under a judicial decision.

For the above reasons I see no option but to set aside the orders of the lower Courts, and to dismiss respondent's suit. I would make parties bear their own costs.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 5, occupancy rights, claim of, under—Proprietary rights—Inconsistent claims—Relinquishment of under-proprietary rights, effect of—Portion added to holding not insignificant part of holding, effect of.

Occupancy rights cannot be decreed under section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act in favour of persons in whose favour is also decreed a prima facie claim to under-proprietary rights. [p. 654, col. 1.]

The mere fact that sub-settlement was refused with the ancestors of the appellants, does not affect their under-proprietary rights in the land held as sir or nankar but if they made a petition relinquishing all claims to the village and to sir and nankar the petition is fatal to the appellants' claim as under-proprietors but it cannot affect their claim to occupancy rights in land in which those rights have been established. [p. 654, cols. 1 & 2.]

Selected Decision No. 2 of 1912 does not apply to cases where the portion added to a holding is not an insignificant part of the total, and when there is nothing to show that there has not been any alteration in the rent after it came under cultivation. [p. 654, col. 2.]

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 2nd September 1914, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(March 8th, 1915.)—The Assistant Collector has certainly gone wrong in neglecting the proviso to section 5 of the Rent Act and decreeing rights of occupancy when he also decrees a prima facie claim to under-proprietary rights. I cannot accept the Commissioner's view of the decision of 20th January 1866. Mr. H. S. Reid, the then Commissioner, found that the respondents in the appeal before him, the ancestors of the present appellant, were the old zemindars, but their tenure of a lease continuously under the Raja during the twelve years which preceded annexation was not proved: that is to say, the lands were not held "with some degree of continuousness" under rules 2 and 3 of the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act, 1866. He, therefore, refused sub-settlement. There was no reason, however, why under-proprietary rights in the land held by the former proprietors as sir or nankar under rule 10 should be affected by this decision. I am inclined, however, to agree with the Commissioner that the petition dated 31st January 1867, relinquishing all claims to the village and to sir and nankar, is fatal to the appellant's claim to hold as under-proprietor. Objection is taken to the admissibility of this in evidence, because it is alleged it should have been stamped as a conveyance under the former Stamp Act, III of 1862. This objection is not taken clearly in the grounds of appeal before me, and evidently was not raised before either of the lower Courts or it would have been mentioned in their judgment. The document appears to me to be of the nature of a release rather than that of conveyance and put forward at the time it is, I do not think the objection can have weight. As I have said above, I cannot accept the Commissioner's view that the effect of the petition is to show that the petitioner never possessed a proprietary right in the land in suit. All that he gave up was his claim to the village and to sir and nankar. There is no reason why it should affect his claim to occupancy rights, which from the Commissioner's judgment of 1866 seem to be established with regard to the lands which were cultivated or held by the appellant's predecessors from the time of the first Regular Settlement. Appellant urges that to the list of these lands should be added a number of plots which were shown as Usar at the first Regular Settlement. They constitute a considerable portion of the 27 bighas, and he argues that, under Selected Decision No. 2 of 1912, they should be treated as an integral part of the occupancy holding. The facts are very different. They are not an insignificant part of the total, and there is nothing to show that there has not been any alteration in the rent after they came under cultivation. He further argues that as plots Nos. 258 and 259 were cultivated at the time of the first Regular Settlement by Sheobhikh Dube, who was also a former zemindar, the appellant has occupancy rights in them. He urges that he obtained them by transfer from Sheobhikh; but of this there is no evidence.

I would, therefore, set aside the orders of the lower Courts and decree the suit and cancel the notice of ejectment in the following plots, in which occupancy rights under section 5 have been established:—

Numbers 17, 133, 276, 284, 19, 20, 23/1 and 23/2, 26/4, 24, 115/1 and 115/2, 134 and 552, and dismiss the suit in respect of the remaining plots. As neither party is wholly successful, they will bear their own costs throughout.

Jurisdiction—Civil or Revenue Court—Suit for joint possession—Shamilat land—Muafi—Ala lambardar—Occupancy rights not in question—Pleadings—Adverse possession and tenancy inconsistent.

A suit for joint possession of shamilat land made over to the defendant as ala lambardar and in muafi, the ala lambardari and muafi having come to an end without touching the question of defendant's title to occupancy rights, is cognisable by the Civil Courts. [p. 655, col. 2.]

All questions of title to occupancy rights in the land are quite outside the case so framed. [p. 655, col. 2.]

A man cannot be allowed to plead in the same case that he is an owner by adverse possession against a plaintiff and that he is a tenant by contract under that plaintiff. [p. 655, col. 2; p. 656, col. 1.]

Second appeal from an order of the Divisional Judge, Gujranwala Division, dated the 12th January 1913.

Messrs. Gokal Chand Narang and Deo Raj Sawhny, for the Appellants.

Mr. Noor-ud-Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Briefly stated the history of this case is as follows: The plaintiffs claimed in Revenue Court partition of a certain area of shamilat.—That Court, observing that plaintiffs were not in possession, ruled that the plaintiffs must go to a Civil Court and obtain possession before they could ask a Revenue Court to effect the partition. Plaintiffs, therefore, brought the present suit in the Court of the Munsif, Gujranwala, for "possession by partition" of 120 kanals of land, the plaintiffs' share out of 581 kanals, etc., etc. The Munsif, after framing issues, gave plaintiffs a decree for joint possession to the extent of 120 kanals out of 581 kanals. He went on to note that partition could not be effected by a Civil Court, which was quite correct. Two of the defendants, however, Sarang Khan and Shahabal Khan, who were in actual possession of the greater part of the land in suit, appealed to the Divisional Judge, who accepted the appeal and returned the plaint to the plaintiffs for presentation in the Court of the Collector or an Assistant Collector of the first grade, on the ground that the suit was not one cognisable by a Civil Court. The plaintiffs have now come up to this Court with this appeal.

In my opinion the lower Appellate Court has wholy misunderstood the nature of this litigation. The order of the Revenue Court to the plaintiffs was an inconvenient order, to say the least of it. It would have been better if the Revenue Court had directed the plaintiffs to sue for a declaration of title and not for possession, and if it had done so, much trouble would have been avoided. The plaintiffs were misled by it into suing for possession by partition, but the Munsif quite fairly avoided the difficulty by giving a decree for joint possession, on the basis of which the plaintiffs could proceed to the Revenue Court, and ask for partition.

Mr. Agnew in his judgment purports to follow Hira Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1), but he overlooks the fact that that case is quite different from the present one. No doubt in both cases it was a question of land made over to an individual as ala lambardar and in muafi, the ala lambardari and muafi afterwards coming to an end. But here the similarity of the two cases ends. In the case in the Punjab Record the plaintiff sued for dispossession of the defendant, not for joint possession, and, as the defendant pleaded that he was a tenant and it was apparently obvious from the plaint itself that he had been a tenant, it was natural for the Court to hold that the suit was one for a Revenue Court, and not for a Civil Court.

But here the plaintiffs by their suit do not wish to disturb any occupancy rights. They only wish for a formal decree for joint possession as owners along with the defendants, that is to say, something hardly distinguishable from a mere declaration of title. All questions of title to occupancy rights in portions of the land seem to me to be quite outside the present case.

Again, a fatal objection to the defendants being allowed to plead their occupancy rights in the present suit is this, that their original defence was that they held adverse possession as owners, and it is obviously impossible to allow a man to plead in the same case that he is an owner by adverse possession against a plaintiff and that he is a tenant by contract under the plaintiff.

Mr. Agnew also takes exception to the Munsif's order that on partition a portion of land which was planted with trees should be allotted to the defendant who planted the trees. This, no doubt, is correct; but it is a minor matter and I must, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Divisional Judge and direct him to re-hear the appeal with reference to the above remarks. Stamp in this appeal will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Jhansi Division, dated the 25th March 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Banda District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The Commissioner has found, as a matter of fact, that the appellant agreed not to eject the respondent so long as he paid rent, in consideration of the receipt of the large amount of arrears due from a previous tenant, and it is not alleged that there is no evidence to support this finding. This being so, I think that the conclusion come to is perfectly correct, that the appellant is estopped from ejecting the tenant so long as he pays the present rent or possibly an enhanced rent in the future. It is urged that such an agreement must be in writing, but no reason is given for this contention.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Crown.

Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar and G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal preferred against the acquittal of accused Nos. 1 and 2, who were charged with offences under section 326, Indian Penal Code.

The case for the prosecution is that there were disputes between the 1st and 2nd accused and P. W. No. 7, who is the brother of P. W. No. 1, in respect of the affairs of a certain fund and that on the night of 15th May 1914 the two accused and two others, who were discharged by the Magistrate without a charge being framed, caused grievous hurt to P. W. Nos. 1 and 2. It is alleged that there was a meeting of the share-holders of the fund on the day in question, that it was proposed that the first accused and P. W. No. 7 should be removed from the office and P. W. Nos. 1 and 2 should be appointed, that 1st and 2nd accused did not consent to this and the meeting broke up, that on the same night, as P. W. No. 7 was returning at about 11 P. M., he was waylaid by the accused, that P. W. No. 1, who is the brother of P. W. No. 7 turned up and that the accused attacked him and also P. W. No. 2 when he came to the scene.

The Magistrate discharged accused Nos. 3 and 4 without framing a charge against them, and it is not alleged before me that the discharge is erroneous. On the contrary it is conceded that on the evidence they could not be held guilty of any offence.

The Magistrate acquitted the 1st and 2nd accused, mainly on the ground that in the telegram sent by P. W. No. 7 on the night of the occurrence no mention is made of the 1st and 2nd accused and that P. W. Nos. 3 and 7 fabricated Exhibit I for the purpose of implicating the two accused. It seems to me that, if these findings are correct, the Magistrate was justified in refusing to place any reliance upon the prosecution witnesses. Exhibit II is a telegram admittedly sent on the night of the occurrence by P. W. No. 7, and it is not disputed that when he sent the telegram he was aware of all the facts and that, if the prosecution evidence is true, he must have been aware of the fact that 1st and 2nd accused were the assailants. The telegram, Exhibit II, sent to the Superintendent of Police, Coimbatore, runs as follows: "Two persons mortally wounded expiring, outrage committed by neigbours. Pray immediate attention with medical officer. Copy Sub-Magistrate Coimbatore and Sub-Inspector Metlupalayam."

The evidence of the prosecution is that P. W. No. 1 went to the Railway station at Periayanayakkanpalayam to give the message that, as he did not know English, he gave Exhibit I to the Court witnesses Nos. 1 and 2, who were Railway Officials at the station, and that Exhibit II, which was an abridgement of Exhibit I, was sent as P. W. No. 7 had not sufficient money to pay for all the words which Exhibit I contained. Exhibit I contains the names of the four accused who were charged in this case as being the assailants of P. W. Nos. 1 and 2. As pointed out by the Magistrate it is difficult to believe that with Exhibit I before them the persons sending the telegram would have sent it in the terms of Exhibit II. The whole case for the prosecution on this part of the subject has been considered very carefully and in detail by the first class Magistrate and I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that it is difficult to reconcile the contradictory statements made by Court witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 and P. W. Nos. 3 and 7 as to the circumstances under which Exhibit I was executed. One significant fact is that Exhibit I which ought to have been sent to the head office along with the message, if the Statement of Court witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 is to be believed, is said to have remained in the station and is produced from Periayanayakkanpalayam station. I agree with the Magistrate in thinking that the probabilities are all against Exhibit I being the original statement given by P. W. No. 7 on the night of the occurrence and that very probably it was subsequently written and filed in the station for the purpose of lending colour to the prosecution story and for explaining away the fact that no names were mentioned in the telegram sent on the very night of the occurrence.

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR v. NARAYANA NAYUDU.

Mr. Grant argues that it may well be that the Court witnesses Nos. 1 and 2, who got Exhibit I from P. W. No. 7 who did not know English and also received from him Rs. 19-8-0 to send the telegram, Exhibit II, used the minimun number of words possible for the purpose of misappropriating a portion of the money. The force of the argument is entirely lost when it is remembered that the receipt (Exhibit D) for Rs. 19-8-0, the money actually paid by P. W. No. 7, was given that very night and the money was sent to the head office as usual. It also appears from the evidence that the sum of Rs. 19-8-0 sent to the head office was in excess of the number of words contained in the telegram (Exhibit II) and that the head office asked for an explanation from the Court witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 as to why a larger amount was levied. It is, therefore, clear, that no motive can be attributed to Court witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 for having abridged the telegram if, as a matter of fact, Exhibit I was the original from which the telegram (Exhibit II) was written. Except the desire to misappropriate a portion of the money, no other motive is attributed to Court witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 for having sent Exhibit II without any reference to the name of the assailant, and, if this falls to the ground, it is difficult to conceive why Exhibit II was sent without mentioning any names, if, as a matter of fact, Exhibit I contained all the names of the assailants. The only reasonable explanation is that Exhibit I was not the statement as originally given. If this were so, the evidence of P. W. Nos. 3 and 7, who are said to have attested and signed Exhibit I, is open to grave suspicion. It is pretty certain that the prosecution witnesses have not scrupled to introduce a false document for the purpose of gaining a conviction. Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the Magistrate was justified in treating the evidence of the prosecution with great suspicion. There can be no doubt that P. W. Nos. 1 and 2 received serious injuries but the question is, who were the assailants. It is admitted that the assault was committed at 11 o'clock on a dark night and the whole question turns upon the identity of the assailants. It is argued by Mr. Grant that the admitted fact that there were quarrels between the parties as regards the affairs of the nidhi, goes a long way to show that the accused must have committed the offence, while on the contrary it is argued by the Vakil for the accused that the fact of ill-feeling between the parties accounts for the false charge being brought against them. In cases of this kind the difficulty is that very often the fact that a crime has been committed is used as a convenient peg whereon to hang a false charge against one's enemies, and I am not prepared to hold that because there were disputes between the parties the inference is irresistible that the accused were the assailants. The principles which ought to guide the Courts in case of appeals against acquittals have been considered by Justices Spencer and Seshagiri Aiyar in Criminal Appeal No. 317 of 1914, and I agree with them in thinking that the Court ought not to interfere with an acquittal by a Magistrate who had the witnesses before him and arrived at conclusions of fact with this great advantage in his favour, unless the Judge was clearly wrong and the judgment either perverse or based on obvious error of procedure.

I have gone through the evidence carefully and giving the case my best consideration, I cannot say that the acquittal was not justified by the evidence on record.

I dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. C. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, having been required by an order under section 488 of the Code of the Criminal Procedure to pay Rs. 25 monthly by way of maintenance to the respondent who was his wife, applied to the Magistrate to cancel the order on the ground that he had been divorced from her. The Magistrate held that the divorce had not been shown to be duly effected, and declined to cancel the order. The applicant now comes to this Court in revision.

The application purports to be made under section 489 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is suggested that that section has no application, since the change of circumstances referred to in it is a change in the financial circumstances of the parties and not in their status. This appears to have been the view held in In the matter of the petition of Din Muhammad (1), but it was held by a majority of the Judges in the Full Bench case of Shah Abu Ilyas v. Ulfat Bibi (2), that where a husband contended that he was no longer liable to pay maintenance on the ground that he had divorced his wife, it was the duty of the Court to entertain and consider such plea, and whatever may be the exact meaning of the words of sections 488, 489 and 490 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it appears clear that this is the case.

In Ma Tin v. Maung An Gyi (3), it was pointed out that where a wife who had obtained an order for maintenence returned and lived with her husband, the effect was to cancel the order for maintenance with effect from the date of her return, and it appears to be obvious that where the husband alleges that he is no longer liable to pay maintenance, he is entitled to have his allegation enquired into. This is not a matter for a Civil Court as the Magistrate apparently was inclind to hold: where a divorce is alleged and denied, it is the duty of the Magistrate to hold an inquiry and come to a decision. Here the applicant, who is a Muhammadan and who claims to be a member of the Hanafi sect, states that he has divorced his wife by pronouncing talak three times.

The Magistrate has held that only one witness deposes that the applicant is a Hanafi Sunni, and that although he states he is not under the influence of his uncle, the latter is living with him in the same house. The significance of this last remark is not clear without a reference to the previous proceedings in which the applicant sought to show that he had divorced the respondent, and in which it was found that he was a minor and was acting under the influence of his uncle. In the present proceedings, the applicant has given his age as 21; there appears to be no reason for doubting the truth of this statement, which was not contradicted. It is true that he is living with his uncle, but his uncle was away at the time that the application was filed, and there is no evidence that he was acting under compulsion from his uncle. A person who is of age cannot be presumed to be acting under the influence or compulsion of his relations with whom he is living in the absence of any evidence, and the mere statement of the respondent that he was induced by his uncle to divorce her is not sufficient proof.

(1) 5 A. 226.

(2) 19 A. 50; A. W. N. (1896) 173.

(3) U. B. R. (1904) 2nd Qr., Crl. Pro. Code p. 23; 1 Cr. L. J. 870.

Whether the applicant is a Hanafi Sunni or not, appears to be only material if compulsion has been proved or if the divorce was communicated to the respondent by a third party. There is evidence that the applicant drew up a deed of divorce in which the talak was pronounced and sent it by the witness Ismail to the respondent who refused to listen to it. He also sent her a post card on which the words "talak" were written in Burmese in red ink, but the respondent refused to accept it. But besides this, it is proved that during the course of the proceedings while the respondent was in the court-house, the applicant pronounced the talak in her hearing three times, and he repeated the word again in her presence in Court. There is no doubt that his intention to divorce her has existed for some time and has been deliberate, and apart from any other evidence the pronouncement of the talak in the Court was a sufficient divorce. Muhammadan Law does not give a wife any authority, except possibly in accordance with a contract entered into at the time of the marriage, to prevent her husband divorcing her by the pronouncing of talak. The law in the case of Muhammadans belonging to the Hanafi sect is clearly stated in the case of Asha Bibi v. Kadir Ibrahim Rowther (4).

In the absence of any rebutting evidence, I am of opinion that the Magistrate was not justified in holding that the applicant was not entitled to divorce the respondent in accordance with the Hanafi Law, that in accordance with either the Hanafi Law or the Muhammadan Law applying generally to Sunnis the divorce has been clearly proved and that the respondent is not entitled to further maintenance with effect from the 23rd November 1914, the date on which the applicant pronounced the divorce in Court.

THE SECRETARY, MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, NAGPUR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Central Provinces Municipal Act (XVIII of 1889), s. 66 (5)—Notice requiring alteration or demolition—Reasonable time—Starting point.

A notice given by a Municipal Committee requiring a party to alter or demolish a building is bad unless given within a reasonable time. [p. 661, col. 2.]

What is "reasonable time" is determined according to the circumstances of the case and with particular reference to the means and ability of the person by whom the duty is to be discharged. [p. 662, col. 1.]

Where a work necessarily spreading over a considerable time is concerned, time should start from its inception. [p. 662, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Assistant Commissioner and Magistrate, first Class, Nagpur, dated the 21st September 1914.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Applicant.

Mr. V. D. Kale, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant for revision has been summarily tried and fined Rs. 50 under section 139, Central Provinces Municipal Act, for failing to demolish a house as directed by a notice issued under section 66 (5) ibid.

The structure in question has taken the place of a house which the applicant pulled down in compliance with a notice issued by the Building Sub-Committee of the Municipal Committee, Nagpur, on the 28th May 1913. The old house was in a dangerous state and action under section 92 of the Municipal Act was taken in respect of it. The applicant began to erect the new superstructure on the existing foundations in December 1913 or January 1914, but omitted to give notice of his intention to do so as required by section 66 (1) of the Act. He was accordingly served on the 6th May 1914 with a notice directing him to remove all the work he had done within four days. This is the notice which he has been fined for disobeying and it was signed by the appropriate authority on the 29th April.

On the 11th May the applicant addressed to the Secretary of the Municipal Committee a petition, which forms Exhibit P-I of the trying Magistrate's record. In this document he represented that no new foundations had been laid and that the work was "almost complete." He also prayed that the house might be inspected and undertook to "comply as far as possible" with any instructions that might be considered necessary. The reply (Exhibit P-III), dated the 18th July, was that the applicant, having failed to give the prescribed notice of his intention to build, must demolish the house as already ordered, on pain of prosecution.

The trial which resulted from the applicant's continued failure to pull down his new superstructure began on the 21st September. He was defended by a Pleader, and the plea advanced in reply to the statement made by the Magistrate under section 242, Criminal Procedure Code, is thus recorded:—

"I ought to have got the notice while the house was in course of construction. I got the notice (Exhibit P-I). The signature on it is mine. I did not pull down the house as ordered. I had no permission. I believed as the foundations were old that no permission was necessary."

The Magistrate held that section 66 (5) of the Municipal Act covers a case of raising a new superstructure on old foundations and convicted the applicant,

The first point pressed on this Court is that the Committee was bound by section 66 (5) to give notice to demolish within a reasonable time from the commencement of the new superstructure, and also to prove at the trial that the delay of four to five months was justified. The contention that notice had not been given within a reasonable time seems to me to have been fairly advanced at the trial in the plea above quoted and it is not a little surprising that the Building Inspector, the sole witness for the prosecution, was not examined-in-chief on the point. In cross-examination the witness said:—

"I had seen the house in course of construction. When the notice was served, the walls were in process of construction. The building was finished in May or June."

In showing cause against the Rule issued to him the learned District Magistrate has adopted the following statement obtained by him for the purpose from the trying Magistrate:—

"Before a notice under section 66 (5) issues, the following conditions have to be satisfied:

(a) The structure built without sanction has either to be complained of or noticed by some responsible Municipal officer;

(b) after complaint or report inquiry has to be made;

(c) after inquiry sanction to the issue of notice has to be obtained.

At any one of these stages there may be considerable delay amounting perhaps to several months."

The District Magistrate requests that if this explanation be not accepted, a reference be made by the Court to the Municipal Committee to obtain detailed particulars of its proceedings in the matter. He represents further that this concession may fairly be granted, inasmuch as the Committee is making "great efforts to introduce structural improvement in the buildings of the city."

The Municipal Committee was represented at the hearing by a Pleader who was, however, unable to furnish the missing particulars as to time of discovery, report to Building Sub-Committee, etc. And I cannot see my way to allowing any concession to a powerful Municipality in a matter like the present. The Committee employs a Building Engineer and a Public Prosecutor, presumably to ensure that infringements of the law as to building are promptly detected and adequately prosecuted: it should, therefore, have no difficulty in presenting its cases for trial. Unless then the notice now under consideration was prima facie given "within a reasonable time," I think it was bad and that the applicant is consequently entitled to acquittal.

Now as remarked by Blackburn, J., in Brighty v. Norton (1) it is very difficult to say what is a reasonable time. There is generally, however, less difficulty in deciding whether a particular time is unreasonable or not. In Stroud's Judicial Dictionary (page 1664, Volume III, 2nd Edition) it is said that where a duty has to be discharged within a reasonable time, such time will have to be determined according to the circumstances of the case, and with particular reference to the means and ability of the person by whom the discharge is to be made. Goodwyn v. Cheveley (2), Postlethwaite v. Freeland (3) and Hick v. Raymond (4) are cited as authorities for this proposition. The last of these cases was decided by the House of Lords, and Lord Ashbourne remarked:—

"What is the meaning of this expression 'reasonable time'? It is obvious that 'reasonable' cannot mean a definite fixed time. It would not be 'reasonable' if it was not sufficiently elastic to allow the consideration of circumstances, which all reason would require to be taken into account."

The effect of the three decisions taken together seems to be that all the actual circumstances must be taken into account. A similar interpretation may fairly be put on the expression where a statutory power is to be exercised. One more favourable to the Municipality is not called for, in view of the principle that a Municipal Act which touches the private rights of individuals must be most carefully construed, without unwarrantable severity on the one hand or unjustifiable lenity on the other: see Ramdularay v. Chhindwara Municipality (5).

It is contended on behalf of the Committee that the starting point of the "reasonable time" allowed by section 66 (5) may quite well be completion of the building. On the other hand, the applicant's learned Counsel urges that where a work necessarily spreading over a considerable time is concerned, time should start from its inception. The latter view seems to me the more correct one, at any rate in the case of a complete house. But generally speaking the question will be, when the unsanctioned work came to the notice of a Municipal authority concerned to stop it, and in this connection it may be necessary to decide whether with due diligence discovery might not have been made sooner.

(5) 6 Ind. Cas. 431; 6 N. L. R. 53 at p. 55.

The structure with which we are here concerned is 28 feet long and 25 feet broad, contains three rooms and abuts on a public thoroughfare. There is no question of any mere addition or alteration which might easily escape the notice of a passer-by. Exhibit P-III shows that the walls, which are said to be 8 feet high, had been completed by the middle of March, and yet seven weeks elapsed before notice to demolish was served on the applicant. It is not a sufficient explanation of delay like this to say that months may pass before a considered decision can be reached by the Building Sub-Committee. Such a body is presumably constituted with the object of accelerating the despatch of public business, and if its decision is unduly delayed, the circumstance must be accounted for by its members, not by the person against whom the decision is directed. Where the Act has fixed a time for action by the Committee in regard to a building, e. g., in section 66 (3), that time is short, and so furnishes an indication that the Legislature expects promptitude of Municipal Commissioners.

I hold that the Municipal Committee should have explained the delay of four to five months in serving notice on the applicant, the plea advanced by him clearly raising an issue in this connection and the burden of proof resting on the Committee. In this view I set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded. I have the less hesitation in reaching this conclusion in that the new building is not alleged in this Court to be insanitary or otherwise undesirable, while the time (four days) allowed in the notice to demolish the old one was prima facie unduly short.

It thus becomes unnecessary to consider the applicant's contention that section 66 (5) of the Municipal Act has no application where a new building is erected on the foundations of one recently demolished without any increase of superstructure. This is rested on the omission of all reference to re-erection in the said provision, although both erection and re-erection are dealt with in sub-sections (1) and (2) of section 65. An obvious objection to the interpretation thus contended for is that although notice of intention to re-erect is compulsory, there would be no penalty for failure to give notice. It seems to me more reasonable to hold that "erected" in sub-section (5) includes "re-erected," "re-erection" being merely a special case of "erection." The explanation which immediately succeeds sub-section (5) is extensive, not limiting in its nature: see Nasibun v. Preosunker Ghose (6).

MI KIN—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 380, 562—Proceedings submitted to Sub-Divisional Magistrate—Jurisdiction—Power to acquit.

A Magistrate to whom proceedings are submitted as provided by section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code may pass such sentence or make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been heard by him. He is not prevented from acquitting the accused, if on a perusal of the evidence he comes to the conclusion that conviction should not have taken place.

Mr. J. N. Basu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The accused was convicted of stealing a pig. The second class Magistrate recorded a formal finding convicting the accused under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code, and submitted the proceedings to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under section 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with a view to the accused being released on security. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate on a perusal of the evidence came to the conclusion that the accused should not have been convicted, and thereupon acquitted her.

It is now suggested that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had no power to pass an order of acquittal. It was pointed out in the case of Morali v. Emperor (1) that the provisos to section 562 and section 380 are similar to section 349 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but that the proviso to section 562 refers to the case of an offender who is convicted by a Magistrate of the third Class or a Magistrate of the second Class not specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, whereas section 349 deals with the case of an accused person who has not been actually convicted, but in respect of whom a Magistrate of the second or third Class records the opinion that he is guilty. There is no doubt that where an accused person is forwarded to a District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate in accordance with the provisions of section 349 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, such Magistrate may acquit the accused.

I am of opinion that it was not the intention, in a case in which a conviction has been formally recorded under section 562, that the Magistrate to whom the accused is sent should not have the same powers as he undoubtedly has in the case of an accused person sent to him under section 349. The words of section 380 are sufficiently broad. It is distinctly stated that a Magistrate to whom proceedings are submitted as provided by section 562 may pass such sentence or make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been heard by him. He could obviously have acquitted a person tried by him on a charge of theft, and if it had been intended that he should not have had this power when a case tried by a Subordinate Magistrate was submitted to him, this provision of law would, it appears to me, have been otherwise worded. If this view is not correct, it would appear to follow that even if the Sub Divisional Magistrate considered that the accused was clearly not guilty, he was still bound either to pass sentence or to bind over the accused under section 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The only alternative apparently would be to submit the case to the District Magistrate or to the High Court in revision.

I agree with Mr. Justice Irwin in thinking that it is difficult to suppose that this was the intention of the Legislature. I have no doubt that the Sub-Divisional Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 99, 141, 149.—Right to defend immoveable property—Person in possession, whether can use force—Test of criminality—Resistance to aggressor, right of.

Every person has a right, subject to the restrictions contained in section 99, Indian Penal Code, to defend his immoveable property. [p. 665, col. 2.]

Once a man is in possession of his own property, he is entitled to use force to defend it. [p. 665, col. 2.]

In cases where a free fight has taken place for the possession of certain property between two parties, the test of criminality is—was accused in possession or not in possession at the time when the alleged offence was committed. [p. 665, col. 2.]

It is no offence under section 149, Indian Penal Code, to resist an aggressor unless the aggression be in execution of the law or of some legal process. [p. 665, col. 2.]

Where the accused and his party were entitled to enter upon certain land and to reap the crop and the complainant with his party came upon the scene to remonstrate and (presumably also) to prevent them from reaping the crop and a fight took place in which persons on both sides were injured:

Held, that the primary object of the accused party having been to retain possession of the land and to reap crop, and not to obtain possession of any property or "to enforce any right or supposed right", they were not guilty of committing any criminal offence by the mere entry on the land or by defending the accused's property against aggression. [p. 665, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Fawcett, Judicial Commissioner of Sind.

Mr. T. G. Elphinstone, for the Appellants.

Mr. E. Raymond (Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The nine appellants have been convicted by the learned Judicial Commissioner of Sind under sections 149 and 325, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. Accused No. 1 has also been ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 300.

The complainant Umar had, for some years prior to 1913-14, cultivated pieces Nos. 6 & 7 of Survey No. 192. The land was let to him on an annual lease, and each year fresh permission to cultivate had to be obtained. For the year 1913-14 it was decided that Nos. 6 and 7 should not be given to Umar, but should be leased to Lashkarikhan, accused No. 1, and on the 20th October 1913 the latter received an ijazatnama or formal license to occupy the land. This led to the dispute which culminated in the present affray.

It is important to set out clearly what was implied by the charge as originally framed and as amended. Both charges postulate:

(1) an assembly of five or more persons;

(2) a common object;

(3) an act of grievous hurt done by a member of the assembly in pursuance of the common object.

The charges differ with respect to the second element. In the charge as originally drafted by the learned Judge at the opening of the trial, the common object was assumed to be as in the charge drafted by the Magistrate, which for this purpose runs as follows:

"Preventing complainant Umar Muhammad and others from entering on the land and reaping the crop."

In the charge as amended after the evidence was closed, an alternative is added, viz.:

"Or overcoming resistance or threatened resistance on the part of the complainant Umar Muhammad and others to the said crop being reaped by you or by others on your behalf:"

The charge, as originally framed, would mean that the accused and his party were on the land, and that they prevented or endeavoured to prevent the entry of Umar and his party. The question of possession is important and this charge implies that the accused were in possession. The alteration in the charge does not imply any change in the case for the prosecution on this point of fact, as is clearly stated by the learned Judge himself at the beginning of his judgment:

"The alteration involves no change of ground on the part of the prosecution. On the contrary it has been their case all along that the accused's party were reaping the crop, and the complainant's party went there to remonstrate and (presumably also) to prevent them from reaping it. That also is the case for the accused."

There can, therefore, be no question that the accused's party were in possession and were reaping the crop up to the time when the alleged offence began to be committed.

Further, it is not disputed that accused No. 1, by virtue of the ijazatnama, was entitled to possession of the land. Whether he was entitled to the crop or not is not free from doubt, but the better opinion appears to be that unless and until the Collector had conceded the crop to Umar, who was a trespasser, the crop would follow the grant of the land to accused No. 1. The learned Judge has accepted this view for the purposes of the judgment under appeal.

It follows that the accused and his party were entitled to enter upon the land and to reap the crop. The complainant and his party came upon the scene to remonstrate and (presumably also) to prevent them from reaping the crop. There was an affray in which persons on both sides were injured. The only point of fact as to which there appears to be any doubt is, who were the aggressors. The learned Judge holds that the accused's party were the aggressors. In coming to the conclusion he appears to have relied on the circumstance that the injuries were more numerous on the side of complainant's party, but this view is not in accordance with the medical evidence (Exhibit 53), which appears to show that the injuries on either side were much the same in point of severity. The probability is that the party out of possession would make the attack. The persons who come forward as eye-witnesses all appear to belong to the complainant's party with one exception, Sidik, and he is of the same caste. In the absence of independent evidence it is difficult to feel satisfied that the accused were the aggressors.

On these facts it would appear that the primary object of the accused's party was to retain possession of the land and to reap the crop. The learned Judge has, however, held that if they went to the land, prepared to overcome any resistance, their common object was within the terms of section 141, fourth, of the Indian Penal Code. We find ourselves unable to take this view. The Legislature has studiously confined itself to the words "take or obtain possession of any property", and the words "to enforce any right or supposed right" imply that the party using force uses it to enable him to exercise a right or supposed right, the exercise of which is denied to him by others. Here the accused were in full exercise of their rights when they were attacked by the other party.

Admittedly, accused No. 1 had a legal right to the possession of the land; his entry in it was peaceable, his right to reap the crop has been presumed by the learned Judge. Neither he nor any of the appellants committed any criminal offence by the mere entry on to the land.

Every person has a right, subject to the restrictions contained in section 99, Indian Penal Code, to defend his immoveable property or that of any other person against any act which is an offence falling under the definition of theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass, or which is an attempt to commit theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass. Appellants, therefore, having effected a peaceable entry on to the land, and being in possession of land and crop to which they were by presumption legally entitled, had a good right to prevent complainant's party from doing what they admittedly intended to do, viz., enter forcibly on to the land, and reap and take away the crop of the first appellant.

It is true that an assembly of five or more persons is an unlawful assembly if the common object of the persons is by means of criminal force to enforce a right or supposed right. But once a man is in possession of his own property, he is entitled to use force to defend it. In such a case as the present the test of criminality is—Was accused in possession or not in possession at the time when the alleged offence was committed? Was he defending his property, or was he attempting, by means of force, to obtain possession of it? It is no offence, under section 149, to resist an aggressor, unless the aggression be in execution of the law or of some legal process. The accused have been held guilty on the ground of collective responsibility, and if there was no unlawful assembly, that charge must fail. We are not concerned with their individual acts.

We reverse the convictions and order the appellants to be acquitted and discharged. The fine, if paid, should be refunded.

Mr. C. G. S. Pillay, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—Four persons were convicted on a charge of stealing a cow and calf and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment each. On the 29th October 1914 an appeal was presented in the Sessions Court by Maung Pe, second grade Advocate, on behalf of Maung E Maung, second grade Advocate for the appellants. On the same day the Sessions Judge passed the following order:—"The petition of appeal was presented by second grade Advocate Maung Pe of Meiktila on behalf of second grade Advocate Maung E Maung of Yamethin. Maung Pe has nothing to say in support of the appeal. As he appears on behalf of appellants' Advocate, I consider that a reasonable opportunity of being heard has been given. The judgment shows that the four appellants were all caught red handed. It is not necessary to send for the record. The appeals are summarily dismissed."

Section 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires that no appeal presented under section 419 shall be dismissed unless the appellant or his Pleader has had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same. There is ample authority for holding that reasonable opportunity is not given when the Advocate who appears is required to support his appeal on the same day, Ramtohal Dusadh v. Emperor (1) and Emperor v. Gurshida Balapa Jati (2). A fortiori when the Advocate who files the petition of appeal is not himself the Advocate for the appellant, a reasonalble opportunity for hearing the Advocate cannot be said to have been given when he is called upon forthwith to support the appeal. In this instance, moreover, the case was tried in one district and the Advocate who presented the appeal was practising in another district. The appeal again set out that the witnesses were not credible, and it was clearly a case in which the record should have been called for before orders were passed.

The order of the Sessions Judge is set aside, and he is directed to re-admit the appeal and give the appellants' Advocate an opportunity of being heard after notice.

Held, (1) that a trial conducted in a mode so materially different from that prescribed by law was not a proper trial;

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This is an unimportant case, except in so far as the points argued before us touch on matters of principle. As it happens, there is a principle of considerable importance which does arise.

What happened was this: cross-complaints were filed, one in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, the other in the Court of another Presidency Magistrate. The second was transferred for trial to the Chief Presidency Magistrate. He heard the evidence for the prosecution in each of the cases. Then, without framing a charge formally as required by section 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code and without following the provisions of sections 255, 256 and 257 in the first case, he dealt with it as if a charge had been framed and treated the evidence in the other case as defence evidence in the first. On that understanding, both cases were argued before him without any further evidence being taken, and both were decided. In doing this, the Magistrate followed a practice, we learn, which apparently has grown up in the course of years and for which the Chief Presidency Magistrate personally is not responsible. I do not wish to suggest that a trial conducted in that way would not be a fair trial, but it is a trial conducted in a mode materially different from that prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure. The provisions of that Code have to be followed, so far as they apply, by Presidency Magistrates, and those Magistrates are not at liberty to substitute for the procedure of the Code a procedure which has arisen by usage, however convenient the latter may be. We find it impossible to hold that a trial conducted in a mode so materially different from that prescribed by law is a proper trial. That it is materially different will appear by considering the provisions of Chapter XXI of the Code, which deals with trial of warrant cases and is applicable. According to the Code, the Magistrate ought to have framed a formal charge and to have called on the accused to plead to that charge. The accused then had to be required to state whether he wished to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, and he should have been called on to enter on his defence and produce his evidence. In fact, no formal charge was made, the accused was not asked whether he wished to re-call and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and he was not called on to produce his evidence. Evidence taken in another case, which included the examination-in-chief and cross-examination of the accused himself, was treated as evidence for the defence. It seems to me that the differences between the procedure followed and the legal procedure are of too fundamental and important a kind to be treated as irregularities cured by any of the sections in Chapter XLV of the Code. As I have said, the case is important only as illustrating a principle, the principle being that the provisions of the Code must be followed; they are not to be set aside in favour of a different procedure. We have been compelled to deal with this case as an illustration of the principle I have mentioned on account of what has been brought to our notice in the case. But the unimportance of the case in itself is such that it is quite unnecessary to direct a fresh trial. Therefore, the order which I would suggest is, that the conviction be set aside and the accused be acquitted and the fine, if paid, be refunded.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 256—Summons case tried together with warrant case—Procedure to be followed—Warrant case dismissed during trial—Summons case proceeded with—Right of accused to re-call and cross-examine prosecution witnesses—Right to re-call and cross-examine—Right refused—Prejudice—Burden of proof.

Where a summons case is tried together with a warrant case, the procedure to be followed is that of a warrant case.

Rajnarain Koonwar v. Lala Tamoli Raut, 11 C. 91, relied upon.

A summons case and a warrant case were tried together. During the trial the charge of the warrant case was dismissed and the charge of the summons case was proceeded with. The Magistrate refused to allow the accused to re-call and further examine the prosecution witnesses:

Held, that the refusal was illegal.

The privilege conferred by section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, is a substantive one and when denied, it is for the prosecution to show that the accused was not prejudiced by the denial.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Joint Magistrate of Bezwada, in Criminal Application No. 24 of 1914, preferred against that of the Court of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Bezwada, in Calendar Case No. 474 of 1913.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.—The chief ground urged in appeal is that the accused were prejudiced by the refusal of the Magistrate to allow them to re-call and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses.

The accused were tried for offences under sections 504 and 352 of the Indian Penal Code, and during the course of the proceedings the Magistrate dismissed the complaint under section 504 and proceeded with the charge under section 352.

When the summons case and a warrant case are tried together, the procedure to be followed is that provided for the warrant case: Rajnarain Koonwar v. Lala Tamoli Raut (1). The accused would, therefore, have been entitled under section 256 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to re-call and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses had the trial on both charges been proceeded with. They could not have anticipated that during the trial the charge under section 504 would have been dismissed, and it cannot be said that they were in default.

The refusal of the Magistrate to allow the accused to re-call and further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses was, therefore, illegal.

The next question is whether the accused were prejudiced. This is a difficult one to decide, as it may be that if cross-examination had been allowed as provided for in section 256 of the Criminal Procedure Code, facts may have been elicited favourable to them. The privilege conferred by that section is a substantial one, and when denied, it is for the prosecution to show that there was no prejudice. Mr. Nagabhushanam says that the accused were prejudiced and having regard to the evidence and the materials before me, I cannot say that he is wrong.

Two other grounds have been urged, namely, (1) that the Magistrate was wrong in having refused to issue a summons to the zemindar of Mylavaram and (2) that he ought to have dismissed the complaint owing to the absence of the complainant. These are matters within the discretion of the Magistrate and I do not think these form grounds for revision.

As I am of opinion that the procedure of the Magistrate in refusing permission to the accused to re-call and further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses is erroneous, I set aside the conviction and sentences and order the fines, if paid, to be refunded. The Magistrate will try the case and dispose of it according to law. It is desirable that the same Magistrate should not try the case.

Conviction set aside; Re-trial ordered.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 215—Cow lost from grazing ground—Taking money and promising to return cow, whether constitutes offence.

In order to constitute an offence under section 215, Indian Penal Code, it is necessary that the moveable property in question should have been taken out of the possession of some person by means of an offence punishable under the Code.

Where, therefore, the complainant's cow was lost from the grazing ground and the accused took Rs. 12 from him and promised to return the cow in ten days' time, but did not do so and subsequently refused to return either the cow or the money:

Held, that as there was no proof that any offence had been committed in respect of the cow, the accused could not be convicted under section 215, Indian Penal Code.

Hemraj v. Emperor, 6 Ind. Cas. 250; 11 Cr. L. J. 295, referred to.

Petition for revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 8th May 1914.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT,—Sharfa, petitioner, has been convicted of an offence under section 215, Indian Penal Code, and has been sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 15. His conviction was upheld on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Hissar.

The facts alleged are that Ilman's cow was lost from the grazing ground. Some days later he heard that Sharfa and others had it. He went to them and Sharfa took Rs. 12 from him promising to return the cow in ten days' time. He did not, however, keep his promise and subsequently refused to return either the cow or the money. To constitute an offence under section 215, Indian Penal Code, it is necessary that the moveable property in question should have been taken out of the possession of some person by means of an offence punishable under the Code. There is no evidence in the present case that the cow was taken out of the possession of Ilman by means of an offence. His own statement has all along been that the cow was lost. What he meant apparently was that it strayed away and subsequently came into the petitioner's possession.

The case reported in Hemraj v. Emperor (1) was very similar to the present one. In that case a buffalo had disappeared, but there was no evidence to prove that any offence had been committed in respect of it and the facts were compatible with the theory that it strayed away, and the Allahabad High Court set aside the conviction. In the present case, in my opinion, the conviction cannot stand. There is no proof that any offence has been committed in respect of the cow belonging to Ilman. It may have come into Sharfa's possession or it may not, but in any case he cannot be convicted under section 215, Indian Penal Code, merely because he took money from the complainant and promised to restore the cow, which promise he did not carry out.

I, therefore, allow the revision and, setting aside the conviction and sentence, acquit the petitioner who is discharged from his bail. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Revision allowed.

Saiyed Ali Mohammad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Under the provisions of section 435, Act V of 1898, a High Court has no power to call for the record of a case in which a Magistrate has passed orders under the provisions of section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as it is distinctly laid down that proceedings under Chapter XII of that Code are not proceedings within the meaning of section 435. There can be no contest as to this point. There has, however, been some difference of opinion in the High Courts with regard to the point, whether Chartered High Courts have or have not power to revise proceedings under Chapter XII by virtue of the authority conferred on them by their respective Charters. It is immaterial whether Chartered High Courts have or have not such a power. This Court is not a Chartered High Court. It is constituted under the provisions of Act XIV of 1891. Nothing in that Act gives it authority to revise criminal proceedings other than the authority which it possesses under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. This Court has no authority to revise proceedings except the authority given to it by that Code, and, as it is clear that under that Code it has no authority to set aside the Magistrate's order, I return the record leaving the Magistrate's order as it is.

ORDER.—The accused was charged with an offence punishable under section 430, Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge dealt with his appeal against his conviction under that section by referring to the reasons given in the judgment in a connected case in which his conviction was upheld on a charge of an offence punishable under section 379. In the latter, accused was alleged to have stolen stone from the bed of a tank, and the ownership of the tank and the bona fides of his claim to it were important. But they could not be decided in this case, in which accused's intention to cause wrongful loss was the essential matter to be considered. The accused's case in fact was that he cut the tank bund in order to build a new sluice there, the existing sluice being out of order, and this would be an offence punishable under section 430, only if the intention specified in section 425 as well as the other requisities of the former section were established. The learned Sessions Judge has not dealt with this aspect of the case. His decision is set aside and he is directed to re-hear the appeal in the light of the foregoing.

A Medical Officer's opinion that the injuries inflicted were not serious, which is based upon a misconception of facts, should be disregarded when the evidence shows that the injuries inflicted were one inch deep and they pierced the pleura, which, in the ordinary course of events, is sufficient to cause death.

Mr. C. Sydney Smith, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Sessions Judge has not considered the provisions of a law applicable to this offence having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted by the accused. Under section 300 (3), of the Indian Penal Code the offence is ordinarily murder if the bodly injury intended to be inflicted was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The accused in addition to other wounds inflicted a stab in the back one inch deep which pierced the pleura. This, in our opinion, was an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The Medical Officer, thinking the wound was only half an inch deep, stated in the wound certificate that the wounds were not serious. Before the Magistrate he deposed in answer to a question that that he had made this statement, but cannot, we think, have intended to repeat it in the light of the fuller information obtained at the post mortem examination. If the wound was of the serious character indicated, it cannot, in our opinion, be seriously suggested that there was any provocation which would take the case out of the section. We allow the appeal, convict the accused of murder under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentence him to transportation for life.

insufficiently stamped, examination of, optional—Stamped instrument admitted in evidence does not apply to criminal proceedings—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 405—Breach of trust—Conversion, evidence of.

Under section 33 of the Stamp Act it is optional to the Magistrate to examine or impound the instrument if it appears to be insufficiently stamped.

But the prohibition contained in the first part of section 35 that no instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose or acted upon unless it be duly stamped, does not apply to proceedings in a Criminal Court.

Where it is proved that the two accused or either of them were in fact entrusted with certain property as servants, and they set up a claim that it belongs to them, and refuse to return it, that in itself is evidence of conversion to justify a conviction under section 405, Indian Penal Code.

Babu Manmotha Nath Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

Babus Probodh Kumar Das and Kshitish Chandra Chakravarti, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Magistrate, in refusing to admit in evidence the alleged agreement of service of the accused, Pandit Deokinandan, was clearly in error. It was optional to him under section 33 of the Stamp Act to examine or impound the instrument if it appeared to be insufficiently stamped. But the prohibition contained in the first part of section 35 that no instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose or acted upon unless it be duly stamped, does not apply to proceedings in a Criminal Court [see proviso (d) to that section]. The Magistrate, therefore, ought to have taken that document into consideration and come to a finding upon it. With regard to conversion, the opinion of the Magistrate is not correct. It is clear that a servant can be charged with criminal breach of trust under section 405, Indian Penal Code. If in this case it is proved that the two accused (or either of them) were in fact entrusted with the property as servants and now set up a claim that it belongs to them, and refuse to return it, that in itself would be evidence of conversion, which might justify a conviction under the section. If the trial is continued against the accused Pandit Deokinandan, it should be continued also against the accused Baburam.

This Rule is made absolute against both the accused, and the order of discharge set aside. The trial will be resumed from the stage immediately preceding the order of discharge.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 15th September 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Ballia District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 23rd, 1915).—As regards ground 4, I do not think there is any estoppel. The land-holder collected rent from the appellant in the three years when he was recorded as occupancy tenant. This is to some extent evidence in support of his claim to have succeeded to the former occupancy tenant, but not very strong evidence, and is certainly not an estoppel. The first ground is, I think, a good one. The Additional Commissioner has written as to the evidence of what he terms "many apparently respectable witnesses" He writes:—"It cannot be said that the evidence breaks down in any way. At the same time I am altogether sceptical as to its reliability. I consider that in a case of this kind the adoption is on the face of it very suspicious, and I would accept no evidence short of documentary evidence of adoption coming from the hand of the person who had a right to adopt." It is perfectly true that in a case of this sort, the oral evidence should be carefully scrutinised, but I do not think that the Additional Commissioner was justified on general grounds in discarding the oral evidence altogether. In Selected Decison No. 9 of 1914, when oral evidence was discredited on merely general reasons not affecting the credit of any particular deponent, it was held that such discredit of the evidence was an error in law which allowed the supperior Court to interfere on second appeal. This decision governs the present case.

I would, therefore, set aside the order of the Additional Commissioner and direct the present Commissioner to re-hear the appeal, costs following the event.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 151, O. XXI, r. 16—Application for execution by transferee of decree—Notice to parties—Decree set aside—Execution—Procedure not given.

An ex parte decree obtained in a mortgage suit was transferred but the transferee neither got his name substituted in the place of the decree-holder nor was any notice under Order XXI, rule 16 of the Civil Procedure Code served either upon the decree-holder or upon the judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor applied to set aside the ex parte decree making only the decree-holder party to it. The decree-holder failed to appear and the ex parte decree was set aside. The transferee of the decree thereafter applied for execution:

Held, that the transferee could not proceed with the execution before the order setting aside the ex parte decree was set aside; [p. 674, col. 2.]

that the Court could not set aside the order setting aside the ex partee decree under section 151, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 674, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application under section 47 of the Civil

BONOMALI BANIKYA v. JOY KUMAR BAIDYA.

Procedure Code. The facts are these: One Rajdhar Shaha obtained a mortgage-decree against the appellant and some other persons in Suit No. 1124 of 1903 on the 22nd February 1904. Rajdhar having died, his widow Bidya Sundari obtained the final decree in the mortgage suit on the 20th March 1906. She executed the decree in 1907. Then she transferred the decree to certain persons from whom the present respondents purchased it on the 16th March 1910. On the 3rd May 1910, the respondents applied for execution of the decree in Execution Case No. 314 of 1910. No notice under Order XXI, rule 16, was issued or served upon the decree-holders or the judgment-debtors, but, on 2nd June 1910 a notice under Order XXI, rule 22, Code of Civil Procedure, was served upon the judgment-debtors, and on the next day, the execution case was dismissed. On the 18th September 1912, the appellant applied under Order IX, rule 13, to set aside the ex part decree. The application was made against Bidya Sundari alone as the opposite-party. Bidya Sundari did not appear in that application and the ex parte decree was set aside on the 15th February 1913 and the original suit was revised, but, as Bidya Sundari did not appear to prosecute the suit, it was dismissed for default on 12th March 1913. Meanwhile, on the 29th November 1912, the respondents applied for execution of the ex parte decree and a notice under Order XXI, rule 22, Code of Civil Procedure, was again served upon the judgment debtors on the 30th December 1912. The suit having been dismissed for default on the 12th March 1913, the present application was made by the appellant under section 47, Code of Civil Procedure, on the 1st May 1913 objecting that the execution case could not proceed on the grounds that no notice under Order XXI, rule 16, had been served, that the respondents had not acquired any interest in the decree by transfer and that the ex parte decree sought to be executed, having been already set aside, could not be executed at all. A petition of objection was filed on behalf of the present respondents and they urged that the Court, having regard to the circumstances, ought to exercise the powers under section 151, Code of Civil Procedure, and set aside the order by which the ex parte decree had been set aside.

The Court of first instance held that the appellant had notice of the transfer in favour of the respondents, that he, therefore, ought to have taken steps to have the respondents brought on the record of the case for setting aside the ex parte decree and that having taken proceedings, in the case in the absence of the persons who were interested, he did not act bona fide and it accordingly disallowed the application of the judgment-debtors. On appeal, the learned Judge, although he agreed generally with the Munsif, held that no notice having been served under Order XXI, rule 16, the execution could not proceed until the service of the notice and remanded the case to the Court of first instance, in order that the question whether the respondents had really a right to execute the decree might be determined after service of the notice under Order XXI, rule 16, Code of Civil Procedure. One of the judgment-debtors has appealed to this Court.

It appears that the respondents who claimed under a transfer from Bidya Sundari did not get themselves substituted in the place of Bidya Sundari under any order of the Court, and no notice under Order XXI, rule 16, Code of Civil Procedure, having been served either upon Bidya Sundari or upon the judgment-debtors, the execution could not proceed under the express terms of Order XXI, rule 16 of the Code. The respondents not having been substituted by the order of the Court in the Execution Case No. 314, the appellant was not bound to proceed against these persons in the application for setting aside the ex parte decree which was made against the only person on the record, i.e., Bidya Sundari, and, although a good deal of suspicion arises out of the circumstances of the case, we do not see how the respondents can proceed with the execution before the order setting aside the ex parte decree is set aside. We are unable to give effect to the contention that the order setting aside the ex parte decree should be set aside under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that for two reasons: the first being that the present proceedings have arisen in the course of execution proceedings, and, secondly, that the question whether there had been real transfer of the interest in the decree to the respondents has not yet been determined by the Court. It seems to us that it is necessary for the respondents to take steps for setting aside the order by which the ex parte decree was set aside. So long as the dismissal of the original suit stands, we think the respondents cannot execute the decree. Under the circumstances, the orders of the Courts below will be set aside, but, having regard to the circumstances of the case, each party will bear its own costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 129—Mortgage of sir before 1901—Sale of equity of redemption in 1905—Mortgagors minors—Ex-proprietary rights claimed by mother of minors—Mother's claim wrongly disallowed—No appeal preferred—Subsequent suit for declaration of ex-proprietary rights.

The sir land in dispute was mortgaged before the passing of the Tenancy Act. In 1905 its equity of redemption was sold to one D, who applied for mutation in his favour. The mortgagors were four minor brothers and their mother on their behalf claimed ex-proprietary rights in the course of mutation proceedings. The Tahsildar rejected the claim in 1906, but his order was not objected to or appealed against and after that most of the land then claimed passed out of the possession of the four brothers. In 1913, two of the brothers on their own behalf as well as on behalf of the other two brothers who were still minors sued for a declaration of their ex-proprietary rights in the whole land:

Held, that inasmuch as the ex-proprietary rights arose in 1905 at the time of the sale of the equity of redemption and on their being disallowed by the Tahsildar, though wrongly, his order was not appealed against, the present claim was barred by section 129 of the Oudh Rent Act.

Obiter dictum.—Section 36 (3) is not very clear when it says that a case shall be referred to the Collector when ex-proprietary rights have been created, not where they have been claimed.

Third appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Lucknow Division, dated 7th October 1914, reversing that of the Collector, Hardoi District, in a case of ex-proprietary rights.

JUDGMENT.—This is a difficult case, but I think that the Commissioner's finding is correct.

Appellants' title to ex-proprietary rights first came into existence in 1905, when their equity of redemption of their mortgaged proprietary rights was sold in execution of a decree.

When the new proprietor, the respondent, applied for mutation the appellants' guardian, their mother, claimed ex-proprietary rights on their behalf, as they were then minors. The Tahsildar in the course of the mutation proceedings rejected this claim.

There is no doubt that in this he was in error and (probably) acting ultra vires. But section 36 (3) is not very clear. It only lays down that a case shall be referred to the Collector when ex-proprietary rights have been created, not where they have been claimed. Be that as it may, appellants' guardian accepted the Tahsildar's decision, which was delivered in 1906. She did not object to, nor appeal against, it and between that date and 1913, she and the appellants have allowed most of the 24 bighas then claimed to pass out of their possession, as they are only now the recorded tenants of 4 bighas 16 biswas.

After an interval of seven years appellants came into Court asking that they may be declared the ex-proprietary tenants of the whole 24 bighas. Two of the appellants are found to be grown men who attained their majority four or five years ago, while two of them are still minors.

There can be no doubt that the claim of the two adults is barred by section 129, Oudh Rent Act. They urge, however, that they can claim at least half the land in dispute as guardians of their minor brothers. But I do not think that this claim can now be admitted and am of opinion that it is barred by the action (or rather inaction) of their mother, who was the guardian of all the plaintiffs in 1905. If she had put in no claim in their behalf, the minors might now have some locus standi. As it is, I think that they have none. I, therefore, uphold the Commissioner's order and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A Kayastha got entered in the patwari's papers the names of his natural (kahar) sons in place of his name in respect of his holding but himself remained in possession with his sons. The zemindar was no party to this application for entry of names:

Held, that as the entry of the sons' names had no legal force and the father remained in possession with his sons, his rights as an occupancy tenant did not come to an end.

Application for revision from an order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 2nd March 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Basti District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

TWEEDY, J. M.—(August 7th, 1914.)—The Board can only interfere under section 185 when there is a very grave error of law, and as a matter of policy they will not interfere unless there has also been a miscarriage of justice. Both these conditions appear to be fulfilled in the present case. Appellant, an old Kayasth, got the name of his natural (kahar) sons entered as occupancy tenants in place of his own as far back as 1902. The zemindar was no party to this application (which should not have been granted by the Revenue Courts) and the Court's order had no force whatever, the whole transaction being purely a paper transaction. It is perfectly clear that Kalka Prasad, the father, remained in cultivation with his sons just as before and that the occupancy tenancy did not determine and is still in existence. I would set aside the orders of the Commissioner and the Assistant Collector and decreeing the application for revision, would dismiss the suit for ejectment.

Tenant—Mortgagee—Rent-paying grove mortgaged—Suit for arrears of rent against mortgagor—Mortgagee not made party—Ejectment of mortgagee.

A rent-paying grove-holder mortgaged his grove with possession. After the mortgage the zemindar, without impleading the mortgagee as a defendant, sued the mortgagor for arrears of rent, obtained a decree and ejected him for its non-payment. Then he sued to eject the mortgagee as a tenant from year to year, the mortgagor's rights having been extinguished:

Held, that the mortgage being with possession, the mortgagee was a necessary party to the suit for arrears of rent and that the landlord could not eject him so long as he did not pay up the mortgage-money or so long as the land retained the character of a grove. [p. 676, col. 2; p. 677, col. 1.]

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated 20th April 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Ghazipur District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—There is a finding of fact that the land is a grove. It cannot then be the subject of an occupancy tenure. There is no evidence to show how long the occupancy tenancy has been recorded. This being so, the mortgage with possession of 17th January 1910 of the grove was a valid mortgage. The mortgagor was ejected in April 1912 for decreed arrears. The zemindar at that time was well aware of the mortgage with possession, for he instituted a suit to set it aside under section 31, which he afterwards withdrew on taking a sub-mortgage himself. If the arrears of rent were on account of the period subsequent to the mortgage, he should have made the mortgagee in possession a defendant in the suit and given him an opportunity of paying up the rent. This he did not do, and now he cannot eject the mortgagee so long as he does not pay up the mortgage-money or so long as the land retains the character of a grove. There is no evidence that the arrears decreed were for a period prior to the mortgage.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Estoppel—Tenancy admitted by landholder to be a fixed-rate tenancy—Tenant, whether can be ejected as occupancy tenant.

In a suit for enhancement of rent against his tenant, the zemindar entered into a compromise in which he said that the nature of the tenant's tenancy would be that of a fixed-rate tenancy and proceeded to describe certain of its incidents. No mention was made of the grounds mentioned in clause (d) of section 57 Act II of 1901, probably because he had said that the land will be treated as a fixed-rate tenancy. The land-holder then brought the present suit for the ejectment of the tenant and his mortgagee on the ground that the tenant had transferred his holding which he alleged to be an occupancy tenure:

Held, that the zemindar was estopped from asserting that it was not a fixed-rate tenancy.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 6th July 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Ghazipur District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(April 19th, 1915.)—The land-holder sues to eject the defendant and his mortgagees, on the ground that the tenant has transferred his holding in which the land-holder alleges to be an occupancy tenancy, in contravention of the provisions of the Act. A suit for enhancement was brought by the predecessors of the land-holder against the husband of the present tenant which was compromised in 1893. Under the compromise the land-holder said that the nature of the tenancy would be that of a fixed-rate tenancy, and he proceeded to describe certain of the incidents. He went on to say that he would have no power of ejectment on account of anything done contrary to the intention of the patta or on account of injury to the land. This condition probably covered clauses (b) and (c) of section 57, and the reason probably that no mention was made of the grounds in clause (d) of section 57 was, that he had above said that the land will be treated as that of a fixed-rate tenant. The special provision, which I have quoted, is, therefore, in support of the contention that the land-holder intended that the holding should be transferable like that of a tenancy at fixed rates, and this contention is supported by the subsequent conduct of the land-holder who, as he admits, himself bought several of the plots included in the holding from the tenant. It seems to me that whatever the nature of the tenancy may be, that the land-holder is estopped by the action of his predecessor-in-interest from alleging the holding cannot be transferred. It is true that the High Court have held in Bachchi alias Bachchia v. Bachchi (1) that a zemindar executing a deed in favour of a tenant cannot make him a fixed-rate tenant within the meaning of section 8 so as to alter the succession, which would otherwise have obtained had the holding been regarded as an occupancy holding; but there was no question of estoppel in that case. Another High Court decision, Kesho Das v. Doolar Ram (2), is to some extent in point.

I consider that in this case the plaintiff is estopped, by the action of his predecessor in the compromise and in the subsequent pur-

Application for revision from an order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 11th May 1914, in a case of mutation of names, dismissing the appeal for default.

JUDGMENT.—This is filed as an application for revision, but as a third appeal lies to the Board, no order in revision can be passed. I have allowed the applicant to treat this as a third appeal. On the 29th January when the present appellant paid in the process fees for service on the respondent, Govind Prasad, who he said lived in Gwalior, he was told that orders will be passed on the 2nd February, the date fixed for the hearing of the case. Under the impression that the summons on Govind Prasad could not be served before that date, he did not appear, but Govind Prasad apparently being informed by his brother, another of the respondents, turned up and the appeal was dismissed for default by the Collector. The present appellant, however, had received a definite order to appear on the 2nd February, and his affidavit that he was ill is so vague that I am not surprised that the Collector refused to act on it.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. II, r. 2—Suit for resumption of rent-free grant—Land found not resumable—Rent or revenue not assessed—Provisions of s. 153, Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), not given effect to—Fresh suit to assess rent, if barred—Res judicata.

A suit for resumption of a rent-free grant was brought and dismissed on the ground that the land was not resumable. In that suit, rent or revenue was not assessed as required by section 153 of the Agra Tenancy Act, II of 1901. A fresh suit was brought to assess rent and it was pleaded (1) that it was res judicata under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, (2) that the suit was barred under Order II, rule 2:

Held, overruling the contentions, that the suit was maintainable. [p. 679, col. 1.]

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner, Agra Division, dated the 20th May 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Aligarh District, in a case of assessment of rent.

JUDGMENT.—I am entirely in accord with the view taken by Mr. Brown and Mr. Hose in this matter, and to my mind the officiating Commissioner, Mr. Mardon, entirely omitted to consider the application of section 153 (1) of the Tenancy Act. Section 153 (1) distinctly lays down that, in a suit for the resumption of a rent-free grant, when the Court finds on certain grounds that the grant is not liable to resumption, it shall proceed to determine whether the land is liable to the assessment of rent or of revenue under sections 126 and 158 respectively. It will be noticed that no mention is made of a suit to have rent assessed on the land. The only reason is, that in that case the Court would naturally decide whether rent is assessable or not. The Assistant Collector, even though resumption alone was sued for, should have proceeded to act under section 153 and determined whether rent or revenue was assessable on the land. The appellant makes two contentions before me: (1) that it is res judicata, under section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure and (2) that rent is not assessable on the land, and relies on Explanations 4 and 5. Explanations 5 is inapplicable for there was no claim in the plaint for assessment of rent. Explanation 4 is only applicable if the assessment of rent ought to be made the ground of attack by the plaintiff in the suit and even then it is only applicable if this matter had been heard and finally decided which it was not.

The second contention is that the plaintiff should have sued under rule 2, Order II, of the Code of Civil Procedure, for assessment of rent as an alternative remedy. Had the Assistant Collector done his duty under section 153 (1) of the Tenancy Act, the difficulty would not have arisen. I have then to see whether rule 2, clause (3), applies. In this particular case, the plaintiff was, to my mind, not entitled to more than one relief cumulatively. He was either entitled to get resumption or, in the circumstances as found, to get assessment of rent, but not both. Rule 2, clause (3), seems only to apply to a case in which a person is entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action, that is, to one relief and another or more than another as well, which is not the case in the present suit.

I may observe that in any case I should have been quite ready, if necessary, to review the order of my predecessor and have returned the original suit for decision as to assessment of rent.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

The representative of a deceased landlord can sue the agent employed by the former when alive for rendition of accounts of the period of his agency, and such a suit is cognizable by a Revenue Court. [p. 680, col. 1.]

Second appeal from an order of the Additional Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 16th October 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Gonda District, in a case of accounts and recovery of collection papers etc.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(March 29th, 1915.)—The question of jurisdiction is not altogether an easy one. The appellant urges that the heir of a deceased landlord cannot sue the agent employed by the previous landlord in the Revenue Courts under section 108 (5) of the Rent Act, when he is not the agent of the heir. He bases his argument largely on the analogy of the rulings regarding the right of an assignee of arrears of rent to sue for them. There is some difference of opinion between the Courts as to the rights of an assignee, but in any case this is not a parallel instance because the assignee possesses only part of the bundle of rights which a land-holder possesses. The appellant further relies on rulings as to the rights and duties of heirs of lambardars. These I do not think are applicable either, for the lambardar's position is one of a representative of other people. On the other side, the wording of section 108 (5) is referred to. The wording is, "suits by a landlord against agents employed by landlords in the management of land or the collection of revenue or rent, etc". The wording is rather loose and I do not think much can be inferred from it. It is urged that the personal relation which existed between the former landlord and her agents does not exist between the present landlord, the respondent, and the appellants. It is true that the Civil Court would probably be a more suitable tribunal than a Revenue Court to try troublesome questions relating to accounts for a period of 14 years during which the present landlord, the respondent who has sued, had no personal knowledge of the matters in suit or how the relations stood between his predecessor and her agents, especially when one of them (Ram Singh) was her own nephew. I consider, however, that the lower Courts have rightly held that the suit lies in the Revenue Court. The present plaintiff appears to be without doubt the legal representative of the deceased principal who employed the agent, and, as the suit has been brought within one year from the date of the determination of the agency by her death, it is within time. The defendants can hardly plead that there has been no relation of agent and principal between them and the present plaintiff, for under section 209 of the Contract Act the agent is under a duty to the representative of his late principal, and although the agency ends with the death of the principal the responsibility continues in favour of the representative and enables the latter to resort to all remedies open to the principal, subject to the rule of limitation. If the suit had been instituted by the late principal and she had died while the suit was proceeding her legal representative could certainly have continued the suit, and there is no reason why the representative should not in the same way commence the suit if it is within limitation.

Though the question of whether a suit can jointly lie against both the defendants has not been raised by the defendants in the case, at first sight it seemed to me that no such suit could lie. However, there is some evidence that Sangam Lal acted under Ram Singh, and probably it will be convenient that accounts should be rendered by both of them in the same suit. The Commissioner should, I think, have stated with more precision the period and the land in respect of which he directed the accounts to be taken by the preliminary decree. Both Courts have found that Ram Singh was employed by the former landlord in the management of her estate, and in one village at any rate in the collection of rent, and that Sangam Lal was the diwan apparently working under Ram Singh and keeping accounts and collecting, at any rate, in respect of the sir in three villages. I take it then that the Commissioner's order related to the rendering of accounts in respect of the whole estate during all the years in suit. Ram Singh may, of course, be able to show that the deceased landlord allowed him to enjoy part of the profits of the estate in consideration of his close relationship to her.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit upon a registered mortgage bond. The Munsif decreed the suit. In the Court of first appeal the suit has been dismissed on the ground of limitation. The plaintiffs appeal now to this Court.

The bond was executed in October 1895, the due date being April 1900. It was executed in favour of one Gopal Chandra De. The suit was brought on the 29th April 1911, shortly before the expiry of 12 years after the due date by the widow of Gopal Chandra De, who had been appointed administratrix to his estate. On the 30th November 1911, the widow presented a petition supported by an affidavit stating that her Pleader had discovered that her powers as administratrix had come to an end before the suit was instituted. It appeared that under the Letters of Administration her appointment as administratrix was to terminate when the eldest son of Gopal Chandra De attained majority and this had occurred some years prior to the institution of the suit. She prayed that the three sons of Gopal Chandra De who were his heirs should be added as plaintiffs. The Munsif made the order prayed for. It will be observed that the three sons were added as plaintiffs some months after the period of limitation had expired.

The order of the Munsif was made under clause (1), rule 10, Order I, of the first Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure. The Munsif held in the terms of the claus that the suit had been instituted through a bona fide mistake in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff and accordingly ordered that the right persons, namely, the three sons, be added as plaintiffs. He held the suit was not barred by limitation and decreed it on the merits.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held in first appeal that the mistake was not bona fide. In his opinion bona fide means with due care and attention and he held that with the least care and attention, the plaintiff could well understand that her powers had come to an end. He inferred that the suit must be taken to have been instituted when the three sons came in as plaintiffs. This was after the period of limitation. He accordingly dismissed the suit without going into the merits.

We are of opinion that the Court of first appeal erred in the interpretation of the word bona fide. Where a mistake is not made deliberately and where it is honestly made, the mistake is bona fide. The widow was illiterate and pardanashin. The eldest son was 26 when the suit was brought, but it is clear from his deposition that he is not very intelligent. He says that for the last five or seven years he looks after his suits and collection of rent, but it is not said in whose name these suits to which he refers were instituted. The management was really done, it seems, by agents. No dishonest motive can be suggested : the mistake was brought to notice by the widow herself. We hold that the mistake was bona fide and that the order adding the three sons as plaintiffs was properly made under clause 1, rule 10, Order I.

It is then contended that the provisions of section 22, Indian Limitation Act, apply, which are to the effect that where after the institution of a suit a new plaintiff or defendant is substituted or added the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was made a party.

The contention is that even though it be held that the three sons were properly added as plaintiffs yet, inasmuch as this was done after the period of limitation had expired, the suit must under the provisions above referred to be held to be barred.

In the present case, however, when the suit was originally instituted within the period of limitation it was instituted by the widow not for her own benefit, but as administratrix for the benefit of the three sons. They were the real persons throughout who were to benefit. The change that was made after the period of limitation was one of form only, not of substance.

In the case of Subodini Debi v. Cumar Ganoda Kant Roy (1) it was held that where a suit was originally instituted in the name of a manager and the names of the employers were subsequently substituted as plaintiffs after the period of limitation, the suit was not barred. It is true that the decision rests partly on a consideration of the wording of the Code as it then stood. The learned Judges say, "the answer is that this suit is the original suit and was brought in time". This is a general observation, the principle of which is applicable to the present case.

In the case of Manni Kasundhan v. Crooke (2) where a suit was brought originally against a Municipal Committee represented by the Secretary, instead of by their President, as it should have been, and where the plaintiff applied after the expiry of the period of limitation for substituting the name of the President for that of the Secretary, it was held that by reason of such substitution the suit could not be deemed to have been instituted against the Municipal Committee when such substitution was made. The judgment was referred to in the case of Raja Peary Mohan Mookerjee v. Narendra Nath Mookerjee (3), in which the learned Judges stated the rule to be that where relief is originally claimed against a party who has to be represented by some person, the proper representation of that party subsequently made has not the effect of adding a "new defendant" to the suit. We are of opinion that a similar principle is applicable to a case such as the present where by a bona fide mistake it is erroneously supposed that a plaintiff should be represented in a particular way and subsequently the plaintiff is permitted to rectify the mistake and appear personally, this is not the addition of a new plaintiff within the meaning of section 22 of the Limitation Act.

That in matters of this kind the substance is to be looked to rather than the form will be apparent from the judgments of the Privy Council in the cases of Dhurm Das Pandey v. Shama Soondri Dibiah (4) and Hari Saran Moitra v. Bhubaneswari Debi (5). In both these cases a minor was treated as if he had been a party to the litigation, although in fact he never had been made a party and the litigation had been prosecuted by his mother in her personal capacity. "The suit must", their Lordships say in the first case, "be considered to have been prosecuted by her in her name for the minor's benefit". So, in the present case, the suit must be considered to have been originally instituted by the widow for the benefit of her sons and there was thus no introduction of new plaintiffs when the sons were brought on to the record.

We hold that the suit was not barred by limitation. We set aside the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and remand the case for disposal on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

An application for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed was filed before the District Delegate and upon an objection being made by a third party, the case was sent up to the District Judge and taken up as a contested case. In the meantime the Chairman of the local Municipality made a report to the Sub-Divisional Officer that the Will was forged, whereupon the latter took some "confidential" proceedings and sent the record to the Collector asking him to oppose the grant of the Probate, who did so on behalf of Government:

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed of one Mati Moyi Debya. The Will purported to give away all the properties in the possession of the testatrix, being her own self-acquired property as well as the property inherited by her from her husband. At first the application was filed before the District Delegate and upon an objection being made by one Sarba Sundari, the case was sent up to the District Court and taken up as a contested case. In the meantime the Chairman of the Debhatta Municipality is said to have made a report to the Sub-Divisional Officer, Babu A.N. Sen, that the Will of which Probate had been asked for by Rama Nath Chakraburty was a forged one. Upon that information the Sub-Divisional Officer took some proceeding which he headed as confidential and examined certain witnesses, and then sent the record to the Collector asking him to oppose the grant of the Probate. It is not quite clear under what law this proceeding was taken. It appears that immediately upon the death of the deceased, the petitioner removed certain moveable property to his house and upon that Sarba Sundari lodged a complaint at the thana about this matter and he was arrested and taken to the thana. It is a question whether at the thana he did or did not make any mention of the Will. The Court, however, under these circumstances allowed Government to put in a caveat. There were three objectors, Sarba Sundari, the Government and a third person named Rama Nath Banerjee, who claimed under a kobala from the brothers of the deceased. As the Government took up the case, the caveators did not take any steps in opposition of the Will. Witnesses were examined on behalf of the petitioner and also on behalf of the Government and the lower Court has held that the Will was a spurious one and has, therefore, refused to grant Letters of Administration.

On appeal it is contended that the Government has no locus standi to oppose the grant in this case and, secondly, that on the evidence taken as a whole even if the evidence adduced on behalf of the Government be taken into consideration, the Will should be taken as proved. As regards the first contention, we think regard being had to the statement in paragraph 5 of the petition for Letters of Administration, "The deceased left no (near or distant) relative as her heir", the Government may have been led into thinking that this was really a case in which there were no heirs and although the Collector might have made an inquiry as to the existence or non-existence of heirs so as to attract the right by escheat before launching the Government into an expensive litigation, we cannot say that at the inception of the proceeding the Government had no locus standi. Although we decide this question of the locus standi of the Government to oppose the application in favour of the Government at its inception, we think that as soon as it appeared that there were heirs in existence who would inherit, the Government ought to have retired.

It appears from the evidence that the deceased left two brothers, who upon the evidence would be the legal heirs of her pre-deceased son whom she had succeeded. However, the first question raised in appeal is so far decided in favour of the Government.

In regard to the second question we think that on the whole we cannot agree with the decision of the learned Judge. It appears from the evidence that this woman was living with the petitioner and if anybody was more near to her than anyone else it was the petitioner and it was, therefore, natural that she should have liked to have the properties of which he had been the manager after her husband's death to go to him. The Will is proved by the petitioner, Uma Nath Chakraburty, the writer of the Will, and Khetra Nath Chakraburty, one of the attesting witnesses to the Will, and one of the witnesses examined on behalf of the Government. We find that Pran Krishna Bhattacharjee as a witness said: "Rama Nath said when I saw him at the thana that he had seized her property as she had executed a Will in his favour Gokul, the Head Constable, was present then. He wanted to see the Will. Rama Nath said he had a Will". Therefore the case of the existence of the Will was made out as soon as he was arrested, and that was only a few days after the death of Mati Moyi. Then the Head Constable Gokul was examined and he said: "I brought him up to the thana at Debhatta. There he told me he had a Will which was in the custody of Paresh Babu, a Pleader. I then asked him who was the scribe and who were the attesting witnesses to the Will. He could not give me their names." Then we have the depositions of the Doctor Bhupendra Bhusan Biswas who treated the deceased It appears that this man was examined by the Deputy Magistrate in his confidential proceeding. In his depositions he is said to have stated that he did not sign any Will of Mati Moyi as an attesting witness or otherwise. Being examined by the Court, however, he proved the Will and as regards his depositions made before the Deputy Magistrate he said: "The Sub-Divisional Officer asked me if I had attested a Will forged by Rama Nath said to have been executed by Mati Moyi. I replied 'no'. I gave my answer in Bengali." Considering the whole of the evidence of this witness we think that his statements should be believed and that his evidence must have been imperfectly recorded at the summary and confidential proceeding by the Deputy Magistrate. In any case we find that the execution of the Will is proved by this witness and that the zemindari's naib, Bharat Chandra Mukerjee who appeared as a witness on behalf of the Government must have had some hand in the matter of the opposition to the Will. The petitioner says that this man had demanded certain sums of money as a consideration for supporting the Will and that being refused, he turned against him and brought about this trouble. We do not think that this is very improbable. Both the witnesses Pran Krishna and the Head Constable Gokul said that the petitioner had spoken to them of the Will, after his arrest, at the cutchery, in which Bharat lived and yet Bharat said that he did not hear him say to the Head Constable, when he was arrested at the rent office, that he had a Will executed by Mati Moyi in his possession.

It is not within the scope of this proceeding to say whether or not the petitioner is entitled to the property covered by the Will. This is a matter which the party that may be entitled will see to. But so far as this proceeding is concerned, we think that the Will is proved and we direct that Letters of Administration with the Will annexed be granted to the petitioner.

The order of the Court below is set aside.

The petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Court, hearing-fee four gold mohurs.

Order set aside.

Partnership, dissolution of—Receiver, appointment of—Purpose.

The usual way of guarding the divergent interests of the partners when they fall out is by appointing a Receiver and ordering the good-will of the business and stock in-trade to be sold, the partners being at liberty to bid at the sale. [p. 686, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Robinson, sitting on the original side of the Chief Court, dated the 9th

DOVER, E. F, v. DOVER, E. S.

July 1914, in Civil Regular No. 151 of 1914.

Mr. Campagnac, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lambert (Senior), for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is an application for the appointment of an ad interim Receiver of partnership property pending the disposal of an appeal from a preliminary decree directing accounts of the partnership to be taken. The judgment on which the preliminary decree is based was adverse to the appellant.

Complications have arisen in connection with the estate of the late E. T. Dover owing to his widow and administratix not having dealt with the estate in the way in which the law directs an estate should be dealt with. The consequence is that the parties have created a non-descript relationship between themselves in connection with the business of the deceased, which vested in the administration as part of his estate. In the course of the case, however, the Advocates for all parties agreed that this relationship should be regarded as one of partnership and on the 18th June a petition by the appellant consented to by the Advocate of the defendants was filed, praying that Tuesday the 23rd June might be fixed for passing a preliminary decree for dissolution of the partnership and for taking of partnership accounts, etc. The day mentioned was fixed for the purpose but no preliminary decree was then made. Issues were fixed upon the points in dispute, evidence was taken and a decision was come to on all the issues except one, and a preliminary decree was drawn up. This omits a good deal of what is included in Form 21 of Appendix D of the first Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure. The record affords no explanation of why the judgment did not direct a decree in the ordinary form, nor does the judgment explain why accounts were to be taken to the 31st March of this year only.

The decree should in ordinary course have declared that the partnership should stand dissolved as from the day on which the judgment was pronounced, and should have appointed a Receiver of the partnership estate and effects to get in the debts due to it and should have ordered the good-will of the business and stock-in-trade to be sold on the application of the parties, leaving it to an officer of the Court to fix a reserved bidding, and should further have ordered that any of the parties should be at liberty to bid at the sale.

The form in the Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code is based on the ordinary practice of the English Courts: see Lindley on Partnership (8th Edition), page 614.

The application for a Receiver is opposed by the defendants on the ground that it will cause some of them great inconvenience and expense, and incidentally that those living in the house where the business is carried on and those engaged in carrying on the business at the present time should be allowed to do so. This assumes that the good-will should be allotted to them, and that the Court should tell the plaintiff that he must be content with what the Court may, by some unexplained method of valuation, hold to be the value of the good-will and assets of the business.

Inconvenience to the parties is an inevitable incident when partners fall out and is a disadvantage of carrying on business in partnership. The rules as to good-will are thus stated in Lindley on Partnership, page 511:—

1. That if a firm is dissolved and there is no agreement to the contrary, the good-will must be sold for the benefit of all the partners if any of them insist on such sale.

2. That so far as is possible, having regard to the right of every partner to carry on business himself, the Court will on the dissolution interfere to protect and preserve the good-will until it can be sold.

The way in which it does interfere is to appoint a Receiver of the partnership assets. A dissolution is inevitable in the present case, and we may regard as done what should have been done by the preliminary decree. It does not appear to us that in the present state of feeling between the plaintiff and the defendants there is any ground for hope that the parties will come to an arrangement about taking over the business. We, therefore, think that the ordinary course should be followed in the suit.

Mr. A. Agabeg having already been appointed Commissioner to take the accounts we appoint him Receiver of the partnership estate and effects to get in its outstanding book-debts and claims, to manage the business until it can be sold and to sell the stock-in-trade and good-will of the business as a going concern at such reserve as he may think fit to fix, the parties being at liberty to bid at the sale. It being evident that the lease of the premises in which the business is carried on was taken for the purposes of the business, the remainder of the term of the lease must be included in the sale. If, however, the parties all agree to some other arrangement within a month from this date, the sale need not be carried out. The defendants must pay the plaintiff's costs of this application—three gold mohurs being allowed as Advocate's fees.

Appeal allowed.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—This appeal has been heard at very great length; but I think the appellant has established his argument. The facts are that under the landlord there was a raiyat of the name of Fakir Mahamed. Fakir Mahamed mortgaged the property to one Ishan Poddar, who got possession. Ishan inducted the present defendants on the land. The landlord brought a suit for rent against the heirs of Fakir Mahamed and he bought up the holding at a sale for arrears of rent. The first and perhaps the main question in this appeal is, what is the effect of such purchase? Did it, as has been contended by the respondent, effect a complete merger of the holding and of the occupanncy right in the landlord's right or did it, as the appellant contends, keep alive the occupancy holding though merging the occupancy right? This question has been discussed in the case of Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Hasan Ali Sadagar (1), where a distinction is drawn between an occupancy holding and an occupancy right. I should state here that this case has been decided on the old law as it existed prior to 1907. Following the principle enunciated in the decision to which I have just referred, I would hold that the occupancy holding still continued to exist even after the purchase by the landlord. The landlord then sold to one Magan Ali the permament raiyati right. Magan Ali also took a lease from the landlord and the plaintiff has bought from Magan Ali and now desires to eject the defendant who had been inducted into possession, as stated.

The first Court held that he was entitled to a decree. The decision was reversed on appeal. For the reasons I have stated the landlord was able to transfer the holding to Magan Ali, through whom it came to the plaintiff. The defendant continued to be what he was, an under-raiyat, and it has been found that he has been duly served with notice. The learned Judge has referred at the conclusion of his judgment to section 167. In my opinion this does not stand in the way. A further question was sought to be argued, and that is this, that in the suit to which Magan Ali was a party it was held that he could not get possession except by proceeding under section 167. This question is not a point which has been either raised or dealt with in the judgment under appeal and, therefore, cannot be entertained now. The defendants, having been duly served with notice to quit, must be ejected.

I, therefore, would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the first Court with costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Appeal accepted.

Will—Application for Letters of Administration—Institution of subsequent suit to contest validity of Will—Probate Court, if to stay proceedings—Factum of Will—Judgment in rem—Oral evidence as to execution of Will—Improbabilities.

A Probate Court is bound to determine whether a Will was as a matter of fact made, and it cannot stay its proceedings and wait indefinitely for the decision of a suit subsequently instituted in regard to validity of the Will which decision may or may not be in favour of the caveator. The possibility of a finding as to the invalidity of a Will, which finding can only be binding upon the parties to the suit, does not constitute a sufficient justification for a Probate Court to postpone its decision as to its due execution, more especially as the decision of the Probate Court on the point operates as a judgment in rem. [p. 688, col. 1.]

In order to conclude whether a Will is genuine, internal evidence is no doubt of great importance. But an improbability to prevail against direct evidence of disinterested witnesses must be clear and cogent. The incidents mentioned by a Court for raising a presumption of probability or improbability are of no value if they are either wrong on facts or capable of explanation by reference to other considerations which have been lost sight of by that Court. [p. 690, col. 1.]

Chotey Narain Singh v. Ratan Koer, 22 I. A. 12; 22 C. 519 (P. C.), referred to.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 30th March 1914, rejecting the application.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants, who are the collaterals of one Karam Chand deceased, applied to the District Judge for Letters of Administration cum testamento annexo to the estate of his wife, Musammat Bhag Sudhi, and propounded Exhibit PA as her last Will and testament. The respondent, Musammat Malan Devi, her co-widow, lodged caveat with the District Judge and contested the genuineness of the Will. The learned Judge arrived at the conclusion that the propounders had failed to establish the genuineness of the document put forward by them and he, therefore, rejected their application. Against his order the present appeal has been preferred under section 86 of Act V of 1881, and the sole question which arises for determination in these proceedings under the Probate and Administration Act relates to the genuineness or otherwise of the Will.

Before taking up the matter in controversy between the parties, I must deal with a prayer made on behalf of the respondent at the commencement of the hearing of the appeal. Mr. Shafi, for Musammat Malan Devi, stated that validity of the Will was the subject of an issue in a suit instituted subsequently to, but tried simultaneously with, the application for Letters of Administration and that an appeal is now pending in the lower Appellate Court against the decree passed in that suit. He further stated that that appeal had been adjourned pending the trial of this appeal and requested that as the decision on the validity of the Will, if given in favour of the caveator, would render the decision re the factum unnecessary, I should postpone the trial of this appeal until the determination of the issue as to the validity. The question is whether the adjudication on the factum of the Will should or should not precede that upon its validity, and I have not the slightest hesitation in answering it in the affirmative. It seems to me clear that a Probate Court is bound to determine the matter whether a Will was, as a matter of fact, made and it cannot stay its proceedings and wait indefinitely for the decision in regard to the validity of the Will, which decision may or may not be in favour of the caveator. I do not think the possibility of a finding as to the invalidity of Will, which finding can only be binding upon the parties to the suit, constitutes a sufficient justification for a Probate Court to postpone its decision as to its due execution, more especially when it is to be remembered that the decision of the Probate Court operates as a judgment in rem. Further, the District Judge has, in this case, held that the Will is a forged document, a finding which is fraught with serious consequences to the appellants and their witnesses, and I consider they are fully entitled to ask the Appellate Court to pronounce its opinion on the genuineness or otherwise of the document propounded by them as the last Will and testament of the lady. For these reasons, I cannot accede to the prayer of the respondent and must try the appeal on the merits. The simple issue in this case is whether the appellants have succeeded in establishing that the document Exhibit A is the genuine Will of the deceased Musammat Bhag Sudhi. Ex facie the Will appears to be duly executed by the testator and properly attested by no lesst han fifteen witnesses. It purports to bear the right thumb mark of the deceased lady and also her signature in Gurmukhi characters. I find that the appellants have adduced the evidence of the scribe and six of the attesting witnesses, who all swear that the Will was duly executed by the lady prior to her departure for a pilgrimage. I have considered this evidence and observe that no reason whatsoever has been shown why the testimony of the witnesses should not be believed. In fact, there is only one witness, Ram Chand, P. W. No. 4, a collateral of the husband of the testator, whose credit has been impeached before me on the ground that he is not a disinterested witness. Other persons, who have given evidence, are not of the same caste as the testator or the appellants and they appear to be disinterested witnesses and nothing has been urged against them which would justify the Court in discrediting their testimony. It is to be noted that the caveator did not make the slightest attempt to summon any of the remaining witnesses to establish her contention that the Will was not made by Musammat Bhag Sudhi, and it is significant that one Thaker Singh, her own witness, had to admit that the document bears the seal of his father, Sobha Ram, who is a lambardar of the village.

This, then, is the direct evidence in support of the Will and upon the present record it stands unrebutted. The learned District Judge, instead of examining the evidence and giving his reasons for disbelieving it, has absolutely ignored it and contented himself with the remark that the full power of disposition by a widow is regarded with disfavour among the Hindus and that suggestion appears, according to him, to be the sole ground for the witnesses coming forward to depose falsely in favour of the Will. Now I consider this is altogether an insufficient reason for condemning a fairly large number of disinterested persons as suborned witnesses and for thinking that they and other persons, who have all signed the Will, conspired together to commit a forgery which did not benefit them in the least. The grounds upon which the District Judge has found against the Will are conjectural and his so-called improbabilities do not stand the test of examination.

As regards the thumb-impression, the Will itself mentions that it is the impression of the right hand, and this appears to be the opinion of the experts who state that it is probably for that reason that the impression in question does not correspond with any of the thumb marks on other documents executed by the deceased. The District Judge has not noticed this fact, which seems to be the explanation for the difference in the thumb impressions. The appellants have also produced some witnesses to prove the fact that the deceased was literate and knew Gurmukhi characters, and one Sant Ram has produced a bond, dated the 26th December 1904, purporting to bear her signature. It is true that the other documents on the record, admittedly executed by her, are simply thumb-marked and not signed by her, but the reason for not signing them may be that they are all documents intended for presentation in a Court of Justice or to a Revenue Officer and it was probably considered necessary to put thumb-marks instead of signatures upon them. Be that as it may, the fact remains that there is evidence to show which has not been rebutted, that the deceased knew how to read and write, and it appears that the signature on the bond resembles the disputed writing on the Will.

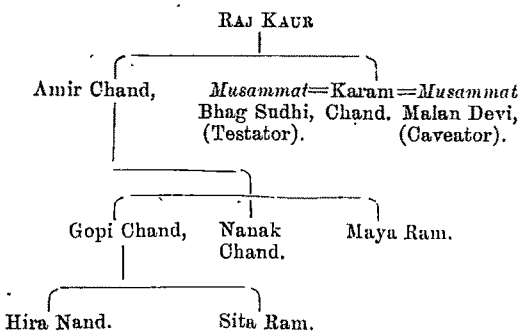
In connection with the alleged improbabilities based upon the provisions of the Will, it is necessary to give here a brief pedigree-table to expl in the relationship between the parties.



Karam Chand, the husband of the testator, bequeathed his entire property by a Will, dated the 10th of February 1904, to his two widows in equal shares, conferred upon them the full power of alienation, and directed that, in the event of the death of the one, the other should succeed to her estate. It appears that he was displeased with Maya Ram by reason of the latter having brought a widow to live with him in his house and he accordingly provided in the Will that Maya Ram was not to receive any portion of his property so long as the aforesaid widow continued to live with him. On the strength of this clause in Karam Chand's Will, the contention is raised that it is unlikely that Mussammat Bhag Sudhi would execute a Will in contravention of the wishes of her husband, but the answer to it is two-fold. In the first place, it must be remembered that Karam Chand was not in any way hostile to Maya Ram, and it is not improbable that when the widow had remained in the family for some years and had, as it were, become a regular member thereof, the resentment which was legitimate in 1904 had spent its force in 1911 when the Will in question was written. Secondly, Maya Ram is only one of the beneficiaries under the Will and there is absolutely no reason why Musammat Bhag Sudhi should disinherit Nanak Chand and the sons of Gopi Chand who, under the Will, get ⅔rds of the estate. I may add that there is no reliable evidence that her relations with the appellants were strained or that she had any reason to be dissatisfied with them.

The next argument advanced in support of the theory of improbability is, that Musammat Bhag Sudhi, who was on good terms with her co-widow, Musammat Malan Devi, was not likely to disinherit her and give the property to the collaterals of her husband. But Malan Devi had already ample property for all legitimate purposes and it was only right that the deceased should bequeath her estate to the persons who were the real heirs of her husband.

Further, the Will directs the legatees to build a dharmsala and a direction of that kind can only be carried into execution by male members. For these reasons I do not consider that the internal evidence afforded by the Will throws any doubt on the genuineness thereof. On the other hand, the bequests are just those which a Hindu widow in the position of Musammat Bhag Sudhi would ordinarily make, and I do not think that any circumstance likely to excite suspicion has been disclosed.

Lastly, it is strongly pressed upon me that the failure on the part of the appellants to produce the Will at the time of the mutation of the estate in favour of Musammat Malan Devi in February 1912 goes to show that it did not exist at that time and was manufactured subsequently. Now the patwari's evidence shows that the usual proclamation before sanctioning mutation was not issued in this case. And the mutation order makes it clear that only the lambardar and the patwari were present at the time when the order was passed. It appears that the Tahsildar sanctioned the mutation not in the village of the parties, but in another village called Maha·a. It is urged on behalf of the respondent that Sita Ram, one of the appellants, got a mutation effected in connection with a mortgage on that very day, but the order with respect to that mutation was, as pointed out by Mr. Tek Chand, passed in another village called Chhappar. There is not an iota of evidence on the record to prove that any one of the appellants was present at the time of the mutation on the 13th of February 1912, or knew of it, and the circumstances mentioned above do not, in my opinion, raise a presumption of knowledge.

The learned District Judge states in his judgment that the appellants "allowed one year to elapse over the mutation in favour of the defendant before they produced the Will." But this is not quite correct, for Mussammat Bhag Sudhi died on the 16th December 1911, and the Will was produced on the 4th of September 1912, when the question of mutation in respect of a sale made by the caveator came up for decision before a Revenue Officer. This mutation has evidently been overlooked by the learned Judge.

These are all the points upon which the theory of improbability rests and after giving my careful consideration to the pros et cons, I do not think they outweigh the direct testimony in favour of the Will. The judgment of the District Judge suffers from the defects that he has ignored that evidence in toto, and that the incidents mentioned by him for raising a presumption of improbability are either wrong on facts or capable of explanation by reference to other considerations which have been lost sight of by him. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chotey Narain Singh v. Ratan Koer (1), an improbability to prevail against the direct evidence of disinterested witnesses must be clear and cogent; and the circumstances upon which the order of the lower Court proceeds do not, in my opinion, satisfy this test. For the aforesaid reasons I hold that Exhibit A has been proved to be the last Will and testament of Musammat Bhag Sudhi. I accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Court and direct that Letters of Administration to her estate with a copy of the Will annexed be granted to the appellants. They must execute a bond in the sum of Rs. 5,000 with two sureties in like amount for the due administration of the estate as required by the provisions of section 78 of Act V of 1881. The respondent must pay the costs of the appellants in both the Courts.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Barisal, dated the 9th May 1913, modifying that of the Munsif, second Court, Barisal, dated the 3rd of April 1912.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Babu Gunoda Chandra Sen, for Babu Chandra Kanta Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit to enforce a mortgage security, which comprised two properties, namely, a parcel of land and a hut on a second parcel. The mortgage was executed by the first defendant in favour of the plaintiff on the 11th October 1909. The second defendant, a creditor of the first defendant, obtained a decree for money against the mortgagor on the 27th August 1909, and in execution of that decree, purchased the hut on the second parcel for a sum of Rs. 50. The present suit has been defended by the purchaser, who has been joined as a party, on the ground that he has acquired an interest in the equity of redemption subsequent to the mortgage. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff had failed to prove that any money was advanced on the mortgage and consequently dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge found that though the consideration for the mortgage was stated to be Rs. 150, the plaintiff had established that a sum of Rs. 50 only was due to him from the mortgagor under a prior mortgage of the 25th March 1909. The second defendant thereupon contended that a decree should not be made in favour of the plaintiff even for this sum together with interest thereon, because the transaction was voidable under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act inasmuch as the mortgage had been created with a view to defeat or delay the creditors of the mortgagor. The Subordinate Judge overruled this contention and gave the plaintiff a decree for realization of the mortgage-money by sale of the first property alone. He exempted the second party from the mortgage lien, on the ground that the transaction was void as against the second defendant, who is a bona fide purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree of his own against the first defendant. Neither party is satisfied with this decision. The plaintiff has appealed and contended that a decree should have been made against both the properties included in the security. The second defendant has appealed and urged that on the facts found by the Subordinate Judge, no decree should have been made even in respect of the first property.

As regards the cross-appeal of the second defendant, we are of opinion that it cannot possibly succeed. The second defendant, as purchaser of the equity of redemption in the hut, is in no way interested in the first property, which still belongs to the mortgagor, he cannot consequently be permitted to impeach the decree for the sale of that property.

As regards the appeal of the plaintiff, it has been contended on behalf of the respondents that the Subordinate Judge should have held, on the authority of the decision in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Iyer (1) confirmed on appeal to the Judicial Committee in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Srinivasa Sastrial (2), that the mortgage transaction which was voidable under section 53 of the Tranfer of Property Act must be avoided in its entirety and cannot be made the basis of a decree even for such portion of the consideration as is proved to have been passed from the mortgagee to the mortgagor. The case mentioned is clearly distinguishable. The Subordinate Judge has found that the mortgage-bond was executed for an antecedent loan of Rs. 57 and an alleged cash payment of Rs. 93 and that the payment of the cash consideration was doubtful or had not been proved. He has further found that the plaintiff was not, at the date of the mortgage transaction, aware of the decree obtained by the second defendant nor of its impending execution against the first defendant. There is also no evidence to show that there were other creditors of the mortgagor at the time of the mortgage transaction who were intended to be defrauded or defeated. But the Subordinate Judge seems to have held that the intention of the mortgagor was to put a fictitious statement of consideration in the mortgage-bond so that it might be of use to him as against possible creditors at some future time ; there is, however, no direct evidence to show that the mortgagee was aware of this fraudulent intention. The facts found by the Subordinate Judge are, consequently, not sufficient to bring the case within the scope of section 53, as explained by this Court in the cases of Ishan Chunder Das Sarkar v. Bishu Sirdar (3) and Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (4).

But we need not rest our decision on this basis alone. We shall assume, for our present purposes, that the mortgage is within the mischief of section 53 and that the facts sufficient to justify this conclusion have been found by the Subordinate Judge, still the question arises, what is the relative situation of the parties to this litigation ? Section 53 does not render the transaction void ; it is only voidable at the option of any person defrauded, defeated or delayed thereby. Let us assume also, as was done in the case of Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., Ltd. v. Rebati Kumar Roy (5), that the validity of the mortgage can be questioned by way of defence and that it is not obligatory upon the person prejudicially affected to institute an action to avoid the transaction. If these assumptions are made, the inference follows that the second defendant is entitled to question the mortgage, only in so far as it affects the property acquired by him, namely, the hut on the second parcel. But the Court, when it proceeds to grant relief by way of avoidance of the transaction, will do so only on equitable considerations and will apply the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. In the present case, it is plain from the orders in the execution proceedings wherein the second defendant became the purchaser, that he acquired the hut subject to the lien of the plaintiff; consequently, if at his instance the mortgage is avoided, he should be granted relief, only on condition that he satisfied that lien. It follows that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for his dues as against the second property in the hands of the second defendant. This view is in accord with that taken in the cases of Rajani Kumar Das v. Gaur Kishore Saha (6) and Jaladanki Chinna Pitchia, In re (7), which recognise the principle that a mortgage can be enforced for so much of the consideration as is proved to have been paid by the mortgagee to the mortgagor.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the cross-objection dismissed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge discharged. There will be a mortgage-decree in favour of the plaintiff against both the properties included in the security. But the decree will direct that the plaintiff must, in the first instance, proceed to realise his dues by sale of the first property. If such sale is not found sufficient to satisfy his dues, he will be entitled to proceed against the second property to recover the balance. As the hut, after purchase by the second defendant, has been demolished and can no longer be brought to sale, the decree will specify the sum recoverable by the plaintiff from the defendant under our judgment. Each party will pay his own costs throughout the litigation.

Appeal allowed.

were entitled to ply boats across the river and to disembark passengers on land belonging to the defendants and prayed that the defendants be restrained from obstructing:

Held, that the use of a ferry by the zemindars of Mouza B, which had been found to be a long and continuous use, was entitled to prevail until the plaintiffs, who were starting up an opposition ferry, could show a Crown grant or could give evidence from which a Crown grant could be presumed. [p. 694, col. 1]

Nityahari Roy v. Dunne, 18 C. 652, followed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated 4th March 1914.

Mr. Peare Lal Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants in this Court describe themselves as zemindars of Mouza Rampur Jaichand, Mahal Awal; the defendants, they say, are zemindars of Mouza Bamhiana. The river Gara flows between the two villages. They add that the boats of both parties ply between the Mouzas Bamhiana and Rampur Jaichand but the defendant No. 4 in collusion with defendants Nos. 1 to 3 has of late prevented the plaintiffs from plying their boats and has appropriated the whole income that results from the same; in law and custom the owners of both villages are entitled to ply boats in the Gara between Rampur Jaichand and Bamhiana. They prayed that the defendants may be restrained from obstructing, and that damage may be awarded. In defence the plea is taken that for a very long time the ferry at Bamhiana and the right to ply boats has always appertained to Mouza Bamhiana and the income resulting from the ferry has always been entered in the revenue papers of that village as sewai income.

The Munsif of Tilhar, in whose Court the case was instituted, says in his judgment, "It is clear from the statement of the plaintiffs' own witness, the patwari, that the defendants alone have been working the ferry referred to since the last Settlement." The plaintiffs had failed to prove that they at any time since the last Settlement or before have ever worked the ferry on their own side. On the other hand, the defendants had by their evidence shown that they alone had been working the ferry for more than 20 years and had assured a right to do so by prescriptive and adverse possession. It held, however, that a monopoly to a ferry can only be acquiesced by a Crown grant. For these reasons it decided that the plaintiffs were entitled to start a rival ferry and that the defendants could not restrain them. It accordingly granted the plaintiffs a decree to this effect, that they are entitled to ply their boats on the river between the villages referred to and that the defendants be restrained from interfering with their doing so. It pronounced no decision upon the question whether the plaintiffs have a right to embark and disembark passengers on the Bamhiana side, holding that it did not arise in the present case. The defendants went in appeal to the District Judge of Shahjahanpur. That Court held that for more than 20 years ferry boats had been plying and the ferrymen had taken leases from the defendants, the owners of the village Bamhiana, and the income arising from it is entered by the patwari in the khatoni of that village; further, it held that the opposite bank of the river belongs to the defendants. The mere fact that there is a right of way across the river does not give the plaintiffs the right to disembark passengers on the defendants' land. There is no public landing place there which every one has the right to use. For these reasons it held that the plaintiffs had no right to a declaration that they were entitled to carry passengers across the river at this ferry and allowing the appeal, it dismissed the plaintiffs' claim with costs.

The plaintiffs have come to this Court and they contend, first, that the defendants have no monopoly to ply their boats across the river and plaintiffs have equal rights with the defendants, next, that the Court below having found that there was a right of way from one village to the other across the river when it was dry, it follows that the plaintiffs could ply their boats over the river when it was full. The second plea was the one that was strongly urged. The learned Vakil's argument was that as the public had the right to go down by a path or road to Rampur Jaichand side, to cross the river when it was shallow, land on the Bamhiana side and take up their journey onwards, the defendants could not claim any monopoly to carry passengers across. When asked to point out the law or custom on which the plaintiffs based their alleged right, the learned Vakil could point out neither. Several English cases were cited but I do not think that they are of much use in deciding this matter. The case, in my opinion, resolves itself into the question whether the plaintiffs have acquired any right to easement or to a right in the nature of an easement on the Bamhiana side of the river, when that involves a right to embark and disembark passengers on another's land. It is a misnomer to talk of a public road. Whatever might be the nature of the track from the river side onwards, that track is on land belonging to the zemindars of Bamhiana and the plaintiffs are really seeking to enforce a right in the nature of an easement, when they claim a right to embark and disembark passengers on the Bamhiana land. Following the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Nityahari Roy v. Dunne (1), I am prepared to hold that the use of a ferry by the zemindars of Bamhiana, which has been found to be a long and continuous use, is entitled to prevail until the plaintiffs who are starting up an opposition ferry can show a Crown grant or give evidence from which a Crown grant can be presumed. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs, which will include fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for arrears of rent—Previous decree, whether proves landlord's title—Presumption as to continuance of relationship—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, ill (d).

In a suit for arrears of rent a decree for rent obtained by the landlord in a prior suit against the same defendants is not merely an item of evidence, but is conclusive as to the relationship between the parties at the time to which the previous suit referred.

Section 114 illustration (d) of the Evidence Act does not compel, but certainly permits, the Court to make a presumption as to the continuance of the state of things.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Burdwan, dated the 21st of February 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, Additional Court, Kalna, dated the 30th of May 1912.

Babu Kherode Nath Bhuya, for the Appellant.

Babu D. N. Bagchi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for arrears of rent. It was necessary for the plaintiff to establish that he was the defendants' landlord. He proposed to do that by utilizing, among other things a decree for rent which he had obtained in a prior suit against these defendants. The lower Appellate Court has rejected the decree as an item of evidence, apparently on the ground that it was ex parte. This is manifestly erroneous. The decree is not merely an item of evidence, but is conclusive as to the relationship between the parties at the time to which the previous suit referred. That does not mean that in the circumstances of this case it is conclusive as to the present relation between the parties. But it is good and valuable evidence in so far as it establishes the relationship at a time that has passed. Its value becomes more apparent when the terms of section 114 of the Evidence Act and illustration (d) are borne in mind, which does not compel, but certainly permits, the Court to make a presumption as to the continuance of the state of things. The decree has been excluded from consideration by the lower Appellate Court in error.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send back the case in order that it may be determined according to law. Costs hitherto incurred will abide the result.

Decree reversed; Case remanded.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 23rd of January 1914.

Mr. Ramakant Malaviya, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are these:—The father of the plaintiff-respondent No. 1 was the owner of an enclosure, on one side of which there was a temple. The enclosure was sold by auction in execution of a decree and was purchased by the defendants. There was some litigation between the parties as regards the portion of the building known as the temple. In that litigation the defendants failed. It is alleged that the defendants have now practically closed, by staking bricks, three doors appertaining to the house, and have stopped the flow of water through a drain which had existed for a number of years. The present suit was accordingly brought for removal of the obstruction to the three doors and for restoration of the drain and for an injunction. It was alleged that the door C, marked on the plan filed with the plaint, was used as a passage and that the doors A and B were used principally for light and air. The Courts below decreed the claim. Upon appeal this decree was set aside and the claim of the plaintiffs was dismissed in its entirety. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that the lower Appellate Court has wrongly applied the provisions of section 13 of the Easements Act to this case. The learned Vakil for the appellants relies on clause 3 (d) of that section, which is to the effect that if an easement is apparent and continuous and necessary for enjoying the said subject as it was enjoyed when the transfer took effect, the transferee shall, unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, be entitled to such easement. It is urged that the learned Judge ought not to have considered the matter from the point of view of an easement of necessity, but should have determined whether the doors were necessary for the enjoyment of the building as it was enjoyed before the transfer in favour of the defendant took effect. In our opinion as regards the three doors in question, the learned Judge has found, upon a consideration of all the circumstances, that the keeping open of the three doors is not necessary for the enjoyment of the premises as it was enjoyed before the sale to the defendants. He visited the locality and he has found that according to the statement of the plaintiffs themselves, the doors used practically to remain closed always. He further found that there is access to the house of the plaintiffs otherwise than through one of these doors, and that in two of the rooms there is plenty of light and air, and sufficient light and air can be obtained without the opening of the doors. He came to the conclusion that the existence of these doors was not in the least necessary either for egress and ingress or for the enjoyment of light and air. The meaning of his finding clearly is that for the enjoyment of the house as it was enjoyed before the sale, the existence of the doors is not necessary. In view of this finding the claim in respect of the three doors has been rightly dismissed. As for the drain, we do not agree with the learned Judge. He himself finds that there is no other drain in the house of the plaintiffs, and that for the flow of water from the rasoi or kitchen of the house there is no other outlet. It is thus clear that the maintaining of the drain is necessary for the enjoyment of the house for the flow of water from the kitchen, and the defendants are not entitled to close the drain. Of course the plaintiffs' right is a right to use the drain for the flow of water from the kitchen or rasoi, and not for the discharge of ordinary sullage water or rain water from the whole house. The defendants will be at liberty to cover up the drain, but in such a way as not to obstruct the flow of water as it has hitherto been discharged from the kitchen or rasoi. We accordingly vary the decree of the Court below to this extent that we direct that the drain be restored for the discharge of water from the kitchen, the defendants being at liberty to cover it up in such a way as not to obstruct the flow of water from the kitchen. In other respects we affirm the decree of the Court below. The parties will pay and receive costs in all Courts proportionately to failure and success, and the costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

In a suit for possession on the basis of a sale-deed the plaintiff (vendee) has to prove his title where the defendant (vendor) in possession pleads that he is only a benamidar but he shows a prima facie title by producing and proving his conveyance which contains a recital of receipt of the consideration. [p. 697, col. 1.]

In such a case the onus is upon the defendant (vendor) to show the non-payment of consideration. [p. 697, col. 2.]

Where after the close of evidence on both sides, the plaintiff applied to the Court to be allowed to adduce further evidence but the application having been disallowed, he applied to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit but the order granting this latter application was set aside on revision, and the plaintiff then applied for summons on certain persons to prove a certain part of his case, but the defendants objecting, the Court did not allow these persons to be produced, though present:

Held, that under the circumstances the plaintiff ought to have been allowed to tender further evidence. [p. 698, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of Mr. Justice Coxe, dated the 28th of May 1914, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2959 of 1911.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant sued the defendant company for damages for having demolished a building, a 19/80th share of which is alleged by the plaintiff to have been purchased by him from one Ram Chandra Banerjee in the name of one Bepin Behari Haldar on the 10th December 1907. The defendants also purchased the same share from the heirs of Ram Chandra on the 22nd September 1908. They also purchased the remaining shares from the other co-sharers and dismantled the whole building in October 1909.

The defence was that the alleged purchase by the plaintiff from Ram Chandra was a colourable and benami transaction and the plaintiff had not acquired any title under it.

The Court of first instance placed the burden of proving the benami upon the defendants, and decreed the suit, but that decree was reversed by the District Judge on appeal, and the decree of the District Judge was affirmed on second appeal by Mr. Justice Coxe. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal under the Letters Patent.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that the Munsif had wrongly placed the onus of proving benami upon the defendants. He held that "the burden was clearly upon the plaintiff to prove the reality of the sale to him and the fact that consideration had passed from him to Ram Chandra," that he had failed to prove the same, and came to the conclusion that the sale to the plaintiff was a colourable and benami transaction.

Now, the plaintiff claimed the property under a registered conveyance from Ram Chandra, through whom the defendants also claimed it. The execution of the kobala by Ram Chandra has been proved and the kobala has been produced by the plaintiff. Apparently a valid transfer was effected by the kobala, and the onus, therefore, lay upon the defendants to show that it was not a real transfer.

It is contended on behalf of the defendants that the principle is inapplicable to a case where the defendant in possession sets up the plea of benami. No doubt the fact that the defendants are in possession is in their favour, and is an important element to be taken into consideration in determining whether the transaction is benami. But there is no presumption in favour of benami even where the defendant is in possession. In Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (1), where the plaintiff sought to recover possession on the strength of certain deeds against the defendants in possession who pleaded that the deeds were benami, the Judicial Committee observed: "It is familiar to us all that the system of putting property benami is so extremely common in India that the mere fact of a deed being executed in proper form, and apparently effecting a valid transfer to another, is not as good evidence of a real transfer as it would be in other countries, and even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction will suffice for the purpose. Still such a transfer cannot be considered as nothing. The person who impugns its apparent character must show something or other to establish that it is a benami or sham transaction."

No doubt a plaintiff has to prove his title where the defendant in possession pleads that he is only a benamidar, but he shows a prima facie title by producing and proving his conveyance, which usually contains a recital of the receipt of consideration. In the present case also, the kobala contains an admission by the vendor (Ram Chandra) of the receipt of consideration. That admission is evidence, though not conclusive, against the defendants [Foolee Bibee v. Bessirudi Mirdha (2)]. The learned District Judge, however, is of opinion that this "case should be distinguished from those cases in which one of the parties to a deed denies the truth of a statement made as to the passing of the consideration;" and that the "issue of benami or not benami turns principally on the question whether the plaintiff has shown that he paid the stated consideration to Ram Chandra." But the defendants stand in the same position as Ram Chandra himself through whom they claim, and the non-payment of consideration is a matter to be taken into account in determining whether the kobala was benami. The onus, therefore, is upon the defendants to show the non-payment of consideration.

It is contended on behalf of the defendants that the learned District Judge has considered the question of possession, and upon a consideration of the whole evidence has come to the conclusion that the kobala was a benami one, and the same view has been taken by Coxe, J. But it seems to us that the conclusion arrived at has been influenced by the view taken by the District Judge as to the incidence of the burden of proof. The question of possession, no doubt, is to be taken into consideration as well as other circumstances and probabilities in deciding whether a kobala is a real and bona fide or merely a benami transaction, but the learned District Judge appears to have arrived at the conclusion that the kobala was benami by placing the onus upon the plaintiff of proving the reality of the transaction and the passing of the consideration.

The judgment of Coxe, J., and the decree of the District Judge are accordingly set aside, and the case sent back to the lower Appellate Court for a re-hearing of the appeal according to law. Costs to abide the result

The plaintiff complains before us, that some important evidence which he wanted to adduce for proving payment of consideration to his vendor had been excluded by the Courts below.

It is stated in the kobala of the plaintiff that the consideration was paid by a currency note for rupees one thousand, the number of which was mentioned in it. The plaintiff stated in his deposition that he drew the note from the Commercial Bank and paid it over to his vendor, Ram Chandra. After the close of evidence on both sides he applied to the Court to be allowed to adduce further evidence, but the application having been disallowed, the plaintiff applied to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The application was granted by the Court, but the order was set aside on revision by the Court, and the Munsif was directed to take up the case at the stage at which the order for withdrawal was made. The plaintiff then applied for summons upon the Liquidator of the Commercial Bank and the Comptroller of Paper Currency to produce certain books of their offices and it appears that certain clerks of the said office were present in Court with the books required. The defendants objected to the reception of further evidence, and the Munsif was of opinion that having regard to the order of the High Court the plaintiff could not be allowed to adduce further evidence. We think that under the circumstances the plaintiff ought to have been allowed to tender the books in evidence and we direct the lower Appellate Court to do so. The defendants also will be entitled to adduce evidence relevant to the question.

Decree set aside ; Case remanded.

Mortgage—Mortgage for Rs. 105 unregistered but known to subsequent purchaser, proof of, if necessary—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 58—Subsequent purchaser, right of.

Where the purchaser of certain lands admitted previous knowledge of a mortgage of part of the lands in possession of the mortgagee:

Held, that it was unnecessary to prove the mortgage in a suit for possession by the purchaser against the mortgagee and that the fact that the mortgage-deed was for Rs. 105 and was unregistered was immaterial. [p. 699, col. 2.]

Held, further, that the purchase being subject to the mortgage, the purchaser could not recover the land without paying the mortgage-money. [p. 699, col. 2.]

An admission made by a party when examined as a witness comes within the purview of section 58 of the Evidence Act. [p. 699, col. 1.]

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. Dutt, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant alleged that he had purchased a holding from Maung Shwe So for Rs. 600 by a registered deed of sale and that the defendant-respondent had wrongfully entered into two plots and, he sued for possession of these two plots.

There is realy no dispute as to the facts. The whole holding originally belonged to Maung Shwe So and some years ago he mortgaged it to the defendant-respondent's brother-in-law, Maung Tha Gyaw, for Rs. 205. Then he purchased some cattle from the defendant-respondent for Rs. 105 on credit and agreed to create a second mortgage on the land in his favour for this amount. A document was executed on stamped paper but it was not registered. On account of this agreement Maung Tha Gyaw gave the defendant-respondent possession of the two plots in suit, though he was under no obligation to do so. Then Maung Shwe So redeemed the remaining plots from Maung Tha Gyaw apparently for Rs. 205. Finally Maung Shwe So executed a registered deed of sale of the whole land in favour of the plaintiff-appellant and then as the defendant-respondent began to cultivate the two plots already in his possession, the plaintiff-appellant sued him.

The Township Judge held that as the mortgage-bond executed in favour of the defendant-respondent had not been registered, this second mortgage could not be proved and, therefore, the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to a decree.

Part of the defendant-respondent's case was that a condition of the second mortgage was that if Maung Shwe So did not redeem the land by 1269, it should become the property of the 1st and 2nd mortgagees. When the plaintiff-appellant was examined as a witness he admitted the mortgage and this agreement, but alleged that prior to purchasing the land he had inquired from Maung Shwe So whether there was encumbrance on the land and was told that there was none. The learned Additional Judge of the lower Appellate Court accordingly held that as the plaintiff-appellant had admitted the 2nd mortgage and the agreement then made, it was unnecessary to prove them and the fact that the mortgage-deed was unregistered was immaterial, and that as Maung Shwe So had not redeemed the two plots in suit by 1269, they had become the property of the defendant-respondent and that Maung Shwe So, therefore, had no interest in them at the time he executed the deed of sale which he could transfer to the plaintiff-appellant. He, therefore, reversed the first Court's decree and dismissed the suit.

It is now urged that as the plaintiff-appellant's admission was not made in the pleadings but in his deposition as a witness, the Court could not dispense with proof of the second mortgage in the defendant-respondent's favour, that the position of the burden of proof is fixed by the pleadings and cannot be altered, and that as owing to the non-registration of his document the defendant-respondent was debarred from putting it in evidence, he was unable to prove anything and the plaintiff-appellant should have succeeded.

This argument is ingenious but it cannot be sustained. Courts have to try questions on which the parties disagree, not those on which they agree. There is no authority for the contention that the words "at the hearing" in section 58, Evidence Act, refer only to the 1st hearing at which issues are framed. For instance A sued B for compensation for breach of contract and B denied the breach but also alleged certain facts in mitigation of damages in case the breach were held proved. The burden of proof would be on A but the burden of proving the special facts would be on B. If then on cross-examination as a witnesses A admitted these facts, it would obviously be waste of time to require B to prove them. It not unfrequently happens, especially when one party at the first hearing has merely put the other party to the proof of a certain fact, that after a certain amount of evidence of that fact has been given, the first party or his Advocate admits it in order to save time and expense. I have no doubt that an admission made by a party when examined as a witness comes within the purview of section 58, Evidence Act, and is not merely a piece of evidence carrying special weight as coming from the enemy's camp, and I do not think this decision is really in conflict with the decision of Sadhu v. Nga Si Gyi (1).

I am of opinion, therefore, that there was no necessity to prove the second mortgage and as the plaintiff-appellant was aware of it at the time he purchased the land, the purchase is subject to that mortgage. He stated that he questioned Maung Shwe So prior to the purchase and was told that there was no encumbrance on the land, but it was not only Maung Shwe So whom he should have questioned, he should also have inquired of the defendant-respondent who is and was in possession.

The plaintiff-appellant, therefore, cannot recover the land without paying the mortgage-money, Rs. 105. On the other hand the contention that owing to Maung Shwe So's failure to redeem, the land has become the defendant-respondent's property cannot be sustained. It was explained in Nga Kyaw v. Nga Zu Nut (2) that such an agreement could not execute itself, and that a further transaction was necessary to give it effect.

The plaintiff-appellant therefore, has a right to redeem the land. The decree of the Court below is accordingly set aside and the plaintiff-appellant will be given a decree for redemption for Rs. 105, six months being allowed. There will be no order as to costs in any of the three Courts as both sides have contended for too much.

Decree set aside.

The principle, that a party to a fraudulent transaction is entitled to relief in a Court of Equity as against his fraudulent confederate so long as the fraud contemplated has not been carried into effect, is not inapplicable merely because the party suffers a decree to be passed against him in a fictitious and collusive suit which is only a part of the fraudulent scheme. JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff and the defendants in the present suit are residents of Chittagong, who were carrying on business at Rangoon. In 1898 the business of the plaintiff and his brother, defendant No. 5, failed and it is alleged that he thereupon under the advice of Nur Ali, the predecessor of defendants Nos. 2 and 4, paid Nur Ali a sum of Rs. 50,000 out of his own pocket for the purpose of settling with the creditors of the joint business. In 1899 the plaintiff and his brother fell out and the latter declined to contribute his share of Rs. 50,000 thus paid by the plaintiff. The plaintiff admits that he thereupon on the 5th June 1899 at the instigation of Nur Ali executed in favour of Nur Ali a collusive mortgage-bond for Rs. 67,000, in which he gave as security the joint ancestral properties of himself and his brother, signing the bond on behalf of himself and also on behalf of his brother upon the authority of an alleged power-of-attorney. Being subsequently advised that the power-of-attorney had ceased to be operative after the dissolution of the partnership between the plaintiff and his brother and a mortgage-deed executed after such dissolution was not binding upon his brother, the plaintiff again at the instigation of Nur Ali executed a collusive promissory note for Rs. 5,000 in favour of Nur Ali on the 10th June 1900 on behalf of himself and his brother. In this document also the plaintiff signed for his brother as his duly constituted agent, and his case is that it was intended that Nur Ali should bring a test suit upon the promissory note and in the event of obtaining a decree against both the plaintiff and defendant No. 5, should execute the decree against the defendant No. 5 alone. A suit was next to be brought upon the mortgage-bond and a similar procedure was to be adopted in respect of it in execution. The plaintiff does not deny that his scheme from the outset was to defraud his brother. But all did not go smoothly. The plaintiff returned to Chittagong and was away from Rangoon for nearly three years. It is alleged that during his absence and without any notice to him Nur Ali in 1903 transferred the promissory note to the first defendant, Hedayet Ali. Hedayet Ali then sued upon the note and on the 25th November 1903 obtained a decree against the plaintiff alone. The decree was subsequently transferred to Chittagong for execution and on the 17th August 1907 attachment of the plaintiff's immoveable property was made in the Chittagong District. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong on the 6th December 1907 praying for the following reliefs.

1. That the decree in Suit No. 86 of 1903 of the Chief Court of Lower Burma on the basis of the said on demand-note, which is without consideration and ineffectual, be declared to be collusive, fraudulent and ineffectual and not binding upon the plaintiff and the said decree be declared null and void and incapable of execution against the plaintiff.

2. That an order be made for whatever other relief the Court thinks fit to grant under the circumstances of the case.

Separate written statements were filed on the one hand by defendant No. 1, Hedayet Ali, and on the other by defendants Nos. 2-4, the sons of Nur Ali who have succeeded to his estate upon his death. The Subordinate Judge found in the plaintiff's favour upon the issues relating to jurisdiction and limitation and res judicata, but he found against the plaintiff on each of the most important issues which run as follows:

5. Whether the decree in the suit was obtained by fraud as alleged in the plaint?

6. Whether the defendant No. 1 was servant benamidar of the deceased Nur Ali Chowdhury?

7. Whether the promissory note on demand on which the decree complained against has been based was executed by the plaintiff under misrepresentation and inducement without consideration as alleged in the plaint?

8. What relief, if any, can the plaintiff get in the suit?

The suit having been dismissed, the plaintiff appeals.

Although the learned Subordinate Judge finds that there was no fraud on the part of Nur Ali, either in execution of the mortgage-deed of the 5th June 1899 or in the execution of the demand promissory note of the 10th June 1900, or in its subsequent transfer to Hedayet Ali or in the matter of the decree of the 25th November 1903 obtained in the Chief Court of Lower Burma, he is of opinion that the last finding alone is sufficient for defeating the suit now before us. We think, however, that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing that he was prevented from making a proper defence to the suit by the fraudulent assurances received from Nur Ali and Hedayat Ali. The learned Subordinate Judge has, in our opinion, refused on inadequate grounds to accept the evidence of the plaintiff and of his witness D'Costa to the effect that Nur Ali in the presence of Hedayet Ali assured the plaintiff that he would take out a decree against the plaintiff and his brother, defendant No. 5, but execute it against the latter only and that relying upon that assurance, the plaintiff went to his home in Chittagong and took no further steps to defend the suit. The plaintiff admits that one Kala Mia, a mutual friend of the parties, attempted to induce Nur Ali to withdraw the suit, that Nur Ali declined to do so and that the plaintiff thereupon filed a written statement alleging undue influence in the matter of the promissory note. This admission is not inconsistent with the plaintiff's allegation that there was a subsequent arrangement between the parties by which Nur Ali agreed to proceed in execution against defendant No. 5 only. The view that there was some such agreement is further supported by an examination of the various transactions between the parties. To begin with we must, in disagreement with the learned Subordinate Judge, hold that mortgage-bond of 1899 was a fraudulent contrivance for cheating defendant No. 5. The partnership between the plaintiff and his brother was dissolved on the 31st July 1898 by mutual consent and a notice to that effect was duly published in the local official Gazette dated the 25th February 1899. There is no reason for doubting that after the dissolution the claims against the plaintiff amounted to Rs. 67,000 as set out in the schedule to the mortgage-bond. The plaintiff's case is that out of this sum he paid Rs. 50,000 and Nur Ali paid Rs. 2,500, but that the bond was a wholly collusive affair. It is contended by the defendant that the whole of this sum of Rs. 67,000 was paid by Nur Ali out of his own pocket. Upon the face of it this allegation is untrue, for it appears from the bond that a sum of Rs. 8,000 was not paid by Nur Ali at all, while the plaintiff asserts without contradiction that a cheque for the sum of Rs. 6,500 issued by Nur Ali in plaintiff's favour was subsequently dishonoured. It further appears that at the time when Nur Ali is said to have been making these advances to the plaintiff at an interest of 12 per cent. per annum, he was himself borrowing morey at much higher interest and that his liabilities were then certainly not less than Rs. 2,00,000. In our opinion he was not in a position to lend so large a sum as Rs. 67,000 to the plaintiff. It is noticeable that defendants Nos. 2 to 4 do not come forward to depose, nor do they attempt to show either by their account books or by calling any attesting witnesses, that any consideration passed. On the other hand the plaintiff's witness Kalusemam states on oath that on the same day that the bond was executed Nur Ali gave the plaintiff an acknowledgment, in the shape of the letter Exhibit 13, of the payment of Rs. 50,000 by plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge has declined to believe Kalusemam and ordinarily we should in appeal be loth to interfere with his finding on a question of the credibility of a witness, but in the present case this witness as well as the witness D'Costa was examined on commission and we in appeal are in as good a position as the learned trial Judge to judge his veracity. We think that having regard to the witness's present position in life and all the circumstances of the case, his story as to the character of the bond is substantially true. It is to be noticed that no one denies that the signature on the letter purporting to be that of Nur Ali was his.

The plaintiff charged his brother's properties when he had no authority to do so. His object was to realise from his brother a part of the Rs. 50,000 he had paid to Nur Ali. The mortgage-deed was clearly a fraudulent transaction. The same remark applies to the promissory note executed in the following year. The defendants allege that Nur Ali lent Rs. 5,000 on this note to enable plaintiff to pay a creditor named Verappa Chetty. But Nur Ali was then in no better financial position and the plaintiff's story that the promissory note was executed for the purpose of bringing a test case, to be followedup in the event of success by the larger suit upon the mortgage-bond, is true.

The plaintiff's case on this point is supported by his witness Abdul Gani. On the other side we have no evidence whatsoever to prove passing of consideration Nur Ali's account books would have been very valuable evidence in behalf of the defence. Moreover, if the schedule to the mortgage-bond is to be believed Verappa Chetty, though a former creditor, was not one of the creditors in June 1899. It appears from Exhibit II that the plaintiff owed Rs. 15,000 to M. T. T. V. Verappa Chetty, which wass ecured by a mortgage of eleven boats. The plaintiff swears that the debt was satisfied by making over the boats to the creditors and the bond has been produced by the plaintiff in the present case. Did he then again become a creditor subsequently? It is singular that we have no definite evidence upon this point on either side, and we think that the probabilities are that the alleged consideration for the promissory note was a fictitious debt. At that time Rajab Ali had lost all credit and it is not likely that a Chetty would advance a loan of Rs. 5,000 at such a time without any security. We are satisfied that the document was fraudulent, collusive and without consideration. The Court below relies upon a statement of the plaintiff that he offered to renew the promissory note when he proposed to Nur Ali to withdraw the suit, but plaintiff has offered an explanation which may be accepted.

The defendants are in no better position in the matter of assignment of the promissory note by Nur Ali, and here again we must differ from the learned Judge's finding upon a question of fact. Hedayet Ali came to Burma without any money and worked for some years as Nur Ali's servant till apparently by means of a successful marriage, he started business on his own account. He says he paid Nur Ali Rs. 4,500 for the note. For a man of his position this was a large sum to lay out on an obviously bad investment, for from the notification in Burma Gazettee he must have known that Rajab Ali and his brother had dissolved partnership long before the execution of the alleged note and that so far as the defendant No. 5 was concerned, it was extremely doubtful whether he was liable for the debt. The plaintiff is supported by his witness Abdul Bari and Abdul Rasul, who state that Nur Ali made a benami transfer to Hedayet Ali who was then a fellow-employee in Nur Ali's service. On the other hand Hedayat Ali's brother, Ahmad Mia, and witness Sayanutulla depose to a cash payment of Rs. 4,500 to Nur Ali and Hedayet Ali. But the latter witness is on hostile terms to the plaintiff and the balance of evidence is decidedly in the plaintiff's favour. We have to observe again that the defendants have declined to produce any account books to show the payment or receipt of the alleged consideration. The result is that, in our opinion, the assignment was fraudulent and part of the general scheme to defraud defendant No. 5.

Finally, we come to the proceedings in the suit in Rangoon. The bond was executed on the 10th June 1900. The suit was instituted on the 9th June 1903 when Rajab Ali was absent at Chittagong. Rajab Ali filed his written statement on the 6th July 1903 and Faiz Ali filed his on some date in the same month not disclosed in the evidence. The plaintiff's case is that shortly before he filed his written statement, Kala Mia made an unsuccessful attempt to get Nur Ali to withdraw the suit; that a few days after that he met Nur Ali in Court and was advised by Nur Ali not to contest the suit; that not satisfied with this assurance he on the 11th August 1903 applied for a Commission to examine witnesses; that that night or the following night Nur Ali and Hedayet Ali came to his house and assured him that the suit was for his benefit and advised him to leave by the next day's steamer, and that he accordingly did so. It is alleged that the witness D'Costa, whose father had been in plaintiff's service and, his mother were present at this conversation. We think this story is substantially true. It is argued that the plaintiff had the full knowledge of the suit and that as he failed to defend it, he alone must be responsible. But the question is whether the plaintiff was deceived by any promise made by Nur Ali and, in our opinion, the reply must be in the affirmative. The plaintiff was induced into the belief that Nur Ali would obtain the decree against the plaintiff and defendant No. 5 but would execute it against the defendant No. 5 alone. It appears that on the 25th November 1903 the Court, after examining the defendant No. 5, recorded the following order: "Mr. Burjorji, after examining the said defendant, says that he cannot carry the case further against him. There is, therefore, no sufficient evidence on the record to prove what is required, namely, the authority of the second defendant to his brother, the first defendant, to borrow the money sued for. The power-of-attorney, which the first defendant held from the second defendant, was for the purpose of partnership and this was dissolved in July 1898—two years before the promissory note in question was signed. The suit must be dismissed as against the second defendant with costs. There will be a decree against the first defendant, who admits execution of the promissory note but has not appeared or offered any evidence on the other issues, the burden of proving which lay upon him."

It may be that it was not Nur Ali's fault that the Court declined to give a decree against the defendant, No. 5 but that does not affect the question whether there was fraud upon the plaintiff, if the plaintiff was in fact induced by Nur Ali not to defend the suit upon the assurance that the decree would be passed jointly against the two defendants but would be executed against the plaintiff's brother alone.

The result is that we are satisfied that the mortgage-bond and the promissory note were executed with the intention of defrauding the defendant No. 5 Faiz Ali; that Nur Ali thereafter turned against his confederate and with the intention of defrauding him assigned the promissory note to Hedayet Ali; and fraudulently caused an ex parte decree to be obtained thereupon. We understand that a suit has been instituted upon the mortgage-bond for Rs. 67,000. The question whether the bond is a real or fictitious transaction does not directly arise in the present case. It arises incidentally and we desire to make it clear that our finding so far as that bond is concerned is based solely on the evidence before us and is necessarily incidental.

The decree being a fraudulent one, the question is, has the plaintiff any remedy? Is the plaintiff debarred from relief, because he was a party to a scheme for defrauding his brother, although as a matter of fact the brother was not defrauded?

Now it is well-established where the contemplated fraud has not been effected, a party to a fraudulent transaction does not lose his right to be relieved from the effect of such a transaction. It is unnecessary to discuss the authorities upon the point, as the question has been finally set at rest by the Judicial Committee in the case of Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1). In that case a benami deed of sale was executed in order to defeat the claim of an equitable mortgagee, but his claim was not defeated and the Judicial Committee observed:—"The plaintiff, in suing to recover possession of his property, is not carrying out the illegal transaction, but is seeking to put every one, as far as possible, in the same position as they were in before that transaction was determined upon. It is the defendant who is relying upon the fraud, and is seeking to make a title to the lands through and by means of it. And despite his anxiety to effect great moral ends, he cannot be permitted to do this. And, further, the purpose of the fraud having not only not been effected, but absolutely defeated, there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff from repudiating the entire transaction, revoking all authority of his confederate to carry out the fraudulent scheme, and recovering possession of his property. The decision of the Court of Appeal in Taylor v. Bowers (2), and the authorities upon which that decision is based, clearly establish this. Symes v. Hughes (3) and In re Great Berlin Steamboat Company (4) are to the same effect. And the authority of these decisions, as applied to a case like the present, is not, in their Lordships' opinion, shaken by the observations of Fry, L. J., in Kearley v. Thomson (5)."

It is contended, however, on behalf of the respondent that the transaction in that case rested merely upon the conveyance and that the principle enunciated in that case is inapplicable where, as in the present case, the original relations of the parties had merged in a decree of the Court. It is urged that a party to a collusive decree is, bound by it and reliance is placed upon the cases of Chenvirappa v. Puttappa (6), Ahmedbhoy Hubibhoy v. Vulleebhoy Cassumbhoy (7), quoting Prudham v. Phillips (8), Venkataramanna v. Viramma (9), Rangammal v. Venkatachari (10), Varadarajulu Naidu v. Srinivasulu Naidu (11). In the last two cases, the fraud had been partially carried out, and those cases, therefore, need not be considered. In the first three, however, the fraud contemplated does not appear to have been effected.

On the other hand, the Allahabad High Court in Param Singh v. Lalji Mal (12) held that the plaintiff in that case was entitled to recover possession of properties in respect of which he had executed a fictitious deed of conditional sale, in order to protect the properties from the claims of his son, and had suffered judgment to go by default in a suit for foreclosure upon the deed, on the defendant undertaking that the decree would not be executed and if executed, the property would be restored to him. The learned Judges were of opinion that the plaintiff was not estopped by the decree, and that even if it were held that the plaintiff was bound by the decree, he was entitled to insist upon the agreement and on the strength of it to recover possession from the defendant. The case was not followed by the Bombay High Court in Chenvirappa v. Puttappa (6). But the Bombay case, as well as some of the Madras cases cited above, were considered by this Court in the case of Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (13), and the learned Judges declined to follow those cases, if they laid down anything inconsistent with the decisions of this Court. In the case of Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (13) there was no decree passed upon the conveyance, and the question of the effect of a collusive decree upon one of the parties to it does not appear to have been considered in that case. In a later case, however, Akhil Prodhan v. Manmatha Nath Kar (14), the Court relieved the plaintiff from the effect of a collusive ex parte decree. The facts of that case are given in the head-note, and are as follows :—"In 1898, a tenant executed a fictitious conveyance of his land in favour of A, with a view to protect himself from invasion of his rights by his landlords. In 1899 he, to protect himself from A, who proved unfaithful, induced his landlords to institute a fictitious suit for rent. That suit was decreed on the 7th November 1899. The landlords took out execution of that decree. A thereupon preferred a claim which was disallowed on the 20th January 1900. The decree was subsequently executed, and at the sale which followed, the landlords purchased the holding on the 19th March 1900 and possession was delivered on the 5th June 1900. On the 10th April 1900, A sued the tenant and the landlords for declaration of his title on the basis of his conveyance; but on the 23rd July 1900 this suit was withdrawn. In 1906 the landlords turned against the tenant and with the help of the Police took away by force the crops raised by him. On the 15th March 1907 the tenant commenced the present suit for declaration that the entire proceedings in the rent suit of 1899 were fictitious and that the landlords did not acquire any title on the basis of their purchase at the execution sale. The plaintiff also alleged that the landlords-defendants agreed to execute a release and in the prayer clause of the plaint he asked for a decree for execution of such release by the landlords."

It was held that as the conveyance in favour of A was a fictitious document, A had no real title to the property and was not defrauded: that the case thus falls within the principle of the decision of this Court in Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (13) and of the Judicial Committee in Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1), namely, that to enable a fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud, the contemplated fraud must be effected, when and where alone does the fraudulent grantor or giver lose the right to claim the aid of the law to recover the property he has parted with. The plaintiff is consequently not disentitled to protection in a Court of Equity. It was declared that the rent suit and all proceedings based thereon were fictitious and had not affected the plaintiff's title and the plaintiff's possession was confirmed. The two cases referred to in the judgment, viz., Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (13) and Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1), were both cases in which the plaintiff sought to be relieved from the effect of a fraudulent conveyance and cases where a decree of Court had been passed upon it. Apparently, therefore, in the opinion of the learned Judges in the case of Akhil Prodhan v. Manmatha Nath Kar (14), the question whether a party to a fraudulent transaction is entitled to protection in a Court of Equity depends upon whether the fraud has been carried out, irrespective of the question whether a collusive decree has been passed between the parties. The learned Judges in dealing with the contention whether section 317 of the Civil Procedure Code barred the suit, which was overruled by them on the ground that a fictitious decree was passed in a fictitious suit and that the sale held in execution of that decree was equally fictitious, referred to the observations of Lord Brougham in Bandon v. Beecher (15): "A sentence is a judicial determination of a cause agitated between real parties, upon which a real interest has been settled; in order to make a sentence there must be a real interest, a real argument, a real prosecution, a real defence, a real decision. Of all these requisites not one takes place in the case of a fraudulent and collusive suit; there is no Judge, but a person invested with the ensigns of a Judicial Office is misemployed in listening to a fictitious cause proposed to him; there is no party litigating, there is no party defendant, no real interest brought into question." It is true that these observations were made in a case where the person who impugned the decree was not a party to it. But he was a tenant in remainder and was treated in argument in that case as having been represented by the parties to the former suit, and the observations were relied upon in the case of Akhil Prodhan v. Manmatha Nath Kar (14) as showing the nature of a fictitious and collusive suit.

We agree with the decision in the case of Akhil Prodhan v. Manmatha Nath Kar (14) and Param Singh v. Lalji Mal (12). We think that the principle that a party to a fraudulent transaction is entitled to relief in a Court of Equity as against his fraudulent confederate so long as the fraud contemplated has not been carried into effect, is not inapplicable merely because the party suffers a decree to be passed against him in a fictitious and collusive suit which is only a part of the fraudulent scheme.

But even if the decree cannot be impugned by the plaintiff, we think that having regard to the agreement that it would not be enforced against the plaintiff, the latter is entitled to relief. The Bombay High Court in the case of Chenvirappa v. Puttappa (6) is of opinion that such an agreement should be pleaded in the first suit and cannot be made the basis or support of a separate subsequent suit by the defendant in the earlier case. But we agree with the view taken by the Allahabad Court that the agreement bound the plaintiff in the first suit not to execute his decree and the question whether it barred execution could not have been determined in that former suit and, therefore, the then defendant (the present plaintiff) is not estopped by the decree and is entitled to have it declared that the decree is incapable of execution.

There is no prayer for injunction but we can grant that relief under the prayer for general relief, if it were necessary to grant relief by way of injunction. We are of opinion however that it is unnecessary to do so, and it would be sufficient to declare, having regard to the agreement not to execute the decree, that it cannot be executed, a declaration expressely prayed for by the plaintiff.

It is true that a Court of Justice will not interpose actively in favour of a party who is particeps criminis to an illegal or fraudulent transaction but will leave him to the consequences of his own inequity. But here it is the defendant who by applying for executing the fictitious decree sought the assistance of the Court actively in his favour, and the plaintiff thereupon sought the assistance of the Court to prevent the decree being put into execution.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is set aside and the ex parte decree, dated the 25th November 1903, obtained by the defendant is declared incapable of execution. But having regard to the circumstances of the case, each party will bear its own costs in both Courts.

Decree set aside.

Mr. Ba Dun, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant, Ka Gu's father having died, Ka Gu sued his mother, Ma Hnin Ngwe, and other members of the family for 1/4th share of the joint estate of his father and mother, alleging that he is the orasa or eldest capable son of his parents. In the written statement defendants denied that the plaintiff was entitled to claim partition of 1/4th share of the eldest child according to the Burmese Buddhist Law, but gave no particulars of their objection. The District Court without examining the parties and without taking evidence decided in favour of the plaintiff. His mother then applied for review of judgment, pleading that the plaintiff had suppressed the important fact that he had an elder brother, Myat E, who pre-deceased his father after reaching the age of 25 and thus attained the status of orasa before his death. The District Judge admitted the application for review and after hearing the evidence produced by Ma Hnin Ngwe as to the death of her eldest son, Myat E, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

In this appeal it is urged in the first place that the District Court erred in allowing the review of judgment, as the defendants had every opportunity of producing evidence at the first hearing of the case to prove the facts relating to the elder son Myat E. On this point we are of opinion that the District Court ought to have examined the parties in the first instance and ascertained the nature of the defendants' objection to the plaintiff's claim. It is clear that the Judge passed his first judgment under a misapprehension as to the true facts of the case and that though the defendants were partly to blame in giving no particulars of their objection in their written statement, the omission would have been of no consequence if the Judge had followed the ordinary procedure and questioned the parties as to the family history before framing issues. We decide, therefore, that there was sufficient cause for granting the review.

It is now admitted by Mr. Villa for the appellant that if there was an elder capable son who died at the age of 25, the younger son, Ka Gu, has no right to the status of orasa and his suit must be dismissed. This is clear from the ruling in Tun Myaing v. Ba Tun (1). Ka Gu was the eldest surviving son when his father died, but the eldest surviving son is not necessarily the orasa. In the case above cited, it was held that if the eldest son attains his majority and fulfils the prescribed conditions and then dies before his parents, his position as orasa remains unfilled and the next younger brother does not succeed to it. This is exactly the case alleged by the defendants here.

There remains, therefore, only the question of fact, i.e., whether Ka Gu had an elder brother, Myat E, who attained the status of orasa, before he died in his parents' lifetime. Ma Hnin Ngwe, herself a woman of 89, gave evidence that she had four sons and five daughters, that Maung Myat E was the eldest son and died at the age of 25 and that the plaintiff, Ka Gu, is the youngest son. There is no evidence of birth registration, but this is not surprising seeing that the family lived in a remote district. Ma Hnin Ngwe says she threw away Myat E's horoscope when he died. He was going to become a Upazin when he was 19 years old but was not actually received into the order. He died six or seven years after that. Ma Hnin Ngwe is corroborated by her daughter Ma Hnin, 49 years old, her brother Pe To 61 and Pe To's wife, Ma Shwe Mi, 58. Pe To says that Myat E was born in 1217 and was over 20 when he died. If he was born in 1217 B. E.= 1856 A. D. and died when 25 years old, the year of his death would be 1242 B. E.=1881, that is 32 years ago. Ka Gu gives his own age as 38 years and he would, therefore, have been a very young child when Myat E died. The evidence produced by the defendants is, in my opinion, amply sufficient to establish the fact in question and Ka Gu has made no attempt to rebut it. Myat E having reached the age of manhood before he died, the presumption is that he fulfilled the prescribed conditions as orasa.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. We note that even if Ka Gu were the rightful orasa, his suit for the orasa's share might well have been contested by his mother on the ground that he did not claim the share till 18 months after his father's death. We have recently held that the orasa son must exercise his option of claiming a 1/4th share promptly and that if he fails to do so, he must be held to have abandoned the right.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu Monmohan Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in an action in ejectment commenced on the 10th April 1912. The plaintiff is the admitted proprietor of the land in dispute. The defendants resist his claim on the ground that they came into occupation by his leave and license under an agreement for sale executed on the 12th February 1912, whereby it was stipulated that a conveyance would be executed by the plaintiff in their favour on or before the 13th April 1912. Rupees 80 was fixed as the consideration and the plaintiff was actually paid Rs. 50 on the date of the agreement. The defendants alleged that they subsequently offered the balance but the plaintiff refused to accept the sum and execute a conveyance. The question thus arises, whether this constitutes a sufficient answer to the claim for ejectment.

On behalf of the plaintiff, reliance has been placed upon the decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (1). That case is an authority for the proposition, that a contract of sale followed by delivery of possession does not, when there is no registered sale-deed, create any interest in the property agreed to be sold and, cannot, even if enforcible at the date of suit or decree, be pleaded in defence to an action for ejectment by one who has a legal title to recover. With all respect, we are unable to accept this principle of law as consonant with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience. A contrary view has been adopted in a long series of decisions of this Court, amongst which may be mentioned Bibi Jawahir Kumari v. Chatterput Singh (2), Singheeram Poddar v. Bhagbat Chander Nundi (3), Bepin Behari Mitter v. Tinkowri Pathak (4), Champaklatika Mitra v. Nafar Chandra (5), Sarat Chandra Ghose v. Sham Chand Singh (6), Secretary of State for India v. Forbes (7) and Mati Lal v. Darjeeling Municipality (8). These cases are based on the well-recognised doctrine of equity explained by Sir George Jessel, M. R., in Walsh v. Lonsdale (9), where in pursuance of an agreement for a lease or sale the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite documents have not been executed, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed, provided specific performance can be obtained between the same parties in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined. If we were to accept the contention of the appellant, the result would be this : as soon as the suit for enjoyment is instituted, the defendant must institute in that very Court a counter-suit for specific performance of his contract and obtain a stay of proceedings in the suit for ejectment. When the defendant is successful in the suit for specific performance, he will have the conveyance executed in his favour by the plaintiff or by the Court on his behalf. This will perfect his title and clothe him with authority to continue in possession, with the inevitable result that the suit for ejectment will stand dismissed. Clearly, the Court should not encourage mischievous multiplicity of litigation in this manner. We hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to eject the defendant, nor is he entitled to a decree for the balance of the consideration in this suit because he has not sued to recover the money.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

It is the duty of a Subordinate Judge to follow the decision of its Superior Court which is binding on it and leave it to the Superior Court to take such action with regard to the conflict of the opinion as it may be advised. [p. 709, col. 2.]

Mr. Maung Thin, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—On the 4th day of March 1904 and before the Transfer of Property Act had been extended to the district in which the property in question was situated, the plaintiff mortgaged by way of usufructuary mortgage certain property to the defendant for seven years in consideration of a loan of Rs. 800 and agreed that on the expiry of the seven years, namely, on the full moon day of Tabodwe 1272 he would redeem the mortgaged land for Rs. 850 and that in default, the mortgagees might take possession. The mortgagor failed to redeem on the due day but sued to redeem a year or so later. The lower Court held him to his contract. The Divisional Court, though aware of the decision of this Court in Maung Naung v. Ma Bok Son (1) by which it was bound, preferred to adopt the reasoning of the Upper Burma case of Ma Kyaw v. Nga Zu Nut (2). It has been repeatedly pointed out that the duty of a Subordinate Judge in such circumstances is to draw attention to the decision which he prefers, but to follow the decision that is or should be binding on him and leave it to the Superior Court to take such action with regard to the conflict of the opinion as it may be advised, and the learned Divisional Judge should have known and followed this rule. The ratio decidendi adopted by this Court in the case cited was that the parties should be kept to their contracts save where those contracts were unreasonable. The position adopted by the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma was that the decision should be in accordance with equity, justice and good conscience and that the rules contained in the Transfer of Property Act had in more than one decision been commended to the Courts as worthy to be followed as rules of equity, justice and good conscience. I cannot, however, myself see that in this particular case there is anything unconscionable in a person agreeing to re-pay Rs. 850 for a loan of Rs. 800 on the expiration of the seven years and in default agreeing to leave the lender in undistrubed possession of certain land, the profits of which he was to enjoy during the seven years by way of interest, nor do I think it contrary to, but rather in accordance with, equity, justice and good conscience to keep parties to their agreements made voluntarily and with full knowledge when those agreements are themselves reasonable.

The agreement is perfectly plain and the mortgagor had seven years in which to get ready to discharge his debt and he has only himself to thank if the due date found him unready. Moreover, the decision in Maung Naung v. Ma Bok Son (1) was given in 1902 and was itself based on an earlier decision of 1891. To distrub them might, even if I agreed with the reasoning of the Upper Burma Court, render many transactions and titles dubious. It seems to me to be a case where the maxim of stare decisis should in any event be applied. For both reasons, therefore, I would allow the appeal and restore the decree of the Court of the first instance, with two gold mohurs costs.

Where the District Judge misapprehended a certain entry in the Wajib-ul-arz and, while recording a finding did not in express terms discuss the evidence upon which the finding was based, the High Court, in the absence of a certificate that the finding rested upon no evidence, treated the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this point as a finding of fact with which it could not interfere. Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge of Etawah, dated the 7th March 1914.

Mr. Brij Nath Viyas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiff, who is the appellant here, sought a decree for the resumption of certain rent-free land, consisting of five specified plots with a total area of 5 bighas 4 biswas, in the possession of the defendant-respondent. The suit was filed in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the first Class. He came to the conclusion that the grant in question was assumable at the pleasure of the grantor, and he gave the plaintiff a decree accordingly. The defendant appealed to the District Judge. It would not appear from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that any objection was taken in that Court with regard to the proper form of appeal. The learned District Judge found on the evidence, and principally on the interpretation of a particular clause in the wajib-ul-arz of 1872, that the grant in question was not resumable at the pleasure of the grantor. It does not seem that it was ever suggested, or was ever part of the plaintiff's case, that the grant was liable to resumption under clause (b) or clause (c) of section 154, sub-section (1) of the Tenancy Act. The finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point amounts, therefore, to a finding that this land was not liable to resumption under section 154 of the Tenancy Act. The learned Additional Judge went on to say: "On the evidence I also find that this muafi has been held for 50 years and by two successors to the original grantee." He accordingly declared the defendant, the holder of the said grant, to be the proprietor thereof under section 158 of the Agra Tenancy Act. Having allowed the appeal to this extent, he sent back the case to the Court of the Assistant Collector in order that the matter might be finally determined in accordance with the provisions of section 158 aforesaid by an order fixing the revenue payable by the defendant.

The plaintiff comes to this Court in second appeal. It is contended, first, that no appeal lay to the District Judge from the decision of the Assistant Collector. Undoubtedly a suit for the resumption of a rent-free grant or a suit for the assessment to revenue of a rent-free grant, is placed in the 4th Schedule to the Agra Tenancy Act in group C, that is to say, amongst suits triable by an Assistant Collector of the first Class in which appeal lies to the Revenue Court. This specification in the Schedule must, however, obviously be read subject to the provisions of section 177, clause (c), according to which an appeal lies to the District Judge from the decree of an Assistant Collector of the first Class in all suits (no matter what may be the group of the fourth Schedule to which such suits are assigned) in which a question of proprietary title has been in issue in the Court of first instance and is a matter in issue in the appeal. In the present case the defendant had pleaded all along that the land in suit was not liable to resumption under section 154, and that it had been held rent free for generations, or at least for a period of a hundred years. He expressly pleaded in fact that he was entitled under section 158 of the Tenancy Act to be declared to be the proprietor of this land. The question whether upon these pleadings it can be said that a question of proprietary title has been in issue within the meaning of section 177 clause (c), would seem to be open to argument, but I find that the point is covered by authority. The appellant, no doubt, relies upon the decision of a Bench of this Court in Baldeo Singh v. Mardan Singh (1) and he is able to point out that in that case a suit apparently very similar to the present was in fact appealed from the Court of the Assistant Collector to that of the Commissioner, and was thence taken to the Board of Revenue for final decision. It is clear, however, that the point which the learned Judges of this Court had before them for determination in that case was totally different from the question now before me. They had to decide whether a party who had failed in the Revenue Courts, in a suit to which the provisions of sections 150 and 154 of the Tenancy Act applied, was entitled to challenge the decision of the Revenue Courts by means of a fresh suit instituted in a Civil Court as a Court of first instance. Such a suit the learned Judges held to be clearly barred by the provisions of section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act. That section, however, reserves the appellate jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in all cases to which section 177 of the Act applies. Hence that ruling simply brings me back to the question whether or not the provisions of section 177, clause (c), apply to the appeal filed by the defendant in this case in the Court of the District Judge. I have been referred to two authorities on this point, one is an unreported decision by a single Judge, Nawab Sayed Ali Hasan Khan v. Mohan Das, Civil Revision No. 1 of 1907, decided on the 29th of April 1907. In that case a suit for resumption had been dismissed by the Assistant Collector in whose Court it was filed. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge and the latter held that the appeal lay only to the Court of the Commissioner, and he returned the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court. This order was reversed by this Court in revision and the District Judge was directed to entertain and dispose of the appeal. The next case is the case of Sunder Singh v. Collector of Shahjahanpur (2). The headnote to the report, (8 A. L. J.,) refers to a different matter; but the report itself shows that the learned Judges distinctly held that the provisions of section 177, clause (c), of the Tenancy Act did apply to a case in which the pleadings were substantially the same as those in the case now before me. I accordingly overrule the appellant's contention on this point on the ground that it is concluded by authority.

In the second place, it is contended that the land in question in this suit is held rent free under a liability to resumption at the pleasure of the grantor, and that the finding of the lower Appellate Court to the contrary is based upon a misinterpretation of the documentary evidence viz, the wajib-ul-arz of the year 1872 A. D. In that document the land in suit is included in a specification of certain rent-free holdings in respect of which it is said that they shall continue to be held rent free, but that, if at any time the proprietor desires to get them assessed to rent, he will bring a suit for that purpose in the proper Court and will be bound by the decision of that Court. There is certainly some ambigiuty about these provisions. The learned District Judge, however, has relied upon a decision of the Board of Revenue in a case from that same district, which seems to have been regarded as a test case, and on which the Board of Revenue held that provisions in a wajib ul-arz very similar to those in the document now before me did not constitute the grant resumable at the pleasure of the grantor. I am not prepared to say that the learned District Judge was wrong and I overrule this contention accordingly.

(2) 11 Ind. Cas. 514; 8 A. L. J. 539; 33 A. 553.

A third point has been argued before me, which presumably purports to be taken in the 1st, 4th and 6th paragraphs of the memorandum of appeal before me. In effect the contention is that the lower Appellate Court was not entitled, on the evidence before it, to find that the land in question was a grant which had been held rent free for 50 years and by two successors to the original grantee. The learned District Judge, while recording this finding in express terms, has not discussed the evidence upon which it is based. The memorandum of appeal before me contains no certificate that this finding in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court rests upon no evidence. It has been suggested that the learned District Judge must have presumed that a certain entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833, which was put in evidence by the defendant, referred to the whole of the land in suit, whereas if that document be attentively examined it is evident that it can refer only to a portion of the said land. I should feel some difficulty in deciding whether even a misapprehension of this sort would justify interference in second appeal; but the learned District Judge had before him oral evidence as well. I am not entitled, sitting as a Court of second appeal, to appraise that evidence myself. But having read it along with the wajib-ul-arz of 1833, I can only say that I feel compelled to treat the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this point as a finding of fact with which I cannot interfere.

This appeal, therefore, fails and I dismiss it accordingly with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A. CONDIAH CHETTY—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 38, 52, 54, 83—Principal debtor entitled to avoid but not avoiding contract—Surety, whether liable for breach—Notice of arrival of goods, if offer—Failure to take delivery—Damages.

A surety cannot escape liability on the ground that the circumstances were such that the principal debtor was entitled to avoid the contract, when in fact the contract was not avoided. [p 713, col. 1.]

Where a condition in a contract that notice should be given of the arrival of the goods by a particular ship is not an essential part of the contract, failure to give such notice or a mistake in the notice given, is not a breach of contract entitling one party to avoid it for that reason nor can that notice by itself be deemed to be an offer of performance within the meaning of section 38 of the Contract Act. [p. 713, col. 1.]

Where on the receipt of notice of arrival of goods, one party has to apply for delivery of goods but fails to do so, he commits the breach and is liable in damages. [p. 713, col. 2; p. 714, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgments of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Bakewell, dated 21st October 1913 and 9th December 1913, in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court, in Civil Suit No. 165 of 1912.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendant (the South Indian Export Company, Limited) is the appellant. The only question in this case is whether The perumal Chetty and Company, for whom the plaintiff stood surety with the South Indian Export Company, Limited, was guilty of breaches of the series of contracts (which are set out in the plaint as having taken place between the two Companies) or whether the South Indian Export Company, Limited, was guilty of the breaches. If the South Indian Export Company, Limited, committed the breaches, then the learned Judge's judgment ought to be upheld. If it is the other way, the judgment has to be set aside and the suit has to be dismissed.

So far as I could understand the plaint, it is based upon the allegations that Theperumal Chetty would have been justified in repudiating the contracts and putting an end to the same (see paragraph 9 of the plaint) had he known some facts of which he was ignorant, and that he must be treated as having repudiated and put an end to the contracts (the plaint does not say when) and that, therefore, the South Indian Export Company, Limited, had no claim under the contracts or on the guarantee agreements against the plaintiff. It seems to me, strictly speaking, that the plaint discloses no cause of action. It is only if Theperumal Chetty had properly repudiated the contracts and actually put an end to the same that the plaintiff could argue that the South Indian Export Company, Limited, had no claim against him. Without saying that Theperumal Chetty had actually put an end to the contracts, the statement that Theperumal Chetty would have been justified in repudiating them shows no legal basis for the suit, which denies that the defendants could take advantage of the terms of the contract. However, at the trial before the learned Judge, the plaintiff seems to have been allowed to base his case on certain vague contentions, which, when crystallized, amount to this. There were certain reciprocal promises to be performed in a certain order by the South Indian Export Company, Limited, and by Theperumal Chetty. One of those promises to be performed by the South Indian Export Company, Limited, was that they should give notices of the arrival of the steamers in which the goods to be delivered by the South Indian Export Company, Limited to Theperumal Chetty had been shipped in accordance with the contracts. Those notices were, in the eye of the law, tenders or offers of performance as to delivery of goods made by and binding upon the South Indian Export Company, Limited. It was further contended that as those tenders or offers were not legally proper offers, the South Indian Export Company, Limited, committed a breach of the said reciprocal promises which they had first to perform under section 52 of the Indian Contract Act, and that hence the South Indian Export Company had no claim under the contracts against Theperumal Chetty and in consequence, against the plaintiff. (Section 54.) This contention seems to have found favour with the learned Judge.

In the first place, I think that none of these notices, Exhibit HL series, (I may say in passing that the obligation to give a notice is not expressly mentioned in the written contracts as one of the obligation which the South Indian Export Company has to perform) is either a tender or an offer in respect of the delivery of the goods which the South Indian Export Company was to deliver under the contracts. We shall assume, however, that one of the implied terms of the contract was that the South Indian Export Company should give reasonable notice that they were ready to deliver the goods in order that Theperumal Chetty might know when to go over to the godowns of the South Indian Export Company and apply for the performance by the South Indian Export Company of that part of the contracts which relates to the delivery of the goods. Such a notice need only have stated, "we are ready to deliver the goods according to the contract. Go over to the godowns within a reasonable time after you receive the notice and take delivery of the goods." If the notices Exhibits HL, a, b, c, did contain words sufficient to give notice of this kind to Theperumal Chetty, they were legally valid notices and the reciprocal promise to give such notices made by the South Indian Export Company, and which promise they had to perform (before Theperumal Chetty had to fulfil his next promise to go to the godowns, apply for and take delivery of the goods), had been properly fulfilled. (As I said, I am unable to agree with the learned Judge that these notices were in the nature of a tender or an offer under section 38 of the Contract Act.) The errors (even though deliberate) made in each notice as to the ship by which the goods intended to be delivered are said to have arrived are mere surplusage and it was not shown that such misdescriptions prevented Theperumal from fulfilling his part of the contracts and hence vitiated those notices. As Theperumal Chetty failed to apply within a reasonable time after the receipt of the notices for delivery of the goods, he failed to fulfil his part of the contracts and he is the person to be charged with the breach of the contracts and the liability for the legal consequences of such breach. (In this view, I need not say much about the error which the learned Judge fell into in his first judgment in treating the bills, Exhibit VII series, as in the nature of tenders or offers, they not having been communicated to Theperumal Chetty.) The South Indian Export Company had, therefore, a good claim against Theperumal Chetty, and against the plaintiff as his surety, for the performance by Theperumal Chetty of his contracts with the South Indian Export Company. I would, therefore, set aside the judgment of the learned Judge and dismiss the suit with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I entirely agree. It is perfectly clear to me that the learned Judge decided this case on section 83 of the Contract Act, namely, that he thought there had been an appropriation of certain specific bales by the defendants, which appropriation had been assented to, and that appropriation was not according to the terms of the contract. I refer to the appropriation by the bills. It appears now, and the learned Judge discovered it himself when he came to deal with the later issues, that there never had been any appropriation by bills whatsoever, in that the bills had never been delivered and, therefore, could never have been assented to. The whole basis of the learned Judge's judgment, therefore, goes.

It is argued now, not that the notice is of itself an appropriation, but that, as the notice specified goods as coming out of a certain ship although the contract did not provide that the goods should come from that ship, they were bound to deliver the goods from that ship, and they were not in a position so to deliver. It is not made clear on the evidence that they were not in a position to do so, which would have of itself been a sufficient answer. But I am satisfied that there was no such contract, and that the fact that the particular ship was mentioned in the notice does not extend the liability of the defendants. In my veiw, it has not been shown that the defendants were not ready to perform their part of the contract, whereas it has amply been shown, and it is not denied, that the dealers took no steps to perform their part. It is clear, therefore, that the breach was the breach of the dealers and not the breach of the defendants. In those circumstances on the guarantee of the plaintiff the defendants were entitled to debit the plaintiff with the amount and the suit must be dismissed.

The point taken about interest was never raised in the plaint and I am of opinion that the defendants are entitled to debit the plaintiff with the interest as well as the loss from re-sale.

Appeal allowed; Suit dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73, O. XXXVIII, r. 2,—Money paid for specific purpose, if available for other creditors under s. 73—Money paid on arrest before judgment—Other decree-holders, right of, for rateable distribution.

Where certain money was deposited in Court under Order XXXVIII, rule 2, on the arrest of the defendant before judgment:

Held, that a lien was created on it in favour of the plaintiff from the time it was deposited and that any other creditors could not claim rateable distribution of the same, as it was money paid for a specific purpose. [p. 715, col. 2.]

Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath, 11 Ind. Cas. 911; 13 Bom. L. R. 1193, 36 B. 156, followed.

FACTS.—The respondent Chetty sued one Abdul Rahman Khan for Rs. 151 and at the same time obtained an order of arrest before judgment. Abdul Rahman Khan was released on his depositing Rs. 199. Judgment was later on confessed and a decree was passed against him. In the meanwhile Dost Mahomed applied for execution of a decree against Abdul Rahman Khan and asked for payment of Rs. 199 deposited by him in Court. The Township Judge ordered rateable distribution. Against this order the Chetty applied in revision. The Additional Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court held that section 73 of the Code of 1908 was not the same as section 295 of the Code of 1882 and that 'assets held by the Court' meant money deposited in Court within the meaning of section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that as Dost Mahomed did not apply for execution before its receipt he was not entitled to a rateable distribution. The Additional Judge, therefore, set aside the order of the Township Judge and gave a decree as aforesaid to the Chetty. Against this order Dost Mahomed applied for a review.

Mr. L. K. Mitter, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. C. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for a review of my judgment in Civil Revision No. 39 of 1912. Certain money had been deposited under Order XXXVIII, rule 2, on the arrest of Abdul Rahman Khan at the instance of the respondent, who had brought a suit against him. Later the applicant filed another suit against the same person and obtained a decree against him and at once applied for execution. The respondent also obtained a decree and the Township Judge ordered a rateable distribution.

I held that section 73, Civil Procedure Code, did not apply as there were not two applications for execution before the Court, as the respondent had not applied for execution and had in fact not obtained his decree at the time the applicant applied for execution and that even in the case of attachment before judgment, though it is not necessary for the plaintiff when he has obtained a decree to apply for attachment, it is necessary for him to apply for execution.

In my previous judgment I did not go into that point because it was unnecessary, as the applicant plainly could not rely on section 73, Civil Procedure Code, as he had not applied for execution before the receipt of the money by the Court.

The second ground on which review is sought is that I failed to realise that though deposited in Court the money was the debtor's property and was liable to attachment. In my opinion all that the applicant was entitled to attach was the debtor's interest in the money and my view is that as soon as the money was deposited in Court a lien was created on it in favour of the respondent. It has been urged that as soon as the respondent's suit ended in a decree, the debtor could have withdrawn the money if it had not been for the applicant's application, but I think it is quite clear that he could not have done so. The money was paid into Court for a specific purpose and the words 'sufficiently to satisfy the claim' show that the money was meant to satisfy the claim if decreed. In Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (1) relied upon by the learned Advocate for the respondent, it was held that money paid into Court in satisfaction of a decree had the effect of releasing the property attached by the decree-holder and that such money was not available for the satisfaction of the decrees of other judgment-creditors.

If instead of paying the money into Court, the debtor had paid it to the respondent out of Court—and seeing that he made no defence but confessed judgment, he might well have done so if he had trusted the respondent to withdraw the suit—the applicant could certainly not have had any right to any portion of it and I cannot see that the payment of the money into Court with the intention that it should be paid to the respondent in satisfaction of his claim could make any difference.

In view of the ruling cited above, my decision that the money was assets held by the Court within the meaning of section 73, Civil Procedure Code, was wrong, but I am of opinion that the applicant would not have been entitled to any portion of the money even if he had obtained his decree and applied for execution before it was paid into Court.

The application is dismissed with costs.

In a suit for redemption where it is found that an execution sale and a benami purchase took place in 1895, long before the passing of the present Code in 1908, and that at that time and afterwards and until the passing of the present Code the plaintiff had a vested right of redemption:

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—This was a suit for redemption which was decreed by the first Court. The lower Appellate Court has, I think, intended to affirm the findings of the first Court, but has held that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and has, therefore, dismissed the suit. Now, as regards the applicability of section 66, it is to be noted that the sale and purchase to which the defendant sought to make it applicable took place in 1895, when the old Code was in force. There is no doubt, upon the findings of fact arrived at by both the Courts, that, at that time and afterwards and until the passing of the present Code, the plaintiff had a vested right of redemption. Now, there is also no question as to that if the present Code governs the case then section 66 is applicable. However, as the law then stood the section was only applicable to the certified purchaser; as it is now amended it applies also to persons standing in the shoes of the purchaser. Formerly, according to the decisions of this Court and of the Madras High Court, it was held that section 317 applied only to suits against the certified purchaser and not to suits against persons who derived title from him, such as his assignee or heir. According to the law in this Court under the preceding Code, the appellant is entitled to succeed, but if the case comes under the present Code then he fails. As this is a suit for redemption, the plaintiff had before the passing of the present Code a vested right to redeem. We ought not to assume, in the absence of any express words to that effect, that that right was taken away from him by the provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In my opinion, therefore, section 66 does not apply to this suit. Then, however, it has been said that the findings of fact are not sufficient, and it has been argued that, if, as has been found, Guran Ali was a benamidar for the mortgagor, the latter allowed Guran Ali for a period of 16 years to hold possession of this property or allowed it to be believed that Guran Ali was the real purchaser under the sale of 1895, and that being so, and Lal Mea being, as it is contended, a bona fide purchaser for value, his rights exist. The first Court has come to distinct findings upon this argument and has held that Lal Mea was a creature of the mortgagee and that the conveyance of 1911 was brought about by the contrivance of this man to prevent Guran Ali from setting up a title to the land in suit which has all along been in his possession as mortgagee. And though there is not so explicit a finding by the District Judge in his judgment, there is a finding which seems equally sufficient, namely this, that the property has never been in possession of Guran Ali or Lal Mea and it remained throughout in possession of the mortgagee. If the property had all along been in possession of the mortgagee it is not possible to hold, under the circumstances, that Lal Mea could have supposed that Guran Ali had any title to it, seeing that his certificate of purchase was in 1895, 11 years after the sale to Lal Mea, and there-fter the property was held by the mortgagee.

Under these circumstances, I would decree this appeal, reverse the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the Court of first instance, with costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

Review—Final judgment—Application for reception of new evidence—Sufficient reason not shown—Rejection of application, propriety of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 114, O. XLVII, r. 1.

Where an application for the reception of new evidence was made to a High Court in a case which had lasted for over three years after a final judgment had been made in the case by that Court and no sufficient reason was shown why the proposed new evidence was not timeously submitted, and the High Court rejected that application:

Held, that the rejection of the application by the High Court was correct. [p. 718, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Bombay High Court, dated April 11th, 1911, reversing those of the first Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum, dated April 16th, 1910.

FACTS.—One Madivalappa Shintre had four sons, viz., Revappa, Malappa, Gangappa and Basappa. Shivalingappa, the son of Basappa, claimed a fourth share of the family property as against the sons and heirs of his three uncles. The defence was that by partition in 1844 Basappa was given his share and that his son could claim nothing in the properties possessed by others. Some of the defendants supported the plaintiff in his claim. The defendants admitted that the plaintiff had lived in their town after the death of his father, but that he was expelled from the famity for misbehaviour. They produced certain documents which the Subordinate Judge found to be forged, one of them being regarded by him as indefinite. On appeal to the High Court the reasons for regarding the documents as forged were overruled and judgment given in favour of the defendants. Certain documents were copies and were in no way admissible in evidence. On July 8th, 1911, some three months after, the plaintiff discovered some important documents in Kolhapur which completely disproved the defendants' case. He then applied to the High Court for review of judgment, but his application was rejected without the learned Judges giving any reasons for the rejection, the suit having lasted for over three years. Appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council came in due course.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., (with him Mr. Arthur Grey), for the Appellant, contended that the signature of Basappa to what purported to be the release was not proved. The conduct of the parties in living together proved that the family was never in fact divided. The evidence which was produced at the High Court at the first opportunity the appellant got ought to have been admitted, and not rejected without assigning any reason for the rejection. The respondents had not produced accounts for the first thirty years after the alleged partition. This was a fact from which an inference adverse to the respondents should have been drawn. The statement of Basappa alleged to have been made before the mamlatdar to the effect that the family was separate was not proved to have been made by him or that he knew the contents of the said document.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and Lowndes, appeared for the Respondents, but were not called on.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW—Their Lordships do not think it necessary to call upon the respondents.

As to the application for the reception of new evidence in this case, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the rejection of that application was correct. The application itself was made after a final judgment in a suit which had already lasted for a period of over three years. It is enough to say that no sufficient reason appears from the affidavits themselves to show why the proposed new evidence was not timeously submitted.

KRUPASINDHU SAHU v. RAJA OF KALLIKOTA.

Upon the merits of the appeal, having considered the judgments in the Courts below, their Lordships are of opinion that that of the first Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum cannot be supported. They agree with the judgment of the High Court, which appears to state correctly not only the presumptions arising from the history of the family, but also to appraise properly the documents and transactions, and particularly the releases themselves. These releases are not proved to be forgeries. On the contrary their Lordships agree with the High Court in holding that the attack upon their genuineness rests purely upon conjecture. This being so, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. The appellant will pay the costs, including the costs of the application to postpone the hearing.

Appeal dismised.

KRUPASINDHU SAHU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Sree Sree RAMACHANDRA DEVU GARU, RAJA OF KALLIKOTA AND ATTAGADA ESTATES, MINOR, BY THE COLLECTOR OF GANJAM—DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENT.

Accounts—Settlement obtained under improper circumstances—Intention merely to ascertain amount actually due—Right of debtor to re-open accounts—Creditor entitled to appropriate payment to interest first in case of debtor failing to specify.

A Court will not hold a party to a settlement which has been obtained from him under improper circumstances and it will allow him to surcharge and falsify items which have been inserted erroneously and which are not really due, when what the parties contemplated was merely to ascertain what was actually due as distinct from a case in which they agreed to accept a lump sum in settlement of their differences. Held, that the debtor could not be bound by the settlement and that the accounts should be re-opened. [p. 719, col. 2.]

Where a debtor has failed to exercise his right of appropriating a payment himself it is open to a creditor to do so up to the very last date, and even in the course of the trial, unless something has happened which renders it inequitable to allow him to do so and it is always a question of the intention of the creditor to be gathered from the circumstance of the case. Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ganjam at Berhampore, in Original Suit No. 26 of 1910.

Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar and B. N. Sarma, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Respondent.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 15th, 18th, 19th and 20th January 1915 the Court (the Chief Justice and Hannay, J.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiffs, who were carrying on business at Berhampore, against the late Rajah of Kallikotta to recover certain moneys due on an alleged settlement of accounts entered into in June 1906 together with subsequent advances. The case is defended by the Court of Wards on behalf of the minor Rajah, and in the written statement they plead that this settlement of account of June 1906 was entered into in circumstances which render it not binding on the Rajah and which they characterise as fraudulent. And in paragraph 13 they take exception to various items of charge which are included in the settlement of Exhibit E. The Subordinate Judge has written a very careful judgment, but so long and so involved that it was difficult for us to understand it until we had examined the whole of the evidence for ourselves and, therefore, was of much less assistance to the Court than it would otherwise have been.

Now there can be no doubt that the Court will not hold a party to a settlement which has been obtained from him under improper circumstances and that it will allow him to surcharge and falsify items which have been inserted erroneously and which are not really due, when what the parties contemplated was merely to ascertain what was actually due, as distinct from a case in which they agreed to accept a lump sum in settlement of their differences. These principles are well illustrated by two cases which have been cited before us, M'Kellar v. Wallace (1) and the well-known case of Williamson v. Barbour (2). The Subordinate Judge has found that the settlement effected in this case in June 1906 between the plaintiffs and the Rajah is one which is not binding upon him and we agree with that decision.

The Rajah was a hopeless spendthrift who succeeded to the zemindari in 1899, and within four years had not only got through the ten lakhs balance handed to him on attaining majority, but had incurred fresh debts to the extent of twenty-two lakhs of rupees, and between that and the date of the present settlement had incurred further liabilities of about eleven lakhs of rupees, which he was seeking at the time of the settlement to raise from the same English lenders who had advanced the money to meet the 22 lakhs I have already mentioned. At the time of the settlement his private affairs were largely in the hands of one Chamo Patnaik who was described as his personal assistant: and the evidence is that at this time the plaintiffs were beginning to press for payment to them and to threaten suits, and also that the Rajah was preparing a statement of his liabilities for the English lenders with a view to raising a further loan to meet his liabilities. It was quite proper in those circumstances that there should be a settlement provided it was a fair one. The evidence is that three clerks of the plaintiffs, the 1st, 2nd and 3rd witnesses for the plaintiffs, and Chamo and another, the 1st and 2nd defence witnesses on behalf of the Rajah, met at the Rajah's house in Berhampore in his absence and the accounts were produced on both sides and this account, Exhibit E, was drawn up. The Rajah who had been spending some of his time on an island returned to his residence at Rambha on the 20th June 1906, and his diary records that his personal assistant arrived there at 6 o'clock, and it is the case for the plaintiffs that the settlement was signed by the Rajah that same evening at 8 o'clock. The diary mentions that the Rajah was at that time suffering from a headache but says nothing about the settlement. Much reliance is placed by the plaintiffs on their evidence that the Rajah himself scrutinized the accounts before signing. But we attach very little importance to it, having regard to the character of the man and the disorder into which he had allowed his affairs to fall. We think that there is very little doubt that such scrutiny was merely a formal one; and that is borne out by an examination of the character of the settlement which he was induced to enter into.

The defence questions in paragraph 13 of the written statement various items in this settlement and all but one of them have been pressed before us.

The first point we propose to deal with and it is one of the most important—is the question of the rents due by the plaintiffs to the deceased Rajah. It is in evidence that at the time that the Rajah began to order goods from the plaintiffs, he gave them a preference over other competitors and granted them a lease of a number of his villages and they were allowed to renew this lease from year to year. Two questions arise as to this rent. In the first place, the defence objects that no credit at all has been given for the rent of one of these villages, the Jillunda village, for Fasli 13 0; and secondly—this is much more important—it objects that no credit is given in the accounts for the amounts of rents due by the plaintiffs as they fell due so as to go in reduction of the indebtedness of the Rajah on the other side, but that it is only the sum total that is credited at the date of the settlement at an under-value, whereas according to the defence the understanding was that these rents were to go in satisfaction of the Rajah's indebtedness to the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge has found that the course of dealing between the parties shows that there was such an understanding between the Rajah and the plaintiffs; and on a very careful consideration of the evidence and the elaborate arguments which were addressed to us, we agree with that conclusion.

But it will be convenient in the first place to deal with the question of the rents of the Jillunda village for Fasli 1310. The plaintiffs' case is that the rents of that village for that fasli were remitted by the Rajah, and the same evidence as regards this fasli which goes to establish the course of dealing as to the crediting of these rents goes also, in our opinion, to confirm the story of the plaintiffs in that respect. Accordingly we are not prepared to agree with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs should be debited with the rents of the Jillunda village for Fasli 1310.

The oral evidence of the sheristadar, the 3rd defence witness, as to the rents is that no attempt was made to collect these rents from the plaintiff under instructions from the Rajah, because there was an understanding that they were to go in discharge of the Rajah's debts, and this is probabilized by the facts that when Mr. Dodsworth, the agent of the European lenders, insisted that a large portion of the rents should be paid in cash to him to secure the necessary payments which had to be made by the Rajah the plaintiffs ceased to supply any further goods to the Rajah. There is also this most important and significant fact that the plaintiffs in this case have suppressed the whole of their accounts and simply put Exhibit E before the Court and refused to support it either by any documentry evidence of the 3rd plaintiff himself, who was not asked to go into the box. However, the oral evidence of the sheristadar is, in our opinion, entirely corroborated by the documentary evidence with regard to the Estate accounts. Each year the books were opened showing the demands and the collections for the villages constituting the zemindari, not only the Jillunda village but all the villages of the zemindari, and the duty of making these demands and collections was in the sheristadar and the Estate office. It appears not only from the oral evidence, but on the books also, that the Estate office never collected anything at all during these years in respect of these villages and it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that this was in pursuance of an understanding between the parties. The case of Fasli 1310, the first year, is referred to in Exhibits 130, 131 and 132; and they show that the total demand for all the villages except Jillunda was Rs. 28,940-10-0 (Exhibit 130, page 322). The exclusion of any demand for the village of Jillunda is, in our opinion, a sufficient corroboration of the plaintiffs' story that there was a remission in respect of that. Then Exhibits 131, 131 (a), 131 (b) and 131 (c), the ledgers of the defendant, show that three successive sums of Rs. 3,000, Rs. 7,000 and Rs. 18,960, making in all Rs. 28,960, are entered as "for discharging loan debts." And Exhibit 130 (a) shows that a balance of Rs. 19-6-0, which is the excess of the debts over the demand for these villages, viz., Rs. 28,960-10, was credited to the plaintiffs. It says "188. Pertaining to Madura Sahu for Fasli 1310—Attagadu Taluq. Palisara Mutah, Bajiria village—M lease, Rs. 19-6-0." This evidence, in our opinion, shows an adjustment for this fasli.

But the case is even clearer with regard to the subsequent faslis. In Fasli 1311, Exhibits 103 series show the demands for the villages leased to the plaintiff and no collections at all. In 1903 with a view to borrowing from these English lenders the Estate accounts were audited by a Calcutta firm, and they contain a pencil entry which is sworn to have been made, and was apparently made, by the auditor, "held against a debt due from the Rajah". So that it appears that in 1903 the Estate office gave this explanation to the auditor as the reason why no collection had been made in respect of that village.

The state of things was exactly the same with regard to Fasli 1312 until just before this settlement was made in June 1906. It was only when Mr. Dodsworth began to look into the Rajah's affairs that there was correspondence (Exhibits 87-a and 87-b) as regards the crediting of these amounts in April 1906. As regards Fasli 1313, Exhibit 85 directs the adjustment of the rents towards the lessee's debts which was carried out about the end of that fasli in Exhibit 92 (page 173).

With regard to Fasli 1314 that was the fasli in which Mr. Dodsworth, the agent of the English lenders, insisted on a payment of Rs. 20,000 in cash in respect of this rent by the plaintiffs; a balance of Rs. 8,376-14-6 was adjusted on a deduction of the Rs. 20,000 actually paid to Mr. Dodsworth. As regards the rents of Fasli 1315, which according to the plaintiffs' own case fell due in February, no credit at all was given in this account, Exhibit E, in June 1906 though the whole rent was then due. Mr. Dodsworth had asked for Rs. 10,000, but that left a balance of Rs. 6,661 for which credit should have been given. The plaintiffs' case is that this balance was adjusted by a payment of Rs. 4,000 under a promissory note, Exhibit LLL, and a further payment of Rs. 2,000 odd at Cuttack. The Subordinate Judge has not accepted this explanation and says that it is not shown why the promissory note should have been taken from the Rajah for money which was actually due to him. The alleged payment of Rs. 2,000 is not borne out by any documentary evidence, and we are not prepared to differ from the Subordinate Judge on this point. On the whole, we have come to the conclusion that the course of dealing found by the Subordinate Judge has been proved to exist and that the plaintiffs were not pressed for payment of the rents until Mr. Dodsworth's time, because there was an understanding between them and the late Rajah that the rents should go towards the satisfaction of his liabilities to them for goods supplied and money lent; and we think that this man Chamo was perfectly well aware of this arrangement and that he was not acting honestly towards his employer when he drew up this account Exhibit E.

Dr. Swaminadhan, for the respondent, says that if the account be re-taken by debiting the plaintiffs with the amounts due from them for the rents of these villages as on the dates on which they fell due, it will show a larger sum due to his client than the Subordinate Judge has awarded him. He has not appealed from the finding of the Subordinate Judge. However that may be, if the defendant so desires the account will have to be re-opened and taken on that basis.

Coming now to the other items in Exhibit E which have been questioned before us, item No. 11 relates to a promissory note, Exhibit L, dated the 22nd March 1904, which was executed by the late Rajah in favour of the plaintiffs bearing interest at 12 per cent. The plaintiffs in this account have charged 18 per cent. on the amount which they say was paid, namely, Rs. 2,172. There is absolutely no justification for that charge. They relied upon a hookum of the Rajah, but no hookum has been produced. The defence denies that a sum of Rs. 2,172 was ever paid and says that only Rs. 1,000 was paid. Exhibit 5, dated the 21st March 1904, that is the previous day, shows that it was intended that Rs. 1,000 should be paid and Rs. 12,000 retained. The Subordinate Judge has discredited the evidence of any further payment; and no accounts are produced to show any such further payment. None such is shown in the accounts of the defendant. The oral evidence is somewhat conflicting, but we are not prepared to differ from the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge has arrived. Then not content with charging 18 per cent. instead of 12 on what they actually advanced in this account, the plaintiffs have actually charged interests at 9 per cent. on money which they admit they never advanced at all, namely, a sum of Rs. 10,828. We are unable to accept their explanation as to this. As regards item No. 11, the actual payment should be taken to be Rs. 1,000 and it must bear interest only at 12 per cent. and the interest charged in respect of the unpaid amount must be disallowed. As to this we confirm the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

We come next to item 20, a payment of Rs. 6,000, which is alleged to have been paid on the 30th November 1905 under a private order of the Rajah of the 26th November for the purpose of re-paying the debt due to the plaintiffs by Chamo' No order is produced nor is any receipt produced. The Subordinate Judge has found that it is unlikely that such a payment of such a large sum would have been made at the time, when the Rajah was in embarrassed circumstances and when owing to Mr. Dodsworth's action it was no longer possible for the plaintiffs to retain the rents of the villages as against the moneys advanced by them. The plaintiffs rely on the fact that in a letter, Exhibit 114, subsequent to Exhibit E, no objection was taken to this item by the Rajah. This letter was drawn up under Mr. Dodsworth's superintendence and having regard to the character of the Rajah and his want of acquaintance with his affairs we attach no importance to it. We are not prepared to differ from the Subordinate Judge in disallowing this sum of Rs. 6,000.

Item No. 22, a payment of Rs. 1,500 a little later on the 15th December 1905, stands on the same footing. There is a receipt by Chamo, Exhibit X of the 15th of December 1905, and the plaintiffs compare it with a similar receipt, Exhibit W, for a payment on the 20th August 1905; but as pointed out for the respondent Exhibit W bears the Rajah's initials, whereas Exhibit X does not. We are not prepared to differ from the Subordinate Judge as to this item.

We now come to the last item in Exhibit E of Rs. 25,000 and a further claim for an additional Rs. 25,000, as to which we are constrained to say that the conduct of the plaintiffs is shown to have been grossly fraudulent. As I have said, this settlement was being drawn up not only to satisfy the plaintiffs, but also in order that it might be furnished to Mr. Dodsworth and the English lenders and their advisers as evidence of the further liabilities of the Rajah, which it was contemplated should be discharged by means of a fresh advance from the English lenders. Exhibit I, which was executed on the same day as Exhibit E, shows that this man Chamo had induced the Rajah to promise him a remuneration of Rs. 25,000 for his services. Come at the end of Exhibit E Rs. 25,000 is entered in the Rajah's handwriting as having been paid by his order "the other day", i. e., a few days before. It is admitted that the entry made a few days before is in the Rajah's own handwriting. It is admitted that no such payment was made a few days before. The inference we draw is that that entry was put in for the purpose of inducing the lenders to advance a sufficient sum to cover not only the indebtedness of the Rajah to the plaintiffs but also this further sum of Rs. 25,000 which, according to Exhibit I, was to be paid to Chamo. Exhibit Q which is dated the next day is an order by the Rajah on the plaintiffs to pay Chamo Rs. 25,000 almost in the terms of Exhibit I. The plaintiffs' case is not that they paid Chamo at once, but the case with which they came to Court but which their Counsel was constrained to abandon was that this Rs. 25,000 entered in Exhibit E was agreed to be paid to them as bonus or compensation for some loss which they had sustained in connection with the lease, a story which is not only unfounded but in absolute contradiction with the admitted documents Exhibits I and Q. One cannot help wondering that it should have been thought worth while to put such a story before the Court, seeing that it can have no effect whatever except that it stamps the plaintiffs' case with fraud. However, that charge was not pressed before us. The plaintiffs sought to rely on an alleged subsequent payment of Rs. 25,000 to Chamo pursuant to this order Exhibit Q. We entirely agree with the Subordinate Judge that no such payment was ever made. It is not in the least likely that in the Rajah's then condition these plaintiffs would have been willing to advance such a large sum as Rs. 25,000 to Chamo. What was really intended, we doubt, was that f that sum was to be paid at all, it was to be paid out of an advance to be made by the English lenders to meet the alleged indebtedness of the Rajah to the plaintiffs. The whole thing was only a device for the purpose of getting from the English lenders the Rs. 25,000 which, it is possible, the Rajah was then willing to pay to Chamo as the remuneration for his supposed services. The receipt, Exhibit R, produced by the plaintiffs was no doubt signed by Chamo. He was summoned for the plaintiffs as well as the defendant, and was disbelieved by the Judge. The cross-examination of Chamo shows conclusively that no such sum was ever paid to him. He could not say what he had done with it or give any explanation at all. He had to admit that he was very shortly afterwards in peril of arrest and in great difficulty and he was found living in miserable circumstances when his evidence was taken on Commission. We have no hesitation whatever in agreeing with the Subordinate Judge that this sum of Rs. 25,000 was not paid as alleged by the plaintiffs. Subsequently the Rajah countermanded the order; but it is sufficient for us to find that no such payment was ever made. As I have already said, the other claim of Rs. 25,000 has not been pressed before us on appeal.

The only other item is an alleged credit payment of Rs. 4,000 by the Rajah, for which it is said the plaintiffs have failed to give him credit. There is no evidence before us of such a payment though it may have been made. There is a letter which says that such a payment was made (Exhibit 3). The recital in that letter may or may not be true, but it is certainly not legal evidence of the payment of Rs. 4,000. Therefore, we must disallow this claim. The decree must be modified by disallowing the defendant credit for that sum of Rs. 4,000.

The result is that we differ from the Subordinate Judge both as to this item of Rs. 4,000 and as to the Jillunda village and also as to the way in which the account of the rents of the villages has been taken. We think that if the defendant so desires, the account must be so re-taken crediting the defendant with the amounts of the rents for these villages as they became due. Otherwise the appeal is dismissed with costs.

This appeal having been posted to be spoken to on the 3rd, 4th and 5th of February, the Court (the Chief Justice and Hannay, J.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—On the minutes of decree we are of opinion first of all that the plaintiffs are entitled to be credited, as was contended before us yesterday, with interest on the goods supplied by them on the expiry of three months from the dates of their bills. As to the question of the appropriation of the amounts which we have directed to be credited to the defendant in respect of the rents due to him by the plaintiffs, namely, whether the appropriation is to be in the first place towards any interest due at the time and only subsequently in discharge of the principal we have been referred by Mr. Sarma to two decisions, one of the House of Lords in Cory Brothers & Co., v. Owners of the Turkish Steamship "Mecca", The "Mecca" (3) and the other Seymour v. Pickett (4). These cases appear to lay down as the law in England that, when the debtor has failed to exercise his right of appropriating the payment himself, it is open to the creditor to do so up to the very last date and even in the course of the trial, unless something has happened which renders it inequitable to allow him to do so. In the course of these judgments their Lordships point out that the intention of the creditor is to be gathered from his conduct, and that one way of ascertaining that intention is from accounts which he may have rendered. In the present case Mr. Sarma relies upon Exhibit E, the account which was presented to the Rajah by the plaintiffs, which we have held should be re-opened. In that account the plaintiffs show the principal and interest due to them on all the debts up to 21st March 1906 as Rs. 1,72,000. They then deduct from this the amount for which they had to give credit for the rents due by them and they subsequently charge interest on the balance due from the 21st of March until the date of the settlement i.e., the 20th June. If they had appropriated the interest in the way contended for by the other side, the figures would be quite different. We think this is a sufficient indication of the intention of the creditors to make the appropriation towards interest in the first place and it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the actual points decided in the cases I have referred to or the decision in Maharaja of Benares v. Har Narain Singh (5), which has also been cited with reference to section 61 of the Contract Act. We rule that the plaintiffs are entitled to have the payments by them appropriated in discharge in the first place of all the interest due on the date of the payment and only after that in discharge of the principal then due.

The only other question is as to the exercise of the Subordinate Judge's discretion in not giving any interest from the date of the plaint until the date of decree. In the circumstances of this case in the exercise of our discretion we are not prepared to alter the decree in that respect. The figures will be worked out on this basis and the figures arrived at will be substituted in the decree of the lower Court.

LAHAR PURI v. PURAN NATH.

This appeal having been again posted to be spoken to this day with reference to the objections of the parties to the statement of account prepared by the office the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—After hearing the objections, we confirm the statement of account.

Appeal partly allowed; Decree modified.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

March 15, 1915.

Present:—Lord Dunedin, Sir George Farwell, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

Mahant LAHAR PURI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

Mahant PURAN NATH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Mahant, appointment of—Absence of rules and practice prescribed by founder—Custom or usage—Practice—Suit for possession of math and its property—Burden of proof—Election—Dasnam bhik, election of mahant by, when valid.

In case the founder of a math prescribes no rules or practice to be followed in the selection and appointment of the future mahants, the selection and appointment of a person to be the mahant of the math on a vacancy occurring in the mahantship must depend on the custom or usage and the practices which have prevailed in the appointment of mahants of that math. [p. 725, col. 2.]

The plaintiff sued the defendant for the possession of a temple and the properties appertaining to it alleging that he was the only sadhak (disciple) of the deceased mahant and that he was duly elected mahant and was appointed with the usual ceremonies. The defendant who was the general attorney and storekeeper of the deceased mahant also claimed to have been duly elected mahant in succession to the deceased mahant and was in possession of the temple and of the property appertaining to it:

Held, that it was for the plaintiff to prove his right to the mahantship which, if proved, would carry with it the right to possession of the temple and of the property appertaining thereto, and that as the plaintiff failed to prove that he was the duly elected mahant of the math, his suit would fail and it would be immaterial to consider whether the defendant was or was not the mahant of the math or whether he had or had not any better title to the temple and the property appertaining to it than a title of mere possession. [p. 726, cols. 1 & 2.]

An election by dasnam bhik of a mahant to be a valid and effectual election must be by a majority of the dasnam bhik assembled for that purpose. A separate election by a faction of the dasnam bhik is not a valid and effectual election. [p. 728, col. 2.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Allahabad High Court, dated March 11th, 1912, reversing those of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, dated November 29th, 1909.

FACTS.—The math called Akhara of Bawa Sarwan Nath was established by Sarwan Nath some sixty years ago. Of the two orders of Goshains, Girhast and Nihang, i. e., those who practised celebacy, this belonged to the Nihang sect. The founder had laid down no rule of succession. The principal temple was situated at Hardwar, but there were two subordinate temples at Thaneswar and Pitwa. The election always took place in the temple at Hardwar. The electors were the dasnam bhik, i. e., ten classes of fakirs, viz., Gir, Sagar, Sarsuti, Aram, Ashram, Parbat, Ban, Tirath, Bharti and Puri. On the thirteenth day of the death of the mahant succession used to take place. The appellant alleged that he was a disciple as well as mukhtar of the late mahant and so entitled to succeed him and was elected by the dasnam bhik, but when he went out to bathe in the Ganges prior to the completion of ceremonies in the temple, the respondent took advantage of his absence, closed the doors of the temple and got those who were left behind to sign a mahantinama for him. The respondent denied this and alleged that he alone was elected to the mahantship. The Subordinate Judge held that the respondent was supported by the Niranjani Akhara and was uncommonly shrewd and cunning. He was a Municipal Commissioner and could easily collect a posse of witnesses and although the invitation to the bhandara was printed in three languages and distributed among a large number of persons, not a single copy was produced in Court. The ikrarnama by the dasnam bhik bore the date of February 18th, 1905, but the election was supposed to have taken place on the 24th of February, i. e., some days after—a circumstance which proved machination on the part of respondent. This document was recently executed and not attested by any respectable person. Having held that according to custom sadhaks always succeeded to the gaddi, he regarded the whole of the respondent's case as fictitious, got up with the help of his friends and helpers. On appeal to the High Court this judgment of the Subordinate Judge was reversed. The appellant then appealed to His Majesty in Council in due course.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Parikh, for the Appellant, contended that the appellant was the sadhak of the late mahant and, therefore, entitled to succeed. This custom was established by the election of preceding mahants. He was elected by the dasnam bhik and before completion of the ceremony he went to have a bath in the Ganges. On return he found the doors of the temple closed. Therefore the Police were informed, who took no steps. The ceremonies were, however, performed in the house of the Rani of Landhaura. The mahantinama was duly executed and he was presented with alphi, topi, saili, kundal, hal, nad and janeo. The electors then gave him bhabhut ka gola or ball of ashes. They also put a chadar on him thus completing the ceremony, bhang ka pyala or cup of bhang being drunk at the same time. The mahantinama of preceding mahants conclusively proved appellant's case. The whole case rested upon evidence, which proved that the respondent had played a trick with the appellant in order to get control of the property attached to the temple.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dube, for the Respondent, contended that the respondent was elected by the majority of the dasnam bhik while the appellant only by a small discontented minority. All the ceremonies were duly performed in the temple before any other person was elected. The late mahant had also nominated the respondent to succeed him and had in fact sent a telegram while on his death-bed. On the third day of the death of the mahant all people assembled and decided to elect respondent as successor. In the mutation proceedings also the name of respondent was entered in the Collectorate. No custom existed as to the rule of succession. The founder had laid down none and, therefore, the appellant to succeed must prove that he alone was entitled to succeed.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, dated the 11th March 1912, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 29th November 1909, and dismissed the suit with costs. The suit was brought on the 12th January 1909 by Lahar Puri, who is the appellant, against Puran Puri, who is the respondent. The dispute between the parties to this appeal relates to the title to the mahantship of the Hindu math, or temple, at Hardwar, known as the Akhara Baba Sarwan Nath, and to the property appertaining to the math.

The math was founded by one Baba Sarwan Nath, who was a sunniyasi rukhar fakir and died in 1849. Since his death there have been several mahants of the math in succession. It does not appear that Baba Sarwan Nath, in founding the math, prescribed any rules or practice to be followed in the selection and appointment of the future mahants. Consequently, the selection and appointment of a person to be the mahant of the math on a vacancy occurring in the mahantship must depend on the custom or usage and the practices which have prevailed in the appointment of mahants of this math, and on that principle this suit has been fought in the first Court, in the High Court, and before this Board.

The dispute as to the title to the mahantship arose in February 1905, on the death in that month of Jhandu Nath, who was the mahant of the math, and had succeeded Tej Nath in the mahantship in 1897. In this suit the plaintiff alleges that he was the only sadhak (disciple) of the deceased Mahant Jhandu Nath, and being the only sadhak of Mahant Jhandu Nath, he was the only one of the mendicant fraternity of the temple who was qualified for election to the mahantship; that he was duly elected mahant by the ten classes of mendicants (dasnam bhik) on the 24th February 1905; and that he was appointed with the usual ceremonies. On the other side the defendant denies that the plaintiff had ever been the sadhak of Mahant Jhandu Nath, or was qualified for election to the mahantship, or was elected mahant. The defendant's case is that it is not necessary that the sadhak of the last mahant should be elected as the mahant. He alleges in his written statement that :—

"The sadhak or a co-disciple, or the sadhak of a co-disciple of the deceased mahant is appointed a mahant, and failing these or in the event of none of these being a fit person, the mendicants of all the ten classes (dasnam bhik) have the power to make any fit person the sadhak of the gaddi and appoint him a mahant."

The defendant further alleges that he was a sadhak of Mahant Tej Nath, who preceded Mahant Jhandu Nath on the gaddi of the temple, and as such sadhak was qualified for election to the mahantship, and that he was duly elected and with the usual ceremonies was appointed mahant by all the ten classes of mendicants (dasnam bhik) on the 24th February 1905. It is not disputed that the defendant was a sadhak of Mahant Tej Nath. It is common ground that the time for the election of a successor in the mahantship of this temple is the terhwin, the thirteenth day ceremony, after the death of the deceased mahant, which in this case fell on the 24th February 1905. It is also common ground that on the death of a mahant of this temple the election of his successor takes place at Hardwar, and that the election and appointment of the new mahant is by the ten classes of mendicants (dasnam bhik) assembled at Hardwar for that purpose. From the evidence their Lordships infer that the usual place at which the dasnam bhik assemble for the purpose of electing a mahant of this temple and at which they elect a mahant is at the temple. Another common ground is that on the election and appointment of a mahant of this temple a mahantinama is drawn up and is witnessed by those who were present at the election, and is registered.

The defendant, who was the general attorney and storekeeper of the deceased mahant, is in possession of the temple and of the property appertaining to it. Consequently it is for the plaintiff to prove his right to the mahantship, which, if proved, would in the case of this temple carry with it the right to the possession of the temple and of the property appertaining thereto. If the plaintiff has failed to prove that he is the duly elected mahant of the math his suit must fail, and in that event it would be immaterial to consider whether the defendant is or is not the mahant of the math, or whether he has not any better title to the temple and the property which appertains to it than a title of mere possession.

Much evidence has been led by each side. The documentary evidence is not, in their Lordships' opinion, conclusive in favour of either side. The oral evidence is, as the High Court observed, extraordinarily conflicting, even for a case of this kind. Some of the material witnesses, who, if their evidence was true, must have been in a position to contradict or explain much of the evidence of the other side as to the events of the 24th February 1905, were examined and were cross-examined at great length, but were allowed to leave the witness-box without their attention having been directed to the case of the other side. As the case was treated in the Court of the trial Judge, it was an important question whether there were on the 24th February 1905 two elections of a mahant by the dasnam bhik, or one election only, or no real election at all. As the learned Judges of the High Court observed in their judgment in the defendant's appeal before them:

"The witnesses for the respondent (the plaintiff) say nothing about the election of the appellant (the defendant), and the witnesses for the appellant, with one or two exceptions, say nothing about the election of the respondent," and yet it is alleged that there were two elections on the morning of the 24th February 1905 by the dasnam bhik then assembled at the temple.

The Subordinate Judge found as a fact that the plaintiff was the sadhak of Mahant Jhandu Nath. The learned Judges of the High Court, after reviewing the evidence bearing on that question, and not overlooking the fact that it was a strong point in favour of the view which the Subordinate Judge had taken, that a number of fakirs who were unlikely to choose a complete outsider had joined in the so-called election of the plaintiff as mahant, were on the whole unable to say that the evidence that the plaintiff had been duly appointed a sadhak was satisfactory. As the plaintiff had failed to satisfy the Judges of the High Court that he had been a sadhak of Mahant Jhandu Nath, and as he had neither alleged nor proved that he was in any other way qualified for election as mahant of the math, they might have allowed the appeal and have dismissed the suit without going into the question as to whether he was or was not elected. However, they did no dispose of the appeal before them on that point; they decided the appeal on the question as to whether the plaintiff had or had not been duly elected the mahant. In the view which their Lordships take of this case it is not necessary for them to decide whether or not the plaintiff had been a sadhak of Mahant Jhandu Nath.

The evidence as to the so-called elections on the 24th February 1905 is most conflicting. Each party claims to have been elected mahant by the dasnam bhik on that day. That there were, in fact, two factions amongst the dasnam bhik—one faction desirous of electing the plaintiff as mahant, the other faction desirous of electing the defendant as mahant—is on the evidence obvious. The Subordinate Judge found that it was satisfactorily proved that the plaintiff was duly elected mahant by the dasnam bhik on that day, and that the alleged election of the defendant as mahant was a fictitious transaction. The High Court found it proved that the defendant was elected on the 24th February 1905 by a large gathering of qualified persons and that the election of the plaintiff was:—

"A hole-and-corner affair in comparison with that of the appellant (the defendant), and seems to have been carried out hurriedly by a discontented minority" of the dasnam bhik which had assembled at the temple on the morning of the 24th February 1905.

There is evidence to support each of these contradictory findings. If their Lordships were to confine their attention to the evidence as to what took place on the 24th February 1905, it might be difficult to come to a conclusion as to the side on which the truth is to be found. The plaintiff's case is that he was elected at the temple that morning by the dasnam bhik, and that, having gone with his supporters to the Ganges to bathe before the completion of the ceremonies, they found on their return from bathing that the doors of the temple were closed, and they were obliged to complete the ceremonies at the haweli of the Rani of Landhaura, where he was installed, and that the bhandara, the customary feast on such occasions, took place at the Rani's haweli.

The plaintiff represented that he had been deceived by the defendant, and had believed until he returned from bathing that the defendant was favourable to his election. He represented that before he went to bathe, the defendant had at the temple handed to him the ceremonial robes to be used at his installation, and given him the mahantinama of Mahant Jhandu Nath as a precedent upon which his own mahantinama should be drawn up. The defendant's case was that he and he alone had been elected by the dasnam bhik at the temple on the morning of the 24th February 1905, and that the ceremonies for the completion of his appointment as mahant had taken place at the temple.

Mahant Jhandu Nath, being ill, went to Lahore and died there on the 12th February 1905. There is some evidence, which their Lordships see no reason to doubt, that when at Lahore, Mahant Jhandu Nath nominated the defendant as a fit person to succeed him in the mahantship. It is not suggested that Mahant Jhandu Nath had any power to appoint anyone as his successor, but his nomination would probably have weight with the dasnam bhik. The plaintiff, even assuming for the moment that he was a sadhak of Mahant Jhandu Nath, had no experience in the management of the affairs of the mahant or of the property appertaining to the temple. On the other hand the defendant, who undoubtedly had been a sadhak of Mahant Tej Nath and a co-disciple of Mahant Jhandu Nath, had been for years the general attorney of Mahant Jhandu Nath and the storekeeper of the temple. On the death of Mahant Jhandu Nath the defendant was early in the field preparing to secure his own election as mahant in succession to Mahant Jhandu Nath. The defendant and some supporters of his executed an agreement on the 18th February 1905 by which they settled between them that the defendant should be the mahant and should be installed on the gaddi of Baba Sarwan Nath. The defendant before the 24th

February 1905 took a step which must have been notorious as indicating that he claimed to succeed Mahant Jhandu Nath; he filed an application in the Revenue Court in which he prayed that his name should be entered in the Revenue papers in respect of the property of the temple in place of that of the late Mahant Jhandu Nath. When the defendant was examined in this suit as to his application to the Revenue Court for mutation of names he, in answer to the pertinent question:—

"How did you file an application for mutation of names when you had not been elected a mahant?"

replied—

"We had settled the matter amongst ourselves."

In reply to the interrogative observation on that answer:—

"The dasnam bhik had not settled the question up to that time?"

the defendant said:—

"When Jhandu Nath was elected to the gaddi the dasnam bhik said that Puran Puri (the defendant) would be appointed mahant after Jhandu Nath; and on the tija day also the panches settled that Puran Puri would be appointed mahant."

It was the defendant who sent out the invitations to the mahants and other people to attend on the terhwin, the thirteenth day ceremony, when a mahant should be elected. None of the invitations have been produced, but from some of the replies which have been put in evidence it may be inferred that the invitations were to attend for the election of the defendant as mahant. It was the defendant who made the preparations for the bhandara, the customary feast, which was to take place at the temple on the day of the election of the mahant. That bhandara was held at the temple, and it is not pretended that the plaintiff and his supporters took part in it. The bhandara in which the plaintiff and his supporters took part was held at the haweli of the Rani of Landhaura. The plaintiff had then no money, but after he had been placed on the gaddi at the Rani's haweli he borrowed some money from one Swami Shimboo Gir and sent two Brahmans into the bazar, who bought the things which were required for his bhandara.

According to some of the plaintiff's witnesses, the defendant was present at the temple when it was settled by the dasnam bhik that the plaintiff had a right to the mahantship and should be appointed mahant, and did not object or claim that he, and not the plaintiff, should be elected mahant. Having regard to the facts to which their Lordships have referred, it is impossible to believe that the defendant was assenting to the election of the plaintiff. There is a large body of evidence in support of the defendant's case that he was elected mahant on the morning of the 24th February 1905.

The High Court has found that the majority of the persons present on the morning of the 24th February who were qualified to elect a mahant of this temple were in favour of the defendant; that in point of numbers and of influence the defendant received more support than the plaintiff did; that the election of the defendant must have taken place before that of the plaintiff; and that there was no attempt on the part of the defendant to conceal the arrangements which he had made for the 24th February 1905. It has not been shown to their Lordships that the High Court came to a wrong conclusion on any one of these points. An election by dasnam bhik of a mahant to be a valid and effectual election must be by a majority of the dasnam bhik assembled for that purpose. A separate election by a faction of the dasnam bhik is not a valid and effectual election. Their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to prove that he was elected a mahant.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Forest land—Proof of possession—Acts of ownership quite essential to determine title—Nature of evidence to prove title and possession.

Where the defendants are shown to be in possession of certain forest land, the plaintiff in order to establish his claim to it must prove definite acts of ownership exercised by him on the land from time to time. [p. 730, col. 2]

A sketch prepared by one of the parties at a time when the Government attempted to take up these lands under the Land Acquisition Act before any controversy as to the boundary of these lands arose is strong cogent evidence to prove ownership. [p. 730, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Calicut, in Original Suit No. 19 of 1910.

FACTS.—The dispute was about certain hills in the Nilambur Taluk, Malabar District, each of the rival jenmies (Kilakka Kovilagam and Manjeri Kovilagam) owning hills in the neighbourhood. An elephant being trapped and falling into a pit, a dispute arose between the parties as to who was entitled to the elephant. The defendants took possession of the elephant. Thereupon the plaintiff sued to recover possession of the hill and of the elephant. The Subordinate Judge of Calicut after examination of the different plans and survey records came to the conclusion that the hill belonged partly to the plaintiff and partly to the defendants, but that the portion where the elephant was trapped belonged to the defendants. Both parties appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.—These are cross-appeals from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Calicut in a suit brought by the plaintiffs who belong to the Kizhakke Kovilagam, claiming to recover certain lands from the defendants as part of their Nedunchuri Malavaram. The defendants on the other hand say that the suit lands belong to their Vennakote Malvaram. The Subordinate Judge in a very careful judgment has found that the real boundary is not as claimed by either side, but runs along the stream Koyakkadanthodu which in the plan Exhibt A divides the plots B series from the C series. This is a wild hilly country and as observed by the Subordinate Judge, until the decision of the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Vira Rayan (1) the Government claimed to be the owner of all these waste forest lands; and that, as well as the wild condition of the land, may account for the indefiniteness of the boundaries. A long series of documents have been put in on both sides which have been analysed by the Subordinate Judge. It is sufficient to say that we agree with his conclusion that the plaintiffs, whose admitted lands are to the south, claimed from early times that their boundary extended as far northwards as the Kurunhithodu; and we agree with the Subordinate Judge that the story of the defendants that another stream far to the south was also known as Kurunhithodu is altogether unworthy of acceptance For one thing it is abundantly proved that the plaintiffs have always been the owners of the plot F which intervenes between what is admitted by the defendants to be the plaintiffs' land and the suit lands, plots C. We also agree with the Subordinate Judge that it is not shown that the plaintiffs beyond asserting their claim exercised any acts of ownership in the plots B series, that is to say, to the north of the plots C series. Then turning to the defendants' case we find more difficulty in ascertaining what was the real boundary claimed by the defendants, because there is no such clear boundary as the Kurunhithodu. But on the whole we see no reason to differ from the main conclusions of the Subordinate Judge as to the position at any rate of the western boundary, a stone called the Anamarippan Kallu. The defendents are anxious to bring that stone down south and place, it if anything, rather to the south-east at the point E3, so that a line drawn from that stone up to the Utratan Puzha would make a sort of south-western boundary whereas in the earlier documents they gave that as the western boundary. If we place the stone where the Subordinate Judge has placed it, it would form a very fairly accurate western boundary for the defendants' lands. This is the boundary in Exhibit 87 which was mainly relied on by the defendants.

On the east that boundary starts from a certain point in that boundary which is now clearly in the Government forest reserve plot G. But what appears likely is that both the forest reserves G series really at one time belonged to the defendants and the plaintiffs respectively, and we find that even to this day there are plots of cultivation which belong to the defendants in the plots G series and the defendants' boundary as given in Exhibit 87 starts from a point D4 in the reserve. Two other points are then mentioned to mark the boundaries but unfortunately they are not identifiable and throw no light on the case. The boundary is then said to go westwards towards the Anamarippankallu. In the absence of identification of those two points it is impossible to say exactly merely from Exhibit 87 how that boundary line really ran between these two points. In any view we have this state of things, that the defendants claim a boundary which runs clearly to the south of the boundary claimed by the plaintiffs. The defendants' ownership of some plots of land to the south of the boundary line contended for by the plaintiffs is sufficient to prevent the plaintiffs' contention being accepted in its entirety. One claim has to be set off against the other. It cannot be said that the plaintiffs have established, in the absence of any proof of exercise of ownership, their right to lands which are shown to have been claimed by and in possession of the defendants. There is just one piece of evidence as to which we differ from the Subordinate Judge and which we think is of great assistance in enabling us to decide the case, and that is as to the position of a certain hill belonging to the defendants, that is the Muthappankallu. It is shown, not claimed, that the defendants possessed a hill of that name, but the Subordinate Judge finds that it is situated in what is now Government reserve plot G. On the other hand the defendants rely upon a rough sketch which was drawn up in the year 1871 when there was a question of acquiring part of this plot G for Government, and this is, in our opinion, valuable evidence, because it dates back to a period when this dispute had not arisen. It shows the boundary stones which admittedly run down along the boundary. Between A and G that boundary runs north to south and then runs for a short space down to B4 from west to east, then turns again and runs from north to south. That is also marked upon this Exhibit 84. We see there the boundary stones running down to south and then west to east and then again north to south. This plan contains a plot 13, which appears from the key which is Exhibit 85 to bear the name of Muthuppankallu and to belong to the defendants; and it is shown in this plan as extending as far down as the Koyakkadamthodu, which is also the southern boundary of D5 and proves, in our opinion, that the defendants' lands include B5. That is exceedingly important because it is an answer to both the appeals. For it shows that the defendants' appeal claiming that the plots C series belong to them as including Muthappankallu is unfounded. It also shows that the boundary of the defendants' land extends as far as that Koyakkadanthodu.

We have nothing on the other side but the fact that the plaintiffs claimed the lands as far as the Kurunhithodu. That is not enough when we find a similar claim by the other side supported by better evidence. The Subordinate Judge proceeded to some extent, though he is not very definite about it, on the view that the plaintiffs' lands did really extend at one time as far as the Kurunhithodu and that they have lost some of them by adverse possession on the part of the defendants. But we think it much more likely that having regard to the nature of these lands and the rival claims of Government their respective rights were very vaguely conceived by both sides and that the plaintiffs put forward a claim to northern boundary to which they never had any real claim.

On behalf of the defendants there is some evidence not only of the exercise of ownership as regards these plots B series, but as we have said B5 would appear to have been taken to be theirs without any question in this investigation in 1871. The Judge has relied upon a certain deposition in another suit which is not evidence, and he has also relied upon certain criminal proceedings evidently between persons claiming under the plaintiffs and the defendants respectively; but as it is not shown with regard to what exact spot the dispute arose, we are unable to attach any importance to that evidence. Again the leases, or karars, allowing timber to be cut do not specify where the timber was to be cut, and are, therefore, useless. Then he relies upon certain forest passes which were issued by the forest officer to persons claiming under the defendants authorising them to take the wood which they cut through the forest reserve G. We have taken a good deal of trouble to try and extract something out of the study of these passes. It is quite clear that there was a place called Alakkal, which is Exhibit 4, and it is clear that there was a drive through the forest marked H along which timber used to be taken. Of course it may have been taken through the plot A which is admittedly defendants' or through the land in dispute B. But that drive H is called in Exhibit 70 Allakkal, Ellikkal or Allakkal drive so that it gets its name from the place where it starts from. In the same document there is a reference to Chundiyanhal Elukal and it seems to us exceedingly probable that H is that Elakkal, because it is clear from these passes that there was some place called Chundiyanhal in the defendants' land where they stored their timber. It seems to me very likely—I cannot put it higher—that H is the Chundiyanhal Ellikkal and that it starts from a point bearing that name in B series. If so, the evidence of the passes strongly supports the defendants' claim to the plots B series. But even putting it aside and without relying on the adverse possession of the defendants as the Subordinate Judge has done, the proper conclusion upon the evidence is that the plaintiffs, though they claimed the lands as far north as the Kurunhithodu, have failed to prove that they were in possession of lands north of the C series. As I have said the plan, Exhibit 84, is very strong evidence, in our opinion, that B5 belonged to the defendants. If that is so, no better identification of the boundary of the defendants' lands can be afforded than by taking this Thodu, as the Subordinate Judge has taken, as the boundary as far as it goes. The result is that both the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—One Gandu (or Gulla) obtained a simple money-decree against two non-proprietors, Hukmi and Devi Dass, and in execution had the houses occupied by them attached and sold. The property was purchased by Balkishan, defendant No. 1, and subsequently plaintiff, who is the proprietor of the site on which the houses stand, objected to the sale and asked for the release of the houses. His objections were disallowed on the ground that they were time-barred, and on the 14th May 1910, he instituted a suit to establish his right. In that suit the heading of the plaint described it as one for a declaration that the suite under the houses was not capable of attachment and sale, but in the final paragraph the plaintiff asked for a declaration regarding the site and also for an order directing that the purchaser be ejected by removal of the materials (malba).

The Court of first instance dismissed plaintiff's suit, but the Divisional Judge on appeal granted him a declaration to the effect "that only the materials of the huts and not the site were capable of attachment and sale." This decree was dated the 26th of May 1911. Subsequently the plaintiff applied for a review and amendment of the decree, and prayed that an addition should be made to the decree in the form of an order directing the purchaser to remove his materials within a specified time. This petition was rejected by the Divisional Judge on the 19th of October 1911 on the ground that plaintiff's suit was for a declaration regarding the site, that he had been granted the said declaration, and that an order requiring the removal of the materials could not be added, the order concluding with the words "The petitioner must take separate proceedings to achieve his purpose." On the 21st of March 1912, plaintiff instituted a second suit in which he prayed for an order directing the ejectment of the purchaser and the removal of his materials. The Munsif granted him a decree for dispossession of the purchaser who was directed to remove the materials within two months and vacate the site. The purchaser appealed to the Divisional Judge, who was the same officer who decided the appeal in the previous suit and his appeal was accepted on the ground that the present suit was barred by time and also by the rules of res judicata and by Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Plaintiff has appealed from the decree of the Divisional Judge and I have heard arguments at some length, but I must confess that I find it difficult to follow the learned Judge's reasoning. In his judgment he admits that it is possible that in deciding the previous appeal, he examined only the heading of the plaint and overlooked the final prayer for relief, and he adds that in any event he could not have granted the consequential relief prayed for on the ground of action there alleged. Upon those admissions it is not easy to see how the present suit can be barred either by the rule of res judicata or by Order II, rule 2, of the Code. Mr. Tek Chand, for respondents, argues that Explanations (4) and (5) of section 11 of the Code apply to the case, that plaintiff in the former suit might and should have attacked defendant's right to remain in possession; that it must, therefore, be taken that defendant's right to possession was a matter directly and substantially in issue in that suit, and that plaintiff's claim in the plaint to eject him must be deemed to have been refused as it was not granted. But it is clear that plaintiff by asking for defendant's ejectment did attack the latter's right to remain in possession, and though this matter was not expressly put in issue, it must be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in that case. The Divisional Judge, however, held in that suit (as he explains in his judgment in the present case) that such relief could not be given in a suit for a declaratory decree. His order rejecting the petition for review makes this abundantly clear, as in that order he stated in express terms that he could not in that suit grant the relief claimed and that plaintiff must take "separate proceedings" to obtain that relief. When a Court expressly declares that it is not competent in a particular suit to entertain a specific prayer, it is impossible to hold that its decision acts as res judicata in respect of the matter covered by that prayer [See Parsotam Gir v. Narbada Gir (1); Bhola Singh v. Gurdit Singh (2) and Devi Ditta v. Nathu (3)]. To such a case the provisions of section 11 of the Code are inapplicable, and I hold, therefore, that the present suit is not barred by any rule of res judicata. The next question is whether Order II, rule 2, of the Code applies to the present case. This rule provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; that if a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished and that a person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any such reliefs but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he shall not afterwards sue for any relief so omitted.

This section cannot possibly bar the present suit. In the first place, the Divisional Judge in the former suit held (rightly or wrongly), that plaintiff was not entitled to claim dispossession of the defendant, and in the second place, plaintiff as a matter of fact (though this was overlooked by the learned Judge when deciding the appeal in that case) did claim dispossession of defendant and did ask for that relief. If, in the first suit, plaintiff asked for a relief to which he was not entitled in that suit, he cannot be debarred from subsequently asking for such relief in a second suit [Musammat Prab Devi v. Harkishen Das (4); Musammat Parmeshri v. Vasdeo (5); Ram Sewak Singh v. Nakched Singh (6); Piari v. Khiali Ram (7)]. But it is unnecessary to dilate upon this point, as plaintiff actually put forward a claim to dispossess defendant and prayed for that relief.

The final ground upon which the present suit has been dismissed is that it is time-barred. Unfortunately the learned Judge has not discussed this part of the case or referred to the Article of the Limitation Act which bars the suit. Mr. Tek Chand urges that it is Article 11 and contends that the present suit should have been brought within one year from the date of the Court executing the decree, which disallowed plaintiff's objections to the attachment of the property. The present suit was admittedly not brought within one year from such date, but I cannot agree that Article 11 is applicable. Plaintiff's objections were not investigated but were summarily dismissed as time-barred, and there is ample authority for holding that to such a case Article 11 of the Act is not applicable and that a suit can be brought for the recovery of immoveable property at any time within twelve years from the date when the cause of action accrued [See Venkapa v. Chenbasapa (8), Krishnaji Vithal v. Bhaskar Rangnath (9) and Karsan v. Ganpatram (10)]. I accordingly hold that the present suit is not barred either by time or by the rule of res judicata or under Order II, rule 2 of the Code and accepting this appeal, I remand the case to the Divisional Judge under Order XLI, rule 23, for decision of the appeal before him on the merits.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal is an agricultural holding owned by the members of a family of Mandars under the plaintiffs and the defendants as their landlords. The plaintiffs are interested to the extent of a fourth share and the defendants to the extent of a three-fourths share in the superior interest. The Mandars had mortgaged the holding to the defendants who sued to enforce their security, obtained a decree thereon, and took steps to bring the holding to sale in execution. On the 17th February 1908, the Mandars transferred the holding to the plaintiffs under a conveyance for Rs. 1020 which was paid into Court in satisfaction of the mortgage-decree held by the defendants. The defendants had, prior to these proceedings, instituted a suit against the Mandars for arrears of rent payable in respect of their three-fourths share. An ex parte decree was at first obtained and was subsequently set aside; finally, on the 20th February 1908, a decree for rent, which could operate only as a decree for money, was made in favour of the defendants. On the 16th June 1908, the defendants in execution of that decree purchased the right, title and interest of the Mandars in the holding in dispute. They obainted delivery of possession through Court and thus dispossessed the plaintiffs. On the 29th July 1910, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for declaration of their title by purchase and for recovery of possession. The defendants contended that the holding was non-transferable and that the plaintiffs had consequently acquired no title under their purchase. The Subordinate Judge has not allowed evidence to be given upon the question of the existence of a custom of transferability of occupancy holdings in the locality, on the authority of the decision in Haro Chandra Poddar v. Umesh Chandra Bhattacharjee (1).

(1) 5 Ind. Cas. 39; 11 C. L. J. 20; 14 C. W. N. 71

He has found on the merits in favour of the plaintiffs and has made a decree for possession and for determination of mesne profits.

In the present appeal by the defendants, the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed substantially on four grounds; namely, first, that the conveyance by the Mandars in favour of the pl intiffs was fraudulent and did not pass title to them; secondly, that the plaintiffs are estopped to deny the validity of the title of the defendants, as with full knowledge of the rent decree and of the execution proceedings thereon they did not raise any objection; thirdly, that the defendants in their character as purchasers at an execution sale were entitled to raise the question of transferability of the holding; and, fourthly, that the defendants in their character as co-sharer landlords were entitled to resist the claim of the plaintiffs to the extent of a three-fourths share.

In support of the first ground, it has been contended that at the time when the conveyance was executed by the Mandars in favour of the plaintiffs on the 17th February 1908, the transferors as well as the transferees were aware of the pendency of the suit for arrears of rent, and that the transfer was consequently a device to defeat the claim of the defendants as landlords. There is clearly no foundation for this contention. There is nothing to show that the transferors intended the sale as a cloak or device for their own protection; and on the principle explained by this Court in the case of Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (2), the transfer cannot be impeached as fraudulent. The bona fides of the transfer cannot be doubted, because during the pendency of the execution proceedings on the basis of the mortgage, the transferors intimated to the Court that they intended to satisfy the mortgage-decree by sale of some of their properties, though they did not specify the particular properties they intended to sell. There was a valid decree against them, and the sale for consideration effected in these circumstances cannot be deemed fraudulent. The first ground thus fails.

In support of the second ground, it has been urged that the transferors and the transferees were both aware of the rent suit, that it was their duty to intimate to the Court that the property which the defendants sought to bring to sale in execution of their decree for rent had already been transferred by the conveyance of the 17th February 1908 and that their omission to do so estopped them now, on the principle recognised in Pickard v. Sears (3). That case has plainly no application here. It is well settled that where a person, by his words or conduct, wifully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter that a different state of things existed at the time. But this principle has no application where the person against whom the estoppel is sought to be applied is under no duty to speak. Here, it has not been established that the plaintiffs were under any duty to speak and that by reason of their failure to warn the defendants, the position of the latter has been altered. The second ground consequently cannot be sustained.

In support of the third ground, it has been argued that the defendants in their character as purchasers at an execution sale were entitled to raise the question of transferability of the holding. This contention cannot possibly be supported in view of the principle laid down by the Full Bench in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (4). As between the plaintiffs and their transferors, no question of transferability could be raised, because the transferors were bound by the doctrine of estoppel not to question the title of their transferees. As between the transferors of the plaintiffs and the defendants, there was no estoppel, because the defendants were purchasers at an execution sale. It was, accordingly, open to the Mandars to impeach the title of the defendants after the sale or to take objection before the sale if they had timely intimation of the execution proceedings. But that stage has been passed and the Mandars have not objected to the validity of the execution sale. Consequently, as between the Mandars and the defendants, it must be held that the defendants are the purchasers of the right, title and interest of their judgment-debtors, and are bound by the same estoppel as binds their judgment-debtors. Upon this question, there has been some fluctuation of judicial opinion, but, as was explained in the case of Debendra Nath Sen v. Mirza Abdul Samed (5), upon a review of the authorities, it is now well-settled that a purchaser at an execution sale is bound by the same rule of estoppel as the judgment-debtor, on the principle that the former has purchased merely the right, title and interest of the latter and does not consequently occupy a position of greater advantage. This view is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy 6) The inference follows that the defendants, viewed in their character as purchasers of the right, title and interest of the Mandars, are not entitled to raise the question of transferability of the disputed holding. The third ground accordingly fails

In support of the fourth ground, it has been urged that the defendants, in their character of co-sharers in the superior interest to the extent of a three-fourths share, are entitled to raise the question of transferability of the holding. This contention is clearly well-founded on principle and is supported by the decision in Dilbar Sardar v. Hosein Ali Bepari (7). In the event of sale of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the purchaser can be evicted by any of the co-sharer landlords to the extent of his own share, and if possession of the entire holding has been acquired by some of the co-sharers, the other co-sharers are entitled to joint possession thereof. Consequently the question of transferability was material for the purposes of the decision of the case, and the fourth ground taken by the appellants must prevail.

It has been argued, however, on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents, that even if the holding is not proved to be transferable by custom or local usage, the defendants are estopped by their conduct, and that as they have taken the purchase-money in satisfaction of their mortgage dues, they cannot question the title of the plaintiffs under their conveyance. Upon the materials on the record it is not possible for us to give effect to this contention. No doubt, after the purchase by the plaintiffs had been completed, the defendants took the money deposited in Court; but, this by itself does not estop them. Yet, it may be possible for the plaintiffs to establish by evidence that the conduct of the defendants, before the sale was completed and during the stage of negotiation, was such as to estop them. This must be determined by the Court below along with the question of transferability of the holding.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part. The decree of the Subordinate Judge will stand confirmed in respect of an one-fourth share, but will be set aside in respect of the remaining three-fourths share. To this extent, the case will be remanded in order that the title of the plaintiffs may be investigated on the basis of their purchase. The question of transferability raised by the defendants as well as the question of estoppel raised by the plaintiffs will be open for investigation, and both parties will be at liberty to adduce evidence. The plaintiffs-respondents are entitled to one-fourth of the costs of this appeal, and three-fourths of the costs will abide the result.

Appeal partly allowed; Case remanded.

UPPER BURMA JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, s. 53 (2) (ii), whether ultra vires—Suit regarding State lands between private individuals—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts

Section 53 (2) (ii) of the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation is ultra vires of the Legislature, even in respect of suits regarding State lands between private individuals. [p. 737, col. 2.]

MAHOMED AMIN v. NACHIAPPA CHETTY.

' Consequently a suit for a decree declaring that a house situate on Government land is not liable to be sold in execution is cognizable by a Civil Court. [p. 740, col. 1.]

Mr. A. C. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. G. Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant sued for a decree declaring that a house was not liable to be sold in execution of a mortgage-decree obtained by the defendant-respondent against one Maung Khan. The house is admittedly situated on State land of which Government granted a 30 years' lease to one Ma Mya in 1903. The lease was subsequently transferred to Maung Po Sin and then to Maung Khan by Revenue Officers.

The defendant respondent contended, that he had acquired a mortgage lien on the house and ground before they were transferred to the plaintiff appellant.

The Court below did not consider the question of jurisdiction at all but agreed in dismissing the suit on the merits.

The plaintiff-appellants have appealed and the preliminary question of jurisdiction has been argued at length.

Section 53 (2) (ii), Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, declares that a Civil Court shall not exercise jurisdiction over any claim to the ownership or possession of any State land or to establish any lien upon or in other interests in such land. Now the present claim is not a claim to the house as so much building, material but to the house as it stands and it includes the land on which it is situated and that is admittedly State land. The plaintiff-appellant claims to be the owner of the house and to be entitled to the possession of the house and of the ground on which it stands and he denies the lien set up by the defendant-respondent. Section 53 (2) (ii), Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, therefore, clearly debars Civil Courts from entertaining the claim, but it is contended that this clause is ultra vires of the Legislature and, therefore, invalid.

The point is one of very great importance. The validity of the clause in question has, I believe, never been questioned before and for a great many years Civil Courts have refused to exercise jurisdiction in such suits and they have been disposed of by Revenue Officers. The first reported case is Maung Aung Byi v. Maung Yan Byo (1). That was apparently a case in which a State tenant sued a sub-tenant for rent of State land. The Civil Courts apparently refused to exercise jurisdiction, but it was held by the late Mr. Burgess that as the defendant had attorned to the plaintiff, he could not deny his title and the question of jurisdiction should not have been raised as the defendant was not concerned with any question of title between the plaintiff and the State. It is to be noted, however, that section 53 (2) (ii), Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, debars Civil Courts from trying suits for rent of State land.

The next published case is Maung Tha Aung v. Maung San Ke (2). That was a suit for the redemption of a usufructuary mortgage of State land and Mr. Burgess held that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was barred.

Next, in the unpublished case Maung Myat Le v. Ma Po Kin (3) Mr. Burgess considered whether in a case concerning State land between two private persons it would be feasible for the Civil Court to decide questions of fact and the rights of the parties inter se and leave it to the Revenue Courts to accept and act upon such findings if they thought fit, and it was decided that this plan would not work and accordingly in Maung Nut v. Ma Mi (4) Mr. Burgess held that although the parties were private individuals, all such claims were cognisable by the Revenue Courts only.

Then another difficulty arose.

Section 53, Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, debars a Civil Court from trying any question as to the limits of any State land and, therefore, from deciding whether any particular piece of land is State land or not. Consequently when in a civil suit the plea was raised that the land claimed was State land the question was, what the Civil Court was to do. It was accordingly held in Maung Ke v. Maung Po Ni (5) that it was for the Civil Court to decide whether it had jurisdiction or not and that it must, therefore, decide the question whether the land in suit was State or not, but that its decision must be based on the view taken by the Revenue Authorities.

(4) U. B. R. (1897-1901) II, p. 209.
(5) U. B. R. (1897-1901) II, p. 211.

The heading of this ruling, I think, is unfortunate. What was really laid down was that the Civil Courts had to try not the question whether the land was State land or not, but whether the Revenue Authorities had up till then regarded it as State land.

Since then this has been the rule followed, but in practice it entails many disadvantages apart altogether from fundamental rights.

In J. Moment v. Secretary of State (6), it was held by the majority of a Full Bench of the Lower Burma Chief Court that section 41 (b) of the Lower Burma Town and Village Lands Act, which is a similar provision to section 53 (2) (ii) of the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, was ultra vires of the Legislature because it contravened the provisions of section 65, Government of India Act, 1858. This was the Statute by which the Crown took over the Government of India from the East India Company and section 65 provides amongst other things that all persons and bodies politic shall and may have and take the same suits, remedies and proceedings, legal and equitable, against the Secretary of State in Council as they could have done against the said Company. The Legislative Council of the Governor-General derive their legislative powers from section 22, Indian Councils Act of 1861, which contains a proviso that the Governor-General in Council shall not have the power of making any laws or regulations which shall affect any provisions of the Government of India Act of 1858.

The Chief Court held that section 51 (b), Lower Burma Town and Village Lands Act did affect a provision of section 65 of the Government of India Act, 1858, inasmuch as it purported to take away the right which was possessed by every one prior to 1858 of bringing suits for land against the East India Company in the ordinay Courts.

The judgment of the Chief Court was upheld by the Privy Council in Secretary of State v. J. Moment (7).

The Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation is a regulation made for Burma by the Governor-General in Council under the provisions of section 1 of the Government of India Act, 1870, which does not give power to override any provisions of section 65, Government of India Act, 1858. Consequently so far as section 53, Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, withdraws suits brought by or against the Secretary of State regarding State land from the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts, the section is in accordance with the Privy Council's ruling clearly ultra vires, and if this case were on all fours with the Lower Burma case, I should merely have to follow that ruling and it would be unnecessary to say anything further.

But that was a suit brought by a private person against the Secretary of State. The present suit is one between private individuals. It is, therefore, urged the two cases are quite different, that though the Government of India had no power to enact that certain suits against the Secretary of State for India should be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts, it had and has the power to enact that a particular class of suits between private individuals should not be cognisable by the ordinary Civil Court but should be tried by Revenue Courts. It is urged that all that section 53 (2) (ii), Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, did was to change the forum.

I would point out that if Civil Courts had power to decide claims to land as against Government but not claims arising out of State land between private individuals, the position would be rather anomalous and just the opposite to the one originally laid down by the late Mr. Burgess. A difficulty would arise if a private individual wished to sue both the Secretary of State in Council and a private individual in respect of the same land: he would apparently have to sue each separately in a different forum and the result might well be confusion.

Moreover, as I read section 53, Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, the reason for debarring the Civil Court from determining a question to the possession of State land even between two individuals is that such a decision might affect the rights of Government, but as it has now been laid down that the ordinary Civil Courts are to have the power of determining those rights, there can no longer exist any reason for withdrawing suits between private persons from the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts.

But whether the reason for barring the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts has ceased to exist or not and however anomalous the position may be, unless the portion of section 53 (2) (ii) which applies to the present case can be shown to be ultra vires of the Legislature, effect must be given to it.

Now the concluding part of section 22, Indian Councils Act, 1861, lays down that the Governor-General in Council shall not have power to make any law or regulation which shall, in any way, affect any part of the unwritten laws or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom.

I take it that what this means is, no laws shall be made contravening the fundamental principles on which British civilization is based e. g., freedom of the person, freedom of religion, equality before the law, etc.

Now section 53, Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, seems to be clearly an attempt to introduce in a mild way into Burma what is known in France as the "droit administratif."

Dicey says that this scheme is based on the privilege of the State and of its officers and on its supposed necessity for a separation of powers:—"The second of these characteristics is that the ordinary judicial tribunals which determine ordinary questions, whether they be civil or criminal, between man and man, must, speaking generally, have no concern whatever with matters at issue between a private person and the State, i. e., with questions of administrative law, but that such questions, in so far as they form at all matter of litigation (contentieux administratif), must be determined by Administrative Courts in some way connected with the Government or the administration." (Dicey's Law of Constitution, 7th Edition, page 335). "The Judicial Courts had, speaking generally, no concern with administrative law, or, in other words, with cases in which the interest of the State or its servants was at issue" (page 336). "They (i. e., ordinary Judges) are even now, as a rule, without jurisdiction in matters which concern the State. They have no right to determine, for instance, the meaning and legal effect in case it be seriously disputed, of official documents" (page 338).

This is one of the points taken by the learned Advocate for the respondent, viz., that it is obviously inequitable that the terms of a lease granted by Government should be determined by the Government and not by the Civil Court.

Now it appears that the "droit administratif," though it exists in many countries, is fundamentally opposed to English ideas. To quote Dicey again: "That 'rule of law', then, which forms a fundamental principle of the (English) constitution has three meanings, or may be regarded from three different points of view. . . . . It means, again, equality before the law, or the equal subjection of all classes to the ordinary law of the land administered by the ordinary Law Courts; the 'rule of law' in this sense excludes the idea of any exemption of officials or others from the duty of obedience to the law which governs other citizens or from the jurisdiction of the ordinary tribunals; there can be with us nothing really corresponding to the 'administrative Law' (droit administratif) or the 'administrative tribunals" (tribunaux administratifs) of France. The notion which lies at the bottom of the 'administrative law' known to foreign countries is, that affairs or disputes in which the Government or its servants are concerned are beyond the sphere of the Civil Courts and must be dealt with by special and more or less official bodies. This idea is utterly unknown to the Law of England, and indeed is fundamentally inconsistent with our traditions and customs" (page 198.)

I think it is clear that section 53 (2) (ii), Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, does affect one of the unwritten laws referred to in section 22, Indian Councils Act, and is, therefore, ultra vires. It may well be that in a backward country, the advantages of the "droit administratif" may far outweigh its disadvantages and that it may, therefore, be worth while to introduce such a scheme and the introduction could hardly be taken as a hardship to persons who lived under the old Burmese regime, and in the course of time as the people became more enlightened the operation of the scheme might be gradually restricted as is happening at present in France, but I think it is clear that such a scheme could be introduced by the British Parliament alone.

I accordingly hold that section 53 (2) (ii), Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, is ultra vires of the Legislature and that the present suit was cognizable by the Civil Courts and I direct that the appeal be now heard on the merits.

Ordered accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 102, 115—Second appeal, maintainability of—Orders passed in execution of decree—Revision, erroneous view of law if ground for.

Section 102, Civil Procedure Code, applies no less to orders passed in execution than to a decree itself.

An erroneous view of the law would not justify interference under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Second appeal against an order of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 7th November 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, Ramtek, dated the 15th August 1913.

Mr. V. G. Joshi, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. G. Pandit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from an order passed in execution of a decree. The appellant is the judgment-debtor and he sought in the Court of first instance to obtain release from attachment of a house, which the decree-holder desired to have sold in execution of the decree. The suit in which the decree was passed was brought to recover Rs. 57 on a simple money-bond executed by the present appellant's father, and he was made liable to the extent of his father's estate. The first Court released the house, but in appeal the District Judge restored the attachment and ordered sale of the property. It is clear on the authorities that no second appeal lies, section 102, Civil Procedure Code, applying no less to orders passed in execution than to the decree itself: see Lala Kandha Pershad v. Lala Lal Behary Lal (1); Din Dayal v.

(1) 25 C. 872.

Patrakhan (2); Narayan v. Nagindas (3) and Mavula Ammal v. Mavula Maracoir (4).

I am asked to treat the memorandum of appeal as an application for revision. The District Judge's decision is based on two findings, one that the appellant inherited the house from his grandfather and the other that property so inherited is by the Hindu Law liable as ancestral assets for his father's debts. It is said that this view of the law is erroneous. Such an error, however, would not justify interference under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. In the lower Court costs will be paid as already ordered.

A great-granddaughter is not entitled to inherit in the presence of her grand-aunts. [p. 742, col. 1.]

Mr. C. G. S. Pillay, for the Appellants.

Mr. Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The second plaintiff-appellant, Ma Saw Heik, is the posthumous daughter of Maung Shwe Tha, who is the only son of Maung Lu Gaung, the only son of Ma San U. Maung Lu Gaung died first, then Maung Shwe Tha died and lastly Ma San U died in 1273.

Ma Saw Heik is thus Ma San U's great-grand-daughter. She and her mother Ma Kin, widow of Maung Shwe Tha, brought a suit for a 1/6th share of the state left by Ma San U. The defendants were Ma San Me and Ma San Di, daughters of Ma San U and Ma Pwa Zon, sister of Maung Shwe Tha.

The plaintiff-appellant Ma Kin obviously has no claim, as her husband Maung Shwe Tha had not acquired any vested right when he died.

The Courts below have also agreed on the authority of Maung Nyo v. Ma Hla Kyu (1) that the second plaintiff-appellant has no claim to inherit either, and the only question now to be decided is whether this decision is correct. It is urged that if Maung Shwe Tha had been alive he would have been entitled as the eldest son of the eldest son to the same share as Ma San Me and Ma San Di, and that there is no reason why Ma Saw Heik should not get her share or at any rate a portion of it in accordance with the texts in section 86 of U Gaung's Digest. These texts are substantially the same and it will be sufficient to cite one. The text from the Vannadhamma runs: "There are four classes of heirs, namely children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and great-grandson's children. When partition of inheritance is made amongst them, those standing in close relationship to the ancestor shall get two shares and those distantly related one share. There shall be equal partition among those standing in the same degree of relationship."

The case of an out-of-time grandchild getting ¼th of what his father would have got and the case of the eldest son of an awratha son are exceptions to this rule.

The rule, moreover, does not seem to me to help Ma Saw Heik. As explained in Ma Hmaw v. Ma On Bwin (2) there is a principle in Buddhist Law that the nearer relatives exclude the more remote even in the case of inheritance by direct descendants. The rule now cited is an exception to this general rule, but I do not think the exception should be extended further than the language of the texts actually justifies.

If the only person competing with Ma Saw Heik had been Ma Pwa Zon, then these texts might be good authority for giving Ma Saw Heik half as much as Ma Pwa Zon got, but I do not think the texts are an authority for holding that an out-of-time granddaughter of a predecessed son can inherit at all in competition with a daughter. If an out-of-time granddaughter gets only ¼th of what her aunts get, it would be absurd to suppose that her daughter or rather the daughter of an out-of-time grandson would be given a half. In the present case I think Ma Saw Heik must be held to be excluded by Ma San Me and Ma San Di. This is apparently the view taken by Mr. Burgess in Ma Gun Bon v. Maung Po Kywe (3) as well as in the ruling relied upon by the Courts below.

(1) 2 L. C. 226.
(2) 2 L. C. 124.

Section 33 of the 10th Book of the Manukye has also been cited, but that merely lays down that the non-partition of an estate for three generations shall not be a bar to a claim to inheritance but beyond that it shall be.

The texts collected in section 88 of the Digest appear to cover the present case. The one from the Manutye is as follows: "The rule of partition of the greatgrandfather's estate between his great-grandchildren on the one part and their grand-uncle on the other follows the ordinary rules of partition according as their grand-parents predeceased or survived the owner of the estate. Under this rule and under similar conditions even great-grandchildren's children are entitled to share with their great-grand-uncle the estate of the latter's father."

The text from the Manu runs: "In the case of partition of the great-grandfather's estate between great-grandchildren and their grand-uncle, the heirs should see whether the great-grandchildren are entitled to inherit or not and then make the partition."

This clearly indicates that in some circumstances the great-grandchildren are not entitled to inherit at all, and I take that to be when their grandfather died before obtaining a vested interest.

The text from the Cittara perhaps makes the matter clearer still: "The rule of partition of the great-grandfather's estate between great-grandchildren on one part, and their grand-uncle on the other, is that the two parties should share the estate equally if the former's grand-parents survived the owner of the estate."

In the present case Mg. Lu Gaung predeceased Ma San U and, therefore, Ma Saw Heik in competition with her grand-aunts can get nothing.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babus Jitendra Lal Banerjee and Bhudar Haldar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for recovery of possession by the plaintiffs, who allege with truth that being interested in the equity of redemption in the property they were omitted from the suit whereby the appellants-defendants Nos. 1 to 6 enforced their mortgage. Defendants Nos. 1 to 6 have given us an explanation how they came to omit the plaintiffs. Indeed they go so far as to contend that they were entitled to omit them. We are unable to accept that argument. But, on the other hand, we think that the decree which grants the plaintiffs possession without any provision as to payment of what may be due under the mortgage to the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 cannot be supported. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send back the case to the Court of first instance in order that it may be there determined what, having regard to all the circumstances in the case, is a proper sum to be paid by the plaintiffs for the purpose of redeeming their share in the property in suit.

We think that the costs of the two appeals, that is, in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court must be borne by the plaintiffs, but the costs of the suit already incurred and the costs yet to be incurred are left to the discretion of the Judge by whom the case will be heard.

Decree set aside ; Case remanded.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the appellant against a judgment of the learned District Judge of Bhagalpur dated the 13th November 1914. The respondent in the present appeal presented for Probate to the learned Judge a document which, he alleged, was the last Will of one Woogra Mohan Thakur, the alleged Will bearing date the 10th May 1913. The deceased died on the 29th January 1914 childless, leaving the present appellant him surviving who is his widow. The respondent to the present appeal is one of the executors named in the Will, the other executor having renounced Probate thereof. The alleged Will had been deposited by the deceased with the Sub-Registrar of Assurances. It is not denied that the Will which is a holograph Will is, in fact, wholly in the handwriting of the deceased and it bears many of his signatures on the various pages thereof. The only question raised in this appeal is, whether the Will has been executed in the manner provided by section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, which section has been incorporated into the Hindu Wills Act. We have been given by Mr. Pugh, who appears for the appellant, many cases which turn on the Statute of the English Wills Act, 1837; but the requisites for a valid Will under the English Wills Act differ substantially from the provisions of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act. In express terms, section 9 of the English Wills Act requires that both the witnesses should be present at the same time and that they should both see the deceased execute the document as his Will. Section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, on the other hand, makes different provisions. It is provided by section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, first of all, that the testator shall sign or affix his mark to the Will or that the Will shall be signed by some other person in the presence of the testator and by his direction. The second requisite is that the signature or mark of the testator or the signature of the person signing for him shall be so placed that it shall appear that it was thereby intended to give effect to the writing as a Will; and thirdly, it is provided that the attestation should be made either on the testator signing the document in the presence of the two witnesses or acknowledging his signature; but it is expressly provided on the terms of the Act that it is not necessary that both the witnesses should be present at the same time. Substantially the third clause relating to attestation takes the law back to what it was the law as to attestation of Wills under the Statute of Frauds. It is not necessary for the witnesses to be present at one and the same time. Then what is the custom in India relating to Wills executed, at any rate, outside the Presidency towns by Indian testators? There cannot be the slightest doubt that, at any rate, in the Wills in the vernacular, the ordinary place for execution is the top of the document. The English system of executing the document at the foot does not obtain usually amongst Indians. Their custom is to execute the document at the top. Ordinarily the signature of the executant of a document appears at the top right-hand corner, and when he executes the document himself, and not by an attorney, is accustomed to write "by my own pen." That is the ordinary practice. Now, what do we find in the present case? The deceased Woogra Mohan Thakur was a man of wealth and he was also, to a certain extent, a man of education. He spent some years in England and he was acquainted with the English language. That is manifest from the fact that this holograph Will shows that the deceased knew English fairly well. He made former Wills and this Will that he deposited on the 10th May 1913 with the Sub-Registrar of Assurances is clearly written throughout by the testator, Woogra Mohan Thakur. The document itself is engrossed on foolscap papers in the manner in which an English document would be engrossed. The document consists of four pages, on each of which the signature of the deceased appears. At the top left-hand corner of the first page the signature is "W. M. Thakur. By my own pen." On the second page, it is signed "W. M. Thakur." On the third page also it is signed "W. M. Thakur." On the fourth and the last page at the end there appears the signature "Woogra Mohan Thakur, dated the 10th of May 1913 in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirteen only." Against the signature or alongside the signature of the testator on the margin of the first page, four persons are said to have attested the Will and on each of the other three pages there appear the signatures of two of the four persons whose names appear on the first page as the attesting witnesses. The only question is first of all, "which is the operative signature of the deceased"? I feel no doubt that the operative signature is on the first page, "W. M. Thakur. By my own pen." It seems to me clear that the signature of the testator placed there is the signature by which he intended to make the document an effective one. Then the next point is, "Has it been shown that these signatures on the margin of the first page of the persons who are alleged to be the witnesses were subscribed by at least two of these persons animo attestandi, namely, attesting the Will of the deceased"? One of the signatures that appears on each of the four sheets is the signature of the wife of the deceased. She says that these signatures were obtained from her on the ground that they related to some totally different transaction and that the deceased then wrote his Will on the blank sheets of paper on which she had affixed her signatures. There is no evidence to show that that story is true. But it is highly probable that the deceased wished to get the signature of his wife somehow or other to this Will, on the ground that the provisions made therein for the wife were extremely small having regard to the value of the estate. But there is other evidence on which, in my opinion, it cannot be doubted that this Will was properly executed by the deceased in the manner required by section 50 of the Indian Succession Act. The first witness on behalf of the plaintiff, the petitioner for Probate, is Balbhadra Thakur. He is a clerk. His evidence is that he having read the Will did, at the request of the deceased, affix his signature to all the pages as a witness. It seems to me obvious that he duly attested the Will. The next witness is Surja Prosad. He is the Government Pleader of Bhagalpur. He is a man of position and his statement is that, on the morning of the 10th May 1913 before going to the Registration Office, the deceased brought the Will to him, that he read it and suggested that the deceased ought to make more a liberal provision for his wife but that the deceased refusing to do so, he subscribed his name to the Will as an attesting witness. The last witness is Harendra

Krishna Bagchi. He is also a Pleader. He was consulted by the deceased with reference to the Will before its execution. He says that he suggested alterations, by way of making a further provision for the wife, but that the deceased declined to listen to those suggestions. The Will was brought to him also on the morning of the 10th of May 1913 and the testator having acknowledged his signature, Harendra Krishna attested the Will as an attesting witness. It seems to me that that amply satisfies the provisions of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act. The view put forward by the learned Counsel who appears for the appellant that some other course is required than what has been adopted in this case seems to me to be open to doubt on the wording of section 50. One has not got to comply with the provisions of the third part of section 50 down to the semicolon and then having done that start afresh from the semicolon. That has been decided in the case of Mukta Nath Roy Chowdhuri v. Jitendra Nath Roy Chowdhuri (1). On the wording of the section it seems to be amply clear that that is not what is required, I think, whatever be the view we may take as to how the signature of the wife was obtained, there cannot be any doubt on the clear evidence—evidence that cannot be doubted—that the deceased did acknowledge this document as his last Will in the presence of those persons whose names appear in the margin of the first page of the document purporting to be his Will, and that they then at his request subscribed their names as witnesses to the fact of the Will. That is amply sufficient to satisfiy the terms of the section 50. The fact that the deceased took the document and deposited it himself with the Sub-Registrar of Assurances, having endorsed on the cover that it contained his Will bearing date the 10th May 1913, also seems to me to show that the deceased had taken considerable care that his Will was in due order. I think the learned Judge on the evidence in this case came to the only conclusion that was possible, namely, that the deceased did, in fact, execute this Will in manner required by section 50 of the Indian Succession Act. That is the only issue involved in the case. That being so, I am of opinion that we should dismiss the present appeal and direct the appellant to pay to the respondent his costs of this Court. We assess the hearing fee at one thousand rupees.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for redemption of a mortgage by way of conditional sale. The mortgage was granted on the 14th October 1889 by the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs to a lady named Anandamoyee, now represented by the defendants. The mortgagee entered into possession under the terms of the contract, which entitles her to apply the profits partly in payment of the dues of the superior landlord and partly in satisfaction of the interest on the mortgage. The mortgage-deed further provided that the mortgagor would be entitled to redeem the security on payment of the principal sum of Rs. 65 at any time. The present suit was commenced on the 25th June 1910. The defendants have successfully resisted the claim of the plaintiffs, on the ground that the mortgagor had no right in the property mortgaged by her. In our opinion, it was not competent to the defendants to urge that the mortgagor had no title to the property given by way of security, and the view taken by the Courts below is erroneous.

There is no room for controversy that a mortgagee cannot be permitted to resist a claim for redemption on the ground that the mortgagor had no title to the property included in the mortgage. Cottenham, L. C., enunciated this principle in Tasker v. Small (1) in these terms: "A mortgagee can never refuse to restore to his mortgagor, or those who claim under him, upon repayment of what is due upon the mortgage, the estate which became vested in him as mortgagee. To him it is immaterial, upon repayment of the money, whether the mortgagor's title was good or bad. He is not at liberty to dispute it, any more than a tenant is at liberty to dispute his landlord's title". The Lord Chancellor reiterated the same principle in Wroe v. Clayton (2) affirming the decision in Wroe v. Clayton (3): "The mortgagee after admitting the title of the mortgagor, by taking the mortgage, was precluded from raising any objection to the mortgagor's right of redemption on the ground that his title was defective," Roberts v. Clayton (4). The principle has been applied in this country in the case of Mahomed Abdool Ruzzak v. Sadik Ali (5). It cannot be disputed, however, that the mortgagee may establish that the title of the mortgagor has expired since the creation of the mortgage, in other words, that the equity of redemption is no longer vested in him so as to entitle him to redeem the mortgage. This is illustrated by the cases of Nakchedi Bhagat v. Nakchedi Misr (6) and Ammu v. Ramakishna (7). Consequently in the case before us, it was not open to the representatives of the mortgagee to prove that the mortgagor had lost all right to the holding, the subject-matter of the mortgage transaction, by abandonment before the mortgage was granted. It has been found that on the 11th June 1877 a kabulyat was executed, on behalf of the mortgagor and her co-sharers, by Rameswar in favour of the superior landlord, and that after Rameswar had left the village, the landlord made a settlement with Durga Charan on the 22nd June 1883. It is plain that Durga Charan has disappeared from the scene, but under what circumstances, has not been explained in this case. The fact is incontestable that on the 14th October 1889, when the mortgage in suit was executed, the mortgagor was in possession and transferred possession of the mortgaged property to her mortgagee. It is consequently not open to the mortgagee to prove that at the commencement of the mortgage transaction under which she obtained possession of the premises, the mortgagor had no title to the property, though it is open to her to show that the title of the mortgagor has terminated since the creation of the mortgage. This has not been established. All that has been proved is that on the 4th May 1895 the mortgagee, while in possession as mortgagee, attorned to the superior landlord in derogation of the rights of her mortgagor. This clearly cannot, on the principle explained in Rakestraw v. Brewer (8), affect the title of the mortgagor as between the mortgagor and mortgagee. We are not here concerned with the rights of the landlord who is not a party to this litigation, but as between the mortgagor and mortgagee, it is plain that the attornment by the latter to the superior landlord cannot, in any way, prejudice the rights of the former.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside and the suit decreed with costs in all the Courts. A redemption decree will be drawn up in accordance with rule 7 of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure and the plaintiffs will be allowed three months from the date when the decree is actually drawn up to deposit in this Court the amount due.

Principal and agent—Kabuliat hypothecating property for defalcation executed by agent—Dismissal of agent—Re-appointment, defalcation after—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 89, applicability of.

In a suit for accounts by the principal against his agent, a kabuliat was executed in 1305 B. The agent was dismissed in 1306 but he was re-appointed in 1307:

Held, that his position in 1307 was not governed by the kabuliat of 1305 but that by the ordinary rules applicable between the principal and the agent, and that Article 89, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act, applied to the suit. [p. 748, col. 2; p. 749 col. 1.]

Babu Abinas Chandra Guha, for the Appellant.

Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts for a certain period against an agent. Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, evidently under Article 89 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act. It is contended before us that the lower Courts are wrong and that Article 132 and not Article 89 is applicable to the case. It is true that the kabuliat of the agent hypothecated cert in immoveable property which would be answerable for any defalcation made by him or any damages suffered by the principal through his negligence, and there is conflict of authorities with regard to the applicability of Article 89 to a suit of this kind in such a case. In the case of Hafezuddin Mondal v. Jadu Nath Saha (1), it was held that in a case where there is a hypothecation bond of this kind, Article 132 is the right Article to be applied. In the subsequent case of Jogesh Chandra alias Dhalu Ghose v. Benode Lal Roy Choudhry (2), it was held that in a similar case, Article 116 was the right Article to be applied. That question, however, does not seem to arise in this case. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the appointment of defendant No. 1 ceased in 1306 and that he was re-appointed in 1307 after his dismissal in 1306. The terms of the kabuliat of 1305 were binding on him in the sense that if any defalcation had been made during this period, recourse might be had to the hypothecated property in due course of law. In the present case the alleged defalcation and the default were made in 1307 and 1308, that is after the defendant No. 1 had been dismissed in 1306 and re-appointed in 1307. His position in 1307 was, therefore, not governed by the kabuliat of 1305 but by the ordinary rules applicable between the principal and the agent. Article 89 was, therefore, the right Article to be applied and the lower Courts are right.

It is true there is a claim for the papers of 1305, and there is a dispute as to whether the claim as to that is barred by limitation or not. The first Court with regard to the papers says, "There is absolutely no evidence on the plaintiff's side that these papers were not submitted", and the lower Appellate Court says that the reasons given by the learned Munsif are very convincing. This we take as a confirmation of the view of the Munsif with regard to the papers.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Held, that there being no legal necessity for the sale, the son could contest the alienation and that though the powers of a Hindu father as manager of a joint family were extensive, they did not extend to the alienation of joint ancestral family property otherwise than for legal necessity and that it was doubtful whether consent could rightly be inferred from mere attestation in the absence of other evidence. [p. 750, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 16th March 1914.

FACTS of the case fully appear from the judgment.

Mr. Jawa'ir Lal Nehru (with him Mr. Shyam Nath Mushran), for the Appellants:—All the adult members of the family being parties to the transaction, the suit should have been decreed. The father had executed the sale-deed and the elder brother had consented to it. I rely on Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (1), Mohabeer Pershad v Ramyad Singh (2).

Mr. Parmeshor Dayal (with him Mr. Iswar Saran), for the Respondent:—The elder brother had not consented to the transaction. He had merely attested the sale-deed and mere attestation could not amount to an expression of consent.

No legal necessity having been proved in this case, the suit was rightly dismissed. I rely on Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (3).

If any portion of the consideration be found for legal necessity, that much could be allowed. I rely on Deputy Commissioner of Kheri representing the Court of Wards v. Khanjan Singh (4).

The appellants having appealed to the lower Appellate Court and not having made Gajadhara party, they cannot make him a party in second appeal. I rely on Niaz-ud-Din v. Abdul Aziz (5).

Mr. Shyam Nath Mushran, in reply:—The question of legal necessity arises when the alienation is by a co-parcener.

Here the father is the man who has alienated. A father represents the family and his alienation must be binding on all.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by a Hindu son to contest an alienation made by his father during the minority of the plaintiff. It appears that there was a joint family consisting of Ganesh Prasad and his two sons, Gajadhar Prasad and Ram Khelawan. On 30th June 1905 Gajadhar Prasad being at the time a major and Ram Khelawan a minor their father, Ganesh Prasad, executed a deed of sale purporting to convey a 6-pies share in certain zemindari property to Musammat Ram Kali, the predecessor-in-title of the defendants-appellants. The share thus conveyed was part of the ancestral property of the joint undivided family consisting of Ganesh Prasad and his two sons. The deed of sale was signed by Gajadhar Prasad as an attesting witness. The latter did not, however, join in executing the deed, which is and purports to be a conveyance by Ganesh Prasad alone. Both the Courts below have held that the plaintiff, Ram Khelawan, is entitled to contest the alienation, the finding being that there was no legal necessity for the sale. In second appeal to this Court it is contended that this was an alienation by a manager of a joint Hindu family acting as such and that all the members of the family are bound by the sale. The powers of a Hindu father as manager of a joint family are extensive; but they do not extend to the alienation of joint ancestral family property otherwise than for legal necessity. Those cases of this Court in which it has been held that in certain suits the whole of the joint Hindu family may be effectively represented by the karta or manager of the same have no bearing on the point now in question and in no way affect the correctness of the principle above stated.

In the second place, the appellants ask the Court to treat the sale in question as an alienation by all the adult members of the joint family and, therefore, binding upon the plaintiff, Ram Khelawan, who was at the time a minor member of the said family. To this it is a sufficient answer that the alienation purports to be by Ganesh Prasad alone, that Gajadhar Prasad does not join in making the same and that his mere attestation of the sale-deed can have no effect upon the plaintiff's rights. A further plea has been added to the effect that the sale should not have been set aside without a declaration that the purchase-money is binding as a charge on the share of Gajadhar Prasad whose attestation of the sale-deed makes him, it is contended, a consenting party to the sale. I should have been inclined to doubt, if I had to determine this question as against Gajadhar Prasad, whether consent could rightly be inferred from mere attestation in the absence of the evidence; but the question does not arise, in view of the fact that the defendants-appellants have not made Gajadhar Prasad a party to this appeal. The plaintiff, Ram Khelawan, very properly impleaded Gajadhar Prasad along with the successors-in-title of the vendee. When the suit had been decreed by the Court of first instance and the vendees' successors carried the matter in appeal to the District Judge, they did not make Gajadhar Prasad a party to their appeal. What they really contended for in the lower Appellate Court was a finding that there was legal necessity for the transfer, in that the consideration had gone towards paying off antecedent debts incurred by the vendor, Ganesh Prasad. If this could have been established the plaintiff could, of course, have been bound by the alienation. The finding of both the Courts below has been in favour of the plaintiff on this point. I do not find any force in the legal pleas now taken before this Court and I dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Muhammadan Law — Betrothal contract — Girl breaking betrothal on attaining majority—Non-liability of her guardian for damages.

A Muhammadan girl, after attaining the age of majority, is at perfect liberty to marry any man she likes; and if she then breaks her betrothal contract made by any of her guardians during her minority, neither the guardian nor his representative-in-interest is liable for any damage on account of the breach. [p. 751, col. 1.]

Lala Rama Nand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Badruddin Kureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Divisional Judge has granted the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 100 as damages for the breach of the betrothal contract. He has found that the betrothal between the plaintiff and Musammat Umri was effected by the latter's parents since deceased and that the defendant, Ghulam, who died during the pendency of the suit, as grandfather of the girl was her lawful guardian and, therefore, responsible for marrying her to the plaintiff. As he did not carry out contract, the lower Appellate Court has made his son and representative, Imam Din, liable for damages for the breach of the contract. This finding is based upon the proposition of law laid down in two judgments of this Court, reported as Musammat Golabi v. Santa (1), Gandu v. Ishar Das (2), but it will be observed that in both those cases the girl was minor at the time of the marriage.

In the present case it is clear from the allegations in the plaint and other evidence on the record that Musammat Umri had attained the age of majority on the 25th June of 1913, when her marraige with her cousin, the son of the defendant, Imam Din, was solemnized. It is manifest that neither Ghulam nor Imam Din, nor anybody else could be her guardian for marriage and she was at perfect liberty to marry any person she liked. Under these circumstances there is no doubt that the defendant neither entered into the contract of betrothal nor committed a breach thereof. This aspect of the case has been overlooked by the lower Appellate Court, and it seems to me clear that the defendant-appellant cannot be legally held liable for any damages. The result is that I accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, dismiss the suit of the plaintiff with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

The defendant sold certain mortgaged lands to the plaintiff under the impression that the mortgagor would not redeem it, and covenanted that in the event of the plaintiff losing the plot by redemption at the instance of the mortgagor, he would transfer to the plaintiff an equal area out of his own proprietary holdings. The mortgagor sued for redemption and recovered possession of the land from the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued the defendant for possession of an equal area and in the alternative for damages:

Held, that the covenant to transfer other land in lieu of the mortgaged property did not amount to an alienation in præsenti, but constituted an agreement to transfer in future the property specified therein on the happening of a certain contingency. [p. 752, col. 1.]

Held, further, that as the plaintiff was precluded by the Punjab Alienation of Land Act since coming into force from obtaining the land in suit in pursuance of the contract, the agreement became void, but that they were entitled to compensation. [p. 752, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Multan, dated the 21st May 1912, affirming that of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 1st November 1911, decreeing the claim in part.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Badr-ud-din Kureshi, for Mr. Fazl-i-Elahi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case which are relevant to the point arising in this second appeal are simple and may be stated in a few words. By a registered deed, dated the 18th October 1879, the ancestors of the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 sold to the father of the plaintiffs, who are appellants in this Court, certain plots of land aggregating 87 bighas 15 marlas in area for Rs. 3,490. One of the plots, measuring 36 bighas 3 kanals and 17 marlas, was held by the vendors as mortgagees by way of conditional sale for a period of 35 years and it appears that they thought that the mortgagor would not redeem the land, and they consequently purported to transfer proprietary rights therein. At the same time a covenant was entered in the sale-deed providing that in the event of the vendee losing the plot by redemption at the instance of the mortgagor, the vendors would transfer to the vendee an equal area out of their proprietary holding. After the expiry of nearly 30 years from the date of the sale, the mortgagor's representative instituted a suit for redemption and recovered possession of the mortgaged land from the plaintiffs on the 29th August 1909. Having been thus deprived of a part of the land sold to them, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for possession of an equal area and in the alternative for the recovery of Rs. 3,000 by way of damages. The Courts below have dismissed the suit qua the land but have awarded Rs. 450 by way of damages. The plaintiffs have preferred to this Court a second appeal and after hearing Counsel on both sides, we are of opinion that the amount of damages decreed by the lower Courts is inadequate and must be enhanced.

Now it is quite clear that in the absence of the restrictions imposed by the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, the stipulation in the deed, which forms the basis of the present suit and which is otherwise valid in law, would have been enforcible. But section 3 of the aforesaid Act prohibits a permanent alienation of agricultural land by a member of an agricultural tribe to a person who is neither a member of the same tribe nor a member of a tribe in the same group unless the alienation is sanctioned by the Deputy Commissioner. The question then arises whether the deed of 1879 effected an alienation of the land in dispute. On that point we have no hesitation in holding that the covenant to transfer other land in lieu of the mortgaged property did not amount to an alienation in præsenti, but constituted an agreement to transfer in future the property specified therein on the happening of a certain contingency. This contingency occurred in 1909 and it was then that the right to enforce the agreement accrued to the plaintiffs. But the Alienation of Land Act had then come into force and the agreement could not be enforced and consequently became void, vide section 2, clause (g), of the Indian Contract Act.

The plaintiffs are accordingly precluded by a law from obtaining the land in suit in pursuance of the contract but they are, we think, entitled to compensation. The Courts below have awarded Rs. 450, the money deposited by the mortgagor on redemption, as compensation to the plaintiffs. This award is, in our opinion, based upon an erroneous view of the obligations of the defendants. It is tantamount to a finding that the vendee purchased, not the proprietary rights, but only the rights of the mortgagees in the land, which in the face of the special stipulation referred to above is wholly untenable. Now the rule contained in section 65 of the Indian Contract Act is to effect that the person who has received any advantage under an agreement which becomes void is bound to restore it or make compensation for it. The measure of compensation in the case is the price which the defendants' ancestors received for 36 bighas 3 kanals and 17 marlas, and in the absence of anything showing difference in the qualities of the different parcels of land we must presume that they are of the same quality. The proportionate price amounts to Rs. 1,480 in round figures and we assess that sum as the proper compensation awardable to the plaintiffs.

For the reasons specified above we accept the appeal to this extent that in modification of the decrees of the lower Courts, we grant the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 1,480 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the institution of the suit to the date of realisation. We note that Rs 450 are already in deposit in Court and the plaintiffs may, if so advised, recover that money in part satisfaction of their decree. As to costs we direct that the defendants pay one-half of the costs incurred by the plaintiffs in all the Courts.

Appeal partly accepted.

Babus Mahendra Nath Ray, Biraj Mohan Mojumdar, Manmatha Nath Mukerjee and Satindra Nath Mukerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the third defendant in a suit for partition of joint property. The predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff purchased shares in the properties in suit in execution of a decree on the basis of two mortgages granted in his favour on the 5th April 1888 and the 24th June 1896. The mortgages were executed by one Sobhnath Singh, the head of a joint Mitakshara family, and his four adult sons. The mortgagee sued on the 13th January 1903 to enforce his security. At that time, Sobhnath Singh as also two of his sons were dead. The mortgagee joined as defendants the two surviving sons and also brought on the record the infant sons of the mortgagors in so far as their existence was known to him. A decree was made in due course and the mortgaged properties were sold in execution. In answer to the present claim, it has been urged by the third defendant, who is a grandson of Sobhnath Singh, that as he was not joined as a party to the mortgage suit, his right of redemption has not been affected and that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for partition. The Subordinate Judge has overruled this contention. He has found that the mortgagee was not aware of the existence of the third defendant who, if his case be true, was at the time an infant nine months old; and he has held that the decree made against the representatives of the family was operative against the third defendant and vested in the purchaser his interest in the property.

In the present appeal by the third defendant, it has been argued that the Subordinate Judge should have held on the evidence that the mortgagee was aware of his existence and yet deliberately omitted to join him as a party to the mortgage suit. This contention is clearly unfounded, and we see no reason to disagree with the Subordinate Judge in his estimate of the evidence on this point. It is worthy of note that the mortgagee joined as parties defendants to the mortgage suit other infants, sons of some of the mortgagors and grandsons of Sobhnath Singh. It is inconceivable that if the mortgagee was aware of the existence of the third defendant, he should omit to join him as a party defendant. We must, therefore, hold in concurrence with the Subordinate Judge that the mortgagee was not aware of the existence of the third defendant when he instituted the mortgage suit. Consequently no question arises as to the applicability of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act. In these circumstances, the principle laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Sheo Shankar Ram v. Musammat Jaddo Kunwar (1), which affirmed the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Jaddo Kuar v. Sheo Shanker Ram (2), applies. It has been argued, however, on behalf of the appellant that this view is contrary to the decision of this Court in the case of Lala Suraj Prosad v Golab Chand (3). In our opinion, in cases where the doctrine of representation is properly applicable to the facts and where it is established that the mortgagee was not aware of the existence of a member of a joint Mitakshara family as interested in the equity of redemption and consequently did not bring him before the Court in the mortgage suit, the principle laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Sheo Shankar Ram v. Musammat Jaddo Kunwar (1) must be applied in preference to that adopted in Lala Suraj Prosad v. Golab Chand (3). In the present case there can be no doubt that the interest of the present defendant was sufficiently represented by the persons who were joined as parties to the mortgage suit, namely, his father and his uncles. We are accordingly of opinion that the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that he has no defence to the suit.

Probate—Partial revocation, when allowable—Co-executor appropriating large portion of sale-proceeds of property—Liquidation of testator's debts—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 50.

The fact that a co-executor appropriated as legatee the whole or major portion of the sale-proceeds of a part of the estate before liquidating the testator's debts as provided in the Will is not sufficient to a partial revocation of the Probate as regards one of the executors, where the remaining assets far exceed the liabilities and particularly where none of the creditors has come forward to object to the acts of the said co-executor. [p. 754, col. 2; p. 755, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous petition in the goods of Sardar Amrik Singh of Gujranwala under section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, V of 1881.

Mr. B. Beran Petman and Lala Rama Nand, for the Petitioner.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain and Sheikh Umar Bakhsh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—By order of this Court, dated the 26th February 1912, Probate of the Will of the late Sardar Amrik Singh of Gujranwala, dated the 1st September 1911, was granted to Messrs. Harkishen Lal and Ganpat Rai, Barristers-at-Law, Lahore, who are two out of the three executors named in the Will. By a subsequent order, dated the 2nd December 1912, the third executor, Sardar Ishwar Singh, was also included in the grant as one entitled to the grant of Probate jointly with the other two executors.

The said third executor, Sardar Ishwar Singh, has filed two applications in this Court, one dated 29th October 1914, and the other dated 7th December 1914, in which he alleges certain facts which, according to him, show that his co-executor Mr. Harkishen Lal is not administering the estate of the deceased in a proper manner according to the provisions of Act V of 1881. One of the matters complained of is that Mr. Harkishen Lal has sold certain agricultural land situate in Chak No. 51, Gujranwala District, for Rs. 80,155 and has not paid the sale-proceeds towards the liquidation of the debts of the deceased testator. According to the applicant, the debts due by the estate to the People's Bank, Lahore, on the 30th September 1913, amounted to Rs. 2,50,861 and besides this amount the Liquidators of the said Bank have made a demand against the estate for payment of Rs. 32,000 on account of shares. The applicant's Counsel urges that the debts due to the People's Bank should be paid before Mr. Harkishen Lal appropriates any portion of the sale-proceeds of the property which he can claim as a legatee under the provisions of the Will. The learned Counsel further says that the amount of the debts due by the estate is so large that the estate is hardly sufficient to meet them. The last allegation is not borne out by the papers before me. The schedules of the assets and the liabilities annexed to the application for Probate, dated the 22nd January 1912, show that the assets exceeded the liabilities by about Rs. 2,61,241. It is also noteworthy that whereas in the schedule of assets the value of the land, Chak No. 51, which has now been sold by Mr. Harkishen Lal, was put down as Rs. 56,000, the price for which the Chak is stated to have been sold is Rs. 80,155. This shows that at any rate a large part of the estate left by the testator, which consists of agricultural land, is probably worth more than the amount shown in the schedule as its probable value at the date of application. It would thus appear that there is no possibility of the estate ultimately proving insufficient for the liquidation of the debts of the testator.

The third clause of the Will shows that Mr. Harkishen Lal is one of the creditors of the estate, and I find from a statement on the record, dated the 3rd January 1914, which sets forth the state of accounts between the deceased testator and Mr. Harkishen Lal, that the amount due to the latter on the 30th June 1913 was Rs. 48,705. No doubt the correctness of this account is not admitted by the applicant, but that is a matter which has to be settled separately between the co-executors. Besides the said amount, it is admitted before me that Mr. Harkishen Lal has paid upwards of Rs. 17,000 towards the debts of the testator; and Pandit Sheo Narain, who appears for Mr. Harkishen Lal, gives an assurance that his client is exerting his utmost to secure the best terms from intending purchasers of portions of the estate and to pay off the debts due to the creditors. The learned Advocate says that the Liquidators of the People's Bank have no objection to the manner in which Mr. Harkishen Lal is administering the estate; and it is worthy of note that the Liquidators have made no complaint to this Court against Mr. Harkishen Lal for his not having paid the sale-proceeds of Chak No. 55 towards the debts due by the testator to the Bank. By clause 11 of the Will, Chak No. 51 in Tahsil Khangah Dogran and Chak No. 236 in Tahsil Lyalpur were declared to be the property of Mr. Harkishen Lal, and he was empowered to take proprietary possession of the two chaks and to make good out of his own pocket any deficiency that may occur in the event of the rest of the estate proving insufficient for the liquidation of the People's Bank, to whom by far the largest amount of debts is due. As the Liquidators of the Bank have made no objection to the manner in which Mr. Harkishen Lal is administering the estate, it is reasonable to infer that there is no apprehension of the rest of the estate being found insufficient for the liquidation of the debts due to creditors. It seems that, for certain reasons best known to himself, the applicant is not pulling on well with other executors. This is much to be regretted as the estate must be administered by the executors, all of whom are legatees under the Will, to the best advantage of the estate and of themselves.

The prayer that Mr. Harkishen Lal is unfit to remain as an executor and that the grant of Probate to him be revoked was not seriously pressed, and it could not well be pressed, for assuming that a partial revocation of the grant as regards one of the executors is permissible, the acts attributed to Mr. Harkishen Lal are, in my opinion, not such that he can be held to have administered the estate in an improper manner. I dismiss both the applications with costs.

Applications dismissed.

Execution of decree for partition of property based on award—One of the properties mortgaged by one of the parties to the decree—Separate suit to determine liability on mortgage, maintainability of.

Where an award and the decree based thereon for partition of immoveable property make no mention of the encumbrance created thereon by one of the parties who are father and sons and where the mortgagees are no party to the proceeding, the executing Court is not competent to decide in execution of the decree, the respective liabilities of the parties as regards the mortgage. Such a question is a fit subject for a regular civil suit to be brought by the aggrieved party. [p. 756, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 23rd January 1914, ordering the house in dispute to be divided in accordance with the terms of the decree.

Lala Hukam Chand, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., Messrs Beechey, Nihal Chand Mehra and Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an order passed in execution proceedings by the lower Court. The appellant, under a decree issued in accordance with an arbitrator's award, was entitled to a 1/6th share of the house in dispute.

The aforesaid house was, however, subject to an encumbrance created by the appellant in favour of the Co-operative Bank, Lahore, and the appellant in his application for execution asks for possession of his 1/6th share free of encumbrance, on the ground that he has deposited his share of the mortgage-debt with the creditor Bank.

The lower Court came to no clear decision on the point whether the encumbrance was a burden on all the co-sharers in the property, though it expressed an opinion that it should be so regarded.

However, it refused to define the responsibility of each co-sharer, for the Bank was no party to the proceeding and it contented itself with ordering that appellant should be placed in possession of his one-sixth share.

The decree-holder has appealed to this Court; he accepted the lower Court's view that he is liable in respect of only 1/6th of the mortgage-debt and he prays that in this execution an account of the Bank's claim shall be taken, the appellant's present liability be determined and his share in the house be handed over to him free of the mortgage. In other words, in this execution to which the Bank is not a party, he wishes to redeem a portion of the property, to get possession of that portion, and to secure a declaration of non-liability in respect of the remaining 5/6ths.

I hold that in execution of the decree, the question of liability on the mortgage which is not mentioned either in the award or in the decree, does not arise.

The only matter before the lower Court was the placing of appellant in possession of his 1/6th share. To that the judgment-debtors-respondents offered no resistance, though they demurred, as they were entitled to do, to the decision in execution proceedings of their liability on a mortgage which they absolutely repudiated.

The respondents in cross-objections have objected to the lower Court's expression of opinion that they were liable for 5/6ths of the mortgage-debt and I uphold their objection. The lower Court, I hold, has arrived at the correct conclusion, viz., that appellant is entitled to nothing more than possession of his decreed share and that the determination of the several liabilities of the party for the mortgage-debt must be decided by separate suit.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Burmese Buddhist Law—Inheritance—Orasa child.

Under the Burmese Buddhist Law a daughter no less than a son may be an orasa child but there cannot be an orasa daughter as well as an orasa son in the same family. An orasa daughter's position is merely presumptive and is liable to be displaced by an orasa son of competent age. [p. 757, col. 1.]

Mr. Ginvalla, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, J.—The parties are related to one another as shown in the following table:—

U THET=MA BWIN

Ma Shwe Ein,	Po Hman=Ma Ngwe Bwin, defendants.
Maung Tin (adoptive son), plaintiff.

U Thet died about 1906. His wife, Ma Bwin, died about three years earlier. Ma Shwe Ein their eldest child, died about 1899 leaving an adoptive son, the plaintiff, Maung Tin. Po Hman, the only son of U Thet and Ma Bwin, was about 24 years old when his father died and about 17 years old when his sister, Ma Shwe Ein died.

The lower Courts have directed that Maung Tin is to share the estate of U Thet and Ma Bwin equally with his uncle Po Hman, on the ground that Ma Shwe Ein was an orasa child and that Maung Tin is, therefore, entitled under the texts cited in section 163 of the Kinwun Mingyi's Digest to a share equal to that of his mother's youngest sister. It is true as remarked by the Divisional Judge that a daughter no less than a son may be an orasa child. But the learned Judge did not sufficiently consider how her position was affected by the existence of a brother who was nearly grown-up at the time of her death and who survived both the parents.

The facts in this case resemble those of a case decided by this Court in 1912, Po Zan v.

Maung Nyo(1). It was then held that when there is or has been an orasa son the texts giving the eldest daughter's children especial treatment at the time of partition do not apply. This is in accordance with the decision in Ma Saw Ngwe v. Ma Thein Zin(2), that there cannot be more than one orasa child in the same family. For example, there is no authority for treating one son as the orasa entitled to claim a fourth share on the death of the father and in the same family allowing the children of an elder son or daughter, who predeceased the parents, special treatment at the time of ultimate partition. Nor can it be held that the children of an eldest son or daughter who predeceased the parents are entitled to a preferential share, except when such eldest son or daughter at the time of his or her death was the orasa child, i. e., had attained the complete status of orasa. The texts cited in Po Zan v. Maung Nyo (1) are sufficient to show that even if the plaintiff Maung Tin's adoptive mother, Ma Shwe Ein, was an adult when her brother Po Hman was born, her status as orasa child was merely presumptive and that when Po Hman reached a competent age he displaced her as orasa. There can be no doubt that Po Hman, who was 24 years old when his father died and who was the only son born to U Thet and Ma Bwin, was the orasa son and for reasons given in Po Zan v. Maung Nyo (1) there cannot be an orasa daughter as well as an orasa son in the same family.

The decree of the lower Courts should, in my opinion, be set aside and instead the plaintiff as an out of time grandchild should be awarded a decree for an eighth share of the property specified in the decree of the District Court. It is agreed that the case is one in which the estate should bear the costs of litigation, that is to say, the defendants should give to the plaintiff his full one-eighth share less one-eighth of his costs in all Courts.

ORMOND, J.—I concur.

Mortgage, suit on—Money-decree—Purchase by prior mortgagee—Subsequent mortgage by heir—Suit for sale by subsequent mortgagee—Suit for declaration that house was not saleable by prior mortgagee, maintainability of.

A creditor of a deceased Muhammadan cannot follow his estate into the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value to whom it has been alienated by an heir-at-law, whether the alienation had been by an absolute sale or by a mortgage. [p. 758, col. 2.]

One A mortgaged a house to the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff. On A's death, his widow, J, mortgaged the same house to the defendant. The plaintiff brought a suit on his mortgage impleading the present defendant as a subsequent mortgagee, but he got only a simple money-decree in execution of which he put the house to sale and purchased it on 23rd June 1913. In the meantime the defendant had brought a suit upon his mortgage and obtained a decree for sale of the house on the 24th September 1912. The plaintiff then brought the present suit for a declaration that the house was not saleable in execution of the defendant's decree:

Held, that the plaintiff, by his auction purchase, acquired no title to the house which could override the rights of the defendant under his mortgage or under his decree. [p. 758, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge of Moradabad, dated 21st April 1913.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohan Lal Sandal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that one Imdad Ali mortgaged, in the year 1897, a house to a person whose heirs subsequently transferred their rights under the mortgage to the present plaintiff-appellant. Imdad Ali died and his widow, Musammat Iradatunnissa, in the year 1907, mortgaged the same house to the present defendant-respondent. The plaintiff brought a suit upon his mortgage impleading the present defendant as a subsequent mortgagee of the property in suit. For reasons which have not been made apparent, the Court gave the plaintiff a simple money-decree enforceable against the assets of Imdad Ali in the hands of any of the defendants. In execution of this decree the plaintiff attached the house in question, brought it to sale, and purchased it himself obtaining possession on June the 23rd, 1913. In the meantime the defendant had brought a suit upon his mortgage against Musammat Iradatunnissa, and on the 24th of September 1912 had obtained a decree for sale of a fractional share in the said house representing the share which came to Musammat Iradatunnissa by inheritance. The present suit was one for a declaration that the house in question is not liable to sale in execution of the defendant's decree. The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance; but on appeal the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the suit for a declaration was not maintainable and he dismissed it accordingly. Acting, however, on some admission made before him by the defendant he has given the plaintiff a simple money-decree for Rs. 50, which appears to be the amount of his decree without interest. The plaintiff appeals to this Court contending, in the first place, that the suit for a declaration should have been decreed and secondly, that if any money-decree was passed it should have included interest up to date. In so far as any argument has been addressed to me in support of the appeal based upon the fact that the defendant was a party to the plaintiff's suit upon his mortgage, I find no force in the contention. The suit as brought upon the mortgage of 1897 was dismissed. Whatever defence was set up in that case by the defendant Shib Charan it must have completely succeeded, for he was in no way affected by the decree actually passed. Even if by some oversight the simple money-decree was left to stand as a joint decree against all the defendants, the fact that it is recoverable only out of the assets of Imdad Ali in the hands of such defendants would in itself free Shib Charan from all liability thereunder. The real contention pressed on behalf of the appellant is that the debt due to the plaintiff as a creditor of Imdad Ali must have priority over the debt due to the defendant Shib Charan as a creditor of one of Imdad Ali's heirs. In support of this contention I have been referred to certain general principles laid down in Wilson's Digest of Muhammadan Law and also to the case of Bhola Nath v. Maqbul-un-nissa (1). The whole trend of the argument for the appellant overlooks the fact that Shib Charan's position is not merely that of a creditor of Musammat Iradatunnissa, but of a transferee of a portion of Imdad Ali's estate from one of his heirs. The general principle that a creditor of a deceased Muhammadan cannot follow his estate into the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value to whom it has been alienated by an heir-at-law, whether the alienation had been by an absolute sale or by a mortgage, was re-affirmed by the learned Judges of this Court who decided the case of Bhola Nath v. Maqbul-un-nissa (1) (Vide page 32 of the report). It is also laid down clearly in those passages of Mr. Saiyed Ameer Ali's book on Muhammadan Law which are referred to in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. In my opinion the plaintiff by his auction-purchase acquired no title to the house in question which could override the rights of the defendant Shib Charan under his mortgage of 1907 or under his decree of 1912. The house in question or rather Musammat Iradatunnissa's share in the same is liable to sale under the defendant's decree and no declaration to the contrary can be made. The plaintiff has obtained a money-decree in his favour which could not, in my opinion, have been passed except on the admission of the defendant. I presume it to have been validly passed, as it is not challenged by way of appeal or cross-objections on the part of the defendant but I certainly cannot add to it by allowing interest as contended for in the last plea in this memorandum of appeal. The result is that I dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Where in execution of a decree in a partition suit involving property of the value of rupees ten lakhs, the applicants disputed their liability to 4/6ths of an item of Rs. 11,709:

Held, that such a case did neither satisfy both the conditions set forth in the 1st clause of section 110 of Act V of 1908, nor did it fulfil the conditions mentioned in the second clause of that section, and that consequently permission to appeal therefrom to their Lordships of the Privy Council could not be granted. Petition, under Order XLV, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, for leave to appeal to his Majesty in Council against the judgment of the Chief Court dated the 2nd January 1913, passed in civil appeal noted above.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., and Kanwar Dalip Singh, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra and Lala Hukam Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against this Court's order, dated 2nd January 1913.

This Court's order does not affirm that of the Court below and the main point argued before me is whether the appealable value of the dispute to be submitted to their Lordships of the Privy Council is Rs. 10,000 and upwards, and if that question is answered in the negative whether the order involves directly or indirectly some question respecting a claim to property of that value.

The facts of the case are that the plaintiff-respondent was by decree entitled to 1/6th of a sum aggregating Rs. 97,857-12-7, the remaining 5/6ths being payable as to 4/6ths to the present applicants, sons of Narpat Rai plaintiff-respondent, and as to 1/6th to Daulat Ram, who in view of the fact that he took sides with the plaintiff was a formal defendant in the case.

Of this sum of Rs. 97,847-12-7, Rs 10,000 consisted of a Fixed Deposit Receipt, which plaintiff had hypothecated to one Mul Chand, and this Court's order decreed that the parties should each get 1/6th of Rs. 97,847-12-7 less Rs. 11,709-9-0, the amount paid to Mul Chand by the plaintiff.

The parties were at one as to the partition of Rs. 97,837-12-7, and the only dispute turned on the point whether the applicants' share of that sum was to be reduced by 4/6ths of 11,709-9-0 i. e., a sum less than Rs. 8,000. This Court's order then affected the applicants in a sum inferior to Rs. 8,000 and this is the value of the dispute which they desire to lay before their Lordships in Council. Consequently, I must hold that this case does not satisfy both the conditions set forth in the first clause of section 110 of the Code.

But it is urged that, in any case, the conditions of the second clause of that section are fulfilled. Further I am referred by the applicant to certain authorities which, it is claimed, establish the doctrine that the value of the whole original claim is the value to be considered in this connection.

They are—

Mulkah Do Alum Nowab Tajdar Bohoo v. Mirza Jehan Kudr (1), but leave in this case was granted on the ground among others that the value of the suit for fiscal purposes was less than its real value.

Bhugwat Sahay v. Rai Pashupati Nath Bose (2), claim for share of an estate.

Royal Insurance Co. v. Akhoy Coomar Dutt (3), not in point.

Nawab Moozhatoodowlah Abbas Hossian Khan v. Ishan Chandra Mukerjee (4). In this case it was held that the case involved a claim to an estate of over Rs. 30,000 in value.

The cases quoted all admit of differentiation from that now under consideration. This Court's order adjudicates merely on the applicants' liability to pay their pro rata share in a certain sum of money; I cannot see that directly or indirectly it involves any claim to or question respecting any other property. The applicants contend that there is a dispute between the parties in respect of a mortgage of a certain house and the ratio decidendi of this Court's order might be applied to and affect that dispute, but that litigation is still in gremio futuri and may never materialize, moreover this Court's final order refers in no way to the mortgage above mentioned. It was merely an order in execution proceedings touching only a part of the original decree.

(1) 10 M. I. A. 252; 2 W. R. (P. C.) 55; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 554; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 106; 19 E. R. 967.

(3) 6 C. W. N. 41.
(4) 1 C. W. N. lxxviii.

For these reasons I hold that leave to appeal cannot be granted and no case at all for a special certificate has been made out. The application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

In such a case section 44 of the Contract Act applies and the plaintiff's relinquishment of his claim against one does not involve a discharge of the other.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued two defendants on a joint and a several pro-note. On being examined by the Court preparatory to the framing of issues, the plaintiff stated that one of the defendants was a surety and that he relinquished his claim against the other as he was a man of straw. The learned Judge heard the case and dismissed the suit relying on Contract Act, section 134; holding that section 39 of the Negotiable Instruments Act did not apply. In my opinion the learned Judge should not have asked these questions and could not in his judgment rely on the answers. The judgment must be based on facts duly proved, Evidence Act, section 165. The parties had reduced their contract to a written document and under section 37, Negotiable Instruments Act, were principal debtors in the absence of a contract to the contrary. According to the note each promised to pay jointly or severally. It was on the note that the suit was brought and under section 92 of the Evidence Act it was impossible to travel outside it, C. P. Harek Chand Babu v. Bishun Chandra Banerjee (1). No evidence to contradict the note being admissible by virtue of Evidence Act, section 92, the learned Judge cannot base his judgment on such. In Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begam v. Ahmad Wali Khan (2) the decision, as is shown by a reference to the case which it followed, Mulchand v. Madho Ram (3), turned upon the fact that section 92 relates to suits between parties to instruments while the Court construed as meaning the opposing parties; while both the Allahabad cases were between co-parties and not adverse parties.

In the present case, however, this is not so and both defendants in accordance with the pro-note should be regarded as principal debtors. In such a case, section 44 of the Contract Act applies and saves plaintiff. The decree of the Small Cause Court must be set aside and the case remanded to be tried on its merits. Costs costs in the cause. The Court-fee paid by the applicant must be refunded under the Court Fees Act, section 13.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

Alienation—Custom—Mortgage of ancestral property—Necessity—Suit by after-born son—Other reversioner existing before not suing—Limitation—Strict proof of necessity, when not required—Legal necessity—Advances taken for defending a criminal case and for payment of revenue, if for legal necessity—Interest on just debt, whether necessity—Pleadings.

The validity of a mortgage screened by time from attack cannot be questioned by a reversioner on the ground that it has been merged into a subsequent mortgage or sale to challenge which the suit is within limitation. [p. 761, col. 2.]

When time once begins to run against a reversioner for contesting the validity of an alienation of ancestral property no subsequent disability to sue on the ground of minority of another reversioner can bar its flow. [p. 761, col. 2.]

In the absence of any clear proof of reckless extravagance or immoral waste on the part of the alienor of ancestral property, strict proof of necessity for ordinary debts is not required, particularly where the income of the estate does not appear to be quite sufficient to meet the family expenses and the alienor has sons or does not expect to be sonless. [p. 762, cols. 1 & 2.]

Interest on a just debt is also a necessity. So is the money due on account of produce where the mortgagor holds the land as a tenant of the mortgagee and enjoys the whole produce himself and allows the rent to mount up against him provided the validity of the mortgage cannot be questioned. [p. 762, col. 1.]

Payment of revenue is also an act of necessity. [p. 762, col. 2.]

Money spent on defending a criminal case can be validly charged on ancestral property. [p. 762, col. 2.]

A plea not raised in either of the Courts below cannot be entertained for the first time in further appeal to the Chief Court. [p. 761, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Ludhiana Division, dated the 21st December 1911, modifying that of the Munsif, first Class, Ludhiana, dated the 3rd July 1911, decreeing the claim.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The minor plaintiff sues for possession of his father's land, of which the defendant is in possession, and asserts that he is the mortgagee under the following deeds:—

	Rs.
Mortgage of 23rd March 1904 ...	2,180
Additional charge, deed, 23rd June 1906 ...	500
Total ...	2,680

The first Court decreed for the plaintiff on the condition that he should pay Rs. 1,228 to the defendant, and the Divisional Court merely enhanced the figure to Rs. 1,237-4-6.

In further appeal the first argument is that though at the time of the mortgage of 1904 one Sunder, a collateral, was alive the plaintiff could not maintain this suit, inasmuch as he was born after the execution of the 1904 mortgage-deed, unless he could show that the land alienated was ancestral to Sunder, and it was argued that this had not been definitely established.

This objection, however, must be overruled, for it was not taken in either of the Courts below; on the contrary the plaint alleged that the land was ancestral and the collaterals who were alive at the time had not ratified the alienation. Defendant's reply was that they had ratified it, thereby admitting that they were competent to challenge it. We cannot permit the plaintiff to be surprised on this point now.

The main elements of the mortgage-money of March 1904 are the following:—

(1) A mortgage by plaintiff's father Badna, dated 19th June 1897, for Rs. 500.

(2) A mortgage by plaintiff's uncle Basawa of the same date for Rs 500.

(3) Bond, dated 11th March 1904, for Rs. 974-12. As for the first two mortgages (of 1897) we must hold, adopting the principle laid down in Khiali Ram v. Gulab Khan (1) that they are screened by time from attack. Sunder could have attacked them within 12 years of 1897 and as time began to run against Sunder in 1897, it continued its flow against the plaintiff who derived no advantage from his minority Accordingly we hold that this sum of Rs. 1,000 must stand.

As for the item of Rs. 974-12 it has been rejected in toto by the Courts below, on the grounds that the bahi entries are unreliable, and many of the items are on account of interest; others are for litigation.

The appellant-defendant contends th t the bahi entries are genuine, that the indebtedness of plaintiff's father and uncle was gradual, that whatever allegations are now made against the character of plaintiff's father Badna, there are none against that of his uncle Wasawa, who had also mortgaged his land in 1897 and even earlier than that date, that most of the consideration for the bond of Rs. 974 consisted of interest and that Badna who h d altogether four sons had no reason to waste his estate.

Plaintiff-respondent has put in a cross-appeal in which he urges that neither necessity nor consideration for any of the mortgages is proved. His Counsel has in vain tried to distinguish Khiali Ram v. Gulab Khan (1) from the present case in any material point

He points to the oral evidence that Badna was at enmity with Sunder and threatened to waste his property in order to defeat Sunder's expectations.

To this evidence we attach little importance in view of the fact that Badna from time to time had four sons in whose interest he was likely to preserve his estate.

One son Arjan died only a few days before the mortgage in dispute and Badna had clearly no idea of dying without issue, for he married a second wife and by her had the pl intiff, who was born a day after his father's death.

It remains to consider the items which form the grand total of Rs. 974-12.

The dealings start in Sambat 1956=1899 with a bond for Rs. 198, now said to have been taken for bullocks. The remaining items consist almost entirely of interest on the account and interest on the mortgages of 1897. In 1902 come some items aggregating about Rs. 150 for a law suit and the rest consists of interest.

It appears in fact that after 1897 the defendant-appellant lent very little money to Badna, that Badna instead of paying rent for which as the mortgagee's tenant he was liable enjoyed the whole produce and allowed the rent to mount up against him. The mortgagee could not recover that rent without provoking a breach and that course he was not bound to adopt.

It is true that after the death of Wasawa in 1900-01 Badna had the whole estate to himself, but we have seen that even the unencumbered estate was insufficient to keep the brothers out of the hands of the money-lenders and judging by the land revenue assessed on the land, it is hard to believe that the brothers were ever in comfortable circumstances.

For these reasons we hold that there is no clear proof of reckless extravagance or of immoral waste on the part of Badna and the items representing rents and interest thereon must stand good.

Similarly the items advanced to him for his defence in the criminal case must be passed, as also those for payment of revenue, but cash advances for which no necessity is specified might well be rejected were they taken by Badna alone. But as the learned Divisional Judge shows, almost all the cash advances included in this bond of Rs. 974-12 were made to Badna and Wasawa jointly.

As for the second mortgage for Rs.500 of 23rd June 1906, we there see the same influences in operation. The main item of Rs. 312-12 is made up of numerous petty cash advances, swollen by interest of Rs. 100 for rent and of two minor items.

No doubt a good manager would have paid his rent out of produce, but the brothers evidently were not good managers; they enjoyed their estate and made no attempt to stem the rising tide of debt, but deliberate extravagance and waste are not established.

For these reasons we hold that no good cause has been shown for interfering with the mortgages. Accordingly we accept the defendant's appeal and set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit, but having regard to the fact that plaintiff is a minor and that defendant has made a very good thing out of his dealings with plaintiff's family we direct parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 27, 28—Legal Practitioner, fees recoverable by, from his own client—Suit for remuneration for work done—Discretion of trying Court not to be interfered with—"Costs of suit," meaning of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 84.

The Legal Practitioners Act does not impose any limitation upon the fees which are recoverable by practitioners from their own clients. [p. 763, col. 2.]

Section 27 of the Act refers only to the fee which is to be paid to the adversary Pleader. [p. 765, col. 1.]

Where the fees are not settled before hand, and the suit is one for remuneration for work done, the Court in assessing the amount, performs the functions of the Taxing Officer in England and when he assesses the remuneration at a certain amount, having regard to the local conditions and the nature and responsibility of the work done by the Pleader, an Appellate Court should be very slow to interfere with his discretion. [p. 763, col. 2: p. 764, col. 1.]

Such a suit is governed by Article 84, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908). The word "costs" in that Article is not confined to "out of pocket expenses alone" of the Practitioner but includes also the remuneration payable to him. [p. 763, col. 2; p. 765, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 21 of 1911.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellant

Messrs. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar and T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam in a suit brought by the plaintiff, D. V. Narasinga Rao, a Vakil, to recover remuneration for work done by him for the defendant, the Maharaja of Vizayanagaram, in connection with the suits questioning the defendant's right to the zemindari and also for other miscellaneous work about which there is no question in this appeal.

Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar for the defendant-appellant has questioned the amount awarded by the Subordinate Judge. Two legal objections were raised but not very seriously pressed. It was said that the plaintiff could not claim remuneration at a higher scale than is made payable by a party in respect of his adversary's Advocate, Pleader, Vakil or Attorney under the Legal Practitioners Act. Both on the language of the Act and on the decisions of this Court it seems to me impossible to contend that the Legal Practitioners Act imposes any limitation upon the fees which are recoverable by practitioners from their own clients. It is not alleged that there was any agreement such as is contemplated by section 28 of the Act between the plaintiff and the defendant: and in the absence of such an agreement the Court has to discharge what is the function of the Taxing Officer in suits in the English Courts and to decide what is a fair and reasonable remuneration for the work done.

Next, it was suggested that the suit was barred by limitation. The contention was that the case was not governed by Article 84 which relates to suits "by an Attorney or Vakil for his costs of a suit or a particular business, there being no express agreement as to the time when such costs are to be paid," and that the present claim could not be said to be a claim for costs of a suit, because it was said the expression 'costs of a suit' must be limited to out of pocket expenses incurred by the Practitioner. We do not think that there is any foundation for that contention. It must be taken, therefore, that the suit was not barred by limitation.

Now the plaintiff has undoubtedly recovered a very large amount by the decree of the Subordinate Judge; but it must be remembered at the same time that the suit was a very big one, one of the most important suits that have been tried in the Presidency for many years, and the plaintiff's services were spread over a period of about five years. Before going into this question I think that, following the practice of the English Courts as regards decisions of the Taxing Officer, we ought to be slow to interfere with the decision arrived at by the Subordinate Judge with his knowledge of local conditions and after a careful examination of all the circumstances of the case. The plaintiff was Standing Vakil to the estate and would appear to have played a very active, if not a leading, part in the earlier preparation of the cases: most of the work falling upon him being such as would fall upon an Attorney where one was engaged at the time.

On the 12th October 1906 the plaintiff presented a bill (Exhibit A) for 650 days' work from the beginning of the suit until the 3rd of October 1906. He had been to Calcutta and various parts of India in connection with the case and he claimed to be paid Rs. 50 a day for work outside the District and Rs. 30 a day for work done in the District and Mr. Elwin, a member of the Civil Service who was then managing the affairs of the Estate under a power-of-attorney from the Rajah, decided that Rs. 40 a day on the average seemed fair (Exhibit A1). Mr. Elwin has been called and has confirmed his opinion in the box. He says: "I thought that amount was reasonable, considering the amount of work done by plaintiff and the places such as Madras, Benares, Hyderabad and Calcutta at which he had worked. . . . . I thought that that was a reasonable sum to be paid to him. . . . . I took into my consideration the fact that the plaintiff had to work at such distant places as Benares, Calcutta, Madras, etc. I would not have allowed such a high rate had he not worked at such distant places. On receipt of the plaintiff's petition I ordered the Superintendent of the Law Branch to verify the correctness of the figures" as to the number of days. There is also other evidence as to the very varied and responsible character of the work which the plaintiff had to do in the earlier stages of the case and we are not prepared to differ from the Subordinate Judge in accepting the amount which Mr. Elwin, who was the responsible authority in charge of the Estate, allowed.

The plaintiff also claims under Exhibit F for 270 more days' work. It says: "For 225 days as mentioned in my bill dated 3rd September 1907 Rs. 9,000." Unfortunately the defendant has not been able to produce the bill which gives the particulars of those days; but the evidence is that the plaintiff worked very hard indeed and we see no reason to differ from the Subordinate Judge, who has accepted this figure. It has also to be observed that in the written statement the defendant did not question the number of days in respect of what the plaintiff claimed, except in so far as the claim was for 270 days instead of 263 days; and the difference of seven days is accounted for by the fact that the bill, Exhibit A, was only made up to the 3rd of October while the bill was signed on the 10th October and Mr. Elwin, therefore, appears to have regarded it curiously as being a bill for services rendered up to the 10th October, whereas it is only a bill for services rendered upto the 3rd October. But there is nothing in the defendant's written statement to suggest that the defendant questioned the fact that he had really put in 263 days' work after the period covered by Exhibit A. Mr. Srinavasa Aiyangar's argument proceeded on the basis that this part of the claim was only for days during which the hearing was going on; and he showed that he has claimed in this bill for some 68 days when there was no hearing. He said that there were 68 days' hearing prior to Exhibit A, and that only left 169 days of the hearing for Exhibit F; but the fallacy appears to consist in the assumption that the plaintiff was only claiming remuneration for days when the hearing was going on, whereas according to his evidence he was equally busy, perhaps more busy, on days when it was not. So far as the period not covered by the bill which is missing is concerned, he gives the dates in September, November and December 1907 and May 1908 for which he claimed remuneration. On the pleadings and the evidence we are not prepared to differ from the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that he was entitled to be remunerated for the number of days for which he claims.

There only remains the question whether the remuneration has been fixed on too high a scale; and as I have said, I think we ought to be slow to interfere in a matter of this kind with the conclusion which has been arrived at by the lower Court on a careful examination of all the facts of the case. We have an order, Exhibit D, passed by Mr. Elwin in May 1907 when the trial had been interrupted by the vacation, saying that the plaintiff was to be in charge of the suit work at Waltair and supervise the work of the Vakils. This shows the important part that he was considered to play in the case from the point of view of the client. From the point of view of the Counsel we have the evidence of Mr. (now Sir William) Garth, one of the leaders of the Calcutta Bar, who speaks to the important services rendered by the plaintiff in connection with the case. It was the plaintiff who first went to Calcutta to instruct Mr. Garth in the case and during the time when Mr. Garth was at Waltair when he was examining and cross-examining the witnesses, the plaintiff, he says, was constantly attending and instructing him. No doubt there were other Practitioners from Madras, both senior and junior, who played a more important part; but still I think upon the evidence there can be no doubt that the plaintiff did take a very active part. That is even admitted by some of the witnesses for the defence. One of them says that he worked so hard night and day that he ultimately knocked himself up and for two months was unable to attend to a case. Mr. Garth observes that the amount claimed in the bill would certainly not be said to be excessive in Bengal and that in a case like this an exceptionally high fee might naturally be looked for. In these circumstances I am not prepared to differ from the conclusion at which the lower Court has arrived; and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

TYABJI, J.—I agree and have very little to add. The first point taken by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar is that section 27 of the Legal Practitioners Act ought to be a guide in fixing the remuneration of the plaintiff in the suit. But that section refers to the fee which is to be paid to the adversary's Pleader, and that has no real bearing on the question we have to decide.

The next argument was that the suit is barred under the Limitation Act. The Subordinate Judge has held against this contention on the ground that Article 84 applies. As against this it is argued that the "costs of any particular business" to which the Article refers cannot include such costs as the plaintiff claims. This argument is quite untenable.

In assessing the costs the learned Judge has allowed a certain sum for each day on which the plaintiff worked. It was not suggested that this method is necessarily erroneous or was not open to the Judge; nor was any alteration (such as payment for each item of work done) suggested as possible in the circumstances of the present case.

The arguments of Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar were confined to the contentions that the lower Court allowed remuneration for too many days and at too high a rate for each day.

The learned Judge, it was argued, was wrong in proceeding on the basis that the Pleader had worked for 650 plus 270 days, and that he had worked really only for 650 plus 169 days. As to this the only objection taken in the defendant's written statement was that the plaintiff worked for seven days less than he claimed; and the argument of Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar, tending to show that the plaintiff worked for 101 days less than he claimed cannot be permitted at this stage. But in addition to that fact, the facts referred to by the learned Chief Justice are sufficient to show that the plaintiff did work for the total number of days alleged in the plaint.

Then as regards remuneration for each day's work that, of course, is in the discretion of the officer who has to decide upon the fees which Legal Practitioners are entitled to claim. The discretion has in the present case been exercised after a very careful consideration of all the evidence of the nature of the work done and of the qualifications of the plaintiff. The plaintiff did a great deal of work in preparing the suits in question for the hearing, and his remuneration ought to be fixed with reference to the magnitude of the subject-matter of the suits and the difficulties involved in the work that he did. The fees paid to the Counsel and other Pleaders engaged may well be taken into consideration. Bearing all this in mind it seems to me that for the reasons which have just been given and which I need not repeat, we may well accept the scale of Rs. 40 a day fixed by the Subordinate Judge.

I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, DELHI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Municipal Act (XX of 1891), s. 195—Building erected in contravention of sanction—Notice to demolish building—Injunction against Municipality—Right of Court to interfere.

The plaintiff sued for an injunction against the Municipality to restrain them from interfering with the chabutra erected by the plaintiff. The chabutra was admittedly constructed by the plaintiff in contravention of the sanction of the Municipality. It was argued for the plaintiff that the building as erected was in point of fact more advantageous to the public than would be the building as sanctioned. The contention was disallowed and the suit was dismissed:

Held, that no second appeal lay in the case and the Courts were not competent to entertain the contention of the plaintiff.

Second appeal from an order of the Additional Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 11th November 1913, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, second Class, Delhi, dated the 26th August 1913, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellant.

Mr. Santanam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing Mr. Gokal Chand Narang for the appellant and Mr. Santanam for the respondent in reply, I must accept the latter's contention that no appeal can be entertained in the present case. The Additional Judge in his order, dated the 11th November 1913, points out that the action of the Municipal Committee is very unreasonable and that the building as erected by plaintiff is in point of fact more advantageous to the public than would be the building as sanctioned. He, however, has been compelled to dismiss plaintiff's suit on the ground that it has been built in contravention of the sanction obtained by him. I agree with the learned Judge that the Courts have no power to interfere in a case of this kind. The plaintiff knew quite well what he was authorized to build and in erecting the chabutra, as it now stands, he deliberatly took the risk of the Committee taking action against him under section 195 of the Municipal Act, and if he has been put to any loss he has himself only to blame. I must accordingly dismiss the appeal but I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

I may, perhaps, venture before concluding to express the hope that some reasonable arrangement will be come to between the parties and that the Committee may see their way to establishing their rights without putting plaintiff to the very heavy loss which he would apparently suffer if compelled to pull down the building.

Appeal dismissed.

NANDA RAM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

*Custom—Succession—*Dakhna Aroras of Multan—Sons—Eldest son entitled to extra share—Partition suit—Value of suit—Value of share of plaintiff.

Among Dakhna Aroras of Multan there is a recognized custom as to giving of 1¼th share of ancestral immoveable property to the eldest son. [p. 767, col. 2.]

In a suit by a plaintiff for his share in joint family property the value of suit for purposes of jurisdiction is the value of the property claimed and not the value of the whole estate of which partition is prayed for. [p. 767, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 5th August 1912 decreeing the claim

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. M. Datta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—To make the very brief judgment of the lower Court intelligible various corrections of copyist's errors have to be made in the judgment as printed.

The pedigree of the Arora family concerned is as follows:—

KHILANDA RAM v. NANDA RAM.

The suit is between the members of Sadhu Ram's branch only. From plaintiff's statement at page 39 of the paper-book it appears that the common ancestor Budhu was a petty shop-keeper owning no land. After his death some land was acquired by his two sons jointly, and when Tariya Mal separated from his brother he was given a full half share of the estate as it then stood. Sadhu Ram died some 25 or 30 years ago leaving an unspecified area of land and undetailed personal property. His sons have till recently remained joint and have apparently prospered in the world, adding considerably to their paternal estate. They have now fallen out among themselves owing to some guardianship and partition proceedings and plaintiff has come into Court with a demand that he should be declared entitled to a 6/17ths share in the joint family estate of all kinds including land, houses, cash, moveables of all sorts and debts due to the firm, valuing the whole at Rs. 20,000.

The suit has been absurdly overvalued for jurisdiction purposes, as Rs. 20,000 is admittedly the assumed value of the whole estate. The valuation should have been at most Rs. 6,000 in round figures as representing plaintiff's alleged share. The plaint was at no time properly scrutinised in respect of details of the claim (see the District Judge's order of 1st July 1912 at page 33), while the absence of the prescribed extracts from Revenue Records makes it impossible to estimate what land or houses are included in the claim. The District Judge has avoided all difficulty by giving a decree to plaintiff in general terms for five shares instead of four "on partition of the ancestral property", but in framing the decree he has omitted to notice that even in respect of land the suit covers new acquisitions by plaintiff alone or by plaintiff and his brothers in equal shares as by the documents at pages 18, 17 and 22 to 33. The result is (see ground 10 of appeal) that defendants have been wrongly made liable for Pleader's fee calculated on Rs. 20,000 and if the claim had been properly sifted at the start it, would probably have been found that comparatively little property, much under Rs. 5,000 in value, was really in dispute, and the parties would have been saved the expense of coming to the Chief Court on first appeal.

We see no reason to doubt the correctness of the finding that among these Dakhna Aroras there is a recognised custom giving a $1\frac{1}{4}$th share of family property to the eldest son, as by remarks at pages 5 and 7 of the Multan Customary Law Code of 1901. The original riwaj-i-am entry in support of this custom (page 3 of the paper-book) makes it quite clear, however, that the custom covers ancestral property only. The riwaj-i-am does not profess to deal with moveable property at all, or with immoveable property other than ancestral. So far as we can judge from the incomplete record before us, plaintiff is already the recorded owner of $1\frac{1}{4}$th share in such ancestral land as there may be and he has given no detail at all of house property. There is some doubt whether he is entitled to anything more than he has already received and it may well be that the entire suit was either unnecessary or bad. The District Judge may possibly have intended his decree to mean this, but the terms of that decree are so vague that the defendants are entitled to some modification of the decree as framed.

We desire to make it quite clear that the plaintiff has failed to establish any sort of claim to a larger share than his brothers in either (1) house property, (2) land other than the area inherited from Sadhu Ram, or (3) moveables of any description including cash and debts due to the joint family.

The appeal is allowed to this extent only that in place of the decree given by the lower Court plaintiff is only declared entitled to a 5/17ths share in such land as may have been inherited from Sadhu Ram. The suit is dismissed in respect of houses, land acquired since Sadhu Ram's death and all moveable property covered by the suit. In all the property regarding which his suit is dismissed, he is entitled on partition to the same $\frac{1}{4}$th share as each of his brothers and to nothing more.

The whole dispute appears to have been both foolish and comparatively trivial and both sides are to blame for the litigation.

The parties will, therefore, pay their own cots throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890)—Custody of child, suit for, maintainability of—Jurisdiction, objection as to, when taken.

The Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) forbids proceedings being taken in the ordinary way touching the guardianship of infants A suit for custody of a child must be brought under the Guardians and Wards Act which Act gives jurisdiction to the District Court over minors ordinarily resident in the District.

An objection as to jurisdiction can be raised at any stage of the proceedings.

Mrs. Annie Besant v. G. Narayaniah, 24 Ind. Cas. 290; 27 M. L. J. 30; 18 C.W.N. 1089; 1 L. W. 520; (1914) M. W. N. 585; 16 M. L. T. 165; 20 C. L. J. 253; 16 Bom. L. R. 625; 12 A. L. J. 1155, overruled.

Mr. S. M. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. S. Aiyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought by a father for the custody of his child. He succeeded in the Court of the first instance but failed in first appeal. The suit was not brought under the Guardians and Wards Act and the respondent, who is the mother of the child, now and for the first time takes the objection that this should have been done and that the present suit must be dismissed. The question whether this Act forbids the taking of proceedings in the ordinary way has been the subject of considerable discussion. Vide Sharifa v. Munekhan (1), Sham Lal v. Bindo (2), Krishna v. Reade (3) and Ghasita v. Wazira (4). A Full Bench of this Court has answered the question in the negative, Ma Shwe Ge v. Maung Shwe Pan (5), and the only question is whether this authority is overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in Mrs. Annie Besant v. G. Narayaniah (6) decided last year and reported in 24 Ind. Cas. at page 290. There a father sued in the District Court to recover the custody of his children from the person—defendant—to whom he had delegated his privileges of guardianship. The suit was not under the Guardians and Wards Act and was transferred for hearing to the High Court under the Letters Patent by consent. The question of jurisdiction was hardly contested in the lower Court, but was seriously questioned in appeal where the Chief Justice and Oldfield, J., in preliminary judgments specially devoted to the question held that the Guardians and Wards Act did not prohibit a suit being brought under the ordinary law, and concurred with the lower Court in declaring the plaintiff to be guardian and awarding to him the custody of his children

The defendant, however, appealed, to the Privy Council, which held that the District Court had no jurisdiction over infants save such as was conferred by the Guardians and Wards Act and that Act conferred its jurisdiction over minors ordinaril yresident in the district, that though the suit was transferred to the High Court yet under such circumstances the powers of the High Court would seem to be those of the District Court and also that by bringing a suit inter partes, the plaintiff had not followed the procedure prescribed by the Act for proceedings in a District Court touching the guardianship of the infants They accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit without prejudice to any application he might think fit to make to the High Court in England, where the children were then resident and which their Lordships held to be proper forum in which any application should be made.

In my opinion this case overrules the decision in Ma Shwe Ge's case (5) and I must that the proceedings should have been taken under the Guardians and Wards Act. I am also of opinion that as the point affects jurisdiction it can be raised at any time. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal but make no order as to costs, inasmuch as the objection has been taken so late.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint—Minor plaintiff—Guardian and ward—Suit not to be dismissed on mere technicality.

The Divisional Court on appeal dismissed a minor plaintiff's suit on the ground that the plaint disclosed no cause of action but it appeared that the plaint was only technically not properly drawn up:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case the plaint should be allowed to be amended.

Second appeal from the decree of the Officiating Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 15th April 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, first Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 31st October 1912, decreeing the claim.

Pandit Ram Bhaj Datta, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Respondents' Counsel raises two preliminary objections: (1) that no second appeal lies, (2) that the appeal abates as one of the respondents has died. We overrule both these objections because this appeal turns on the interpretation of the plaint and the representatives of Uttam Singh deceased appear to be his brothers who are already parties to the suit.

The suit was brought on the allegations that plaintiff was owed Rs. 471 by defendants Nos. 4 to 6, who executed a mortgage for Rs. 1,000 in favour of Ishar Singh, brother of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 who, as Ishar Singh is now dead, are his heirs and representatives; that Rs. 471 out of the Rs. 1,000 was left in deposit with Ishar Singh for payment to plaintiff, but he was never paid. He consequently sued for Rs. 471 plus Rs. 315-8 interest.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 pleaded that there was no contract between themselves and the plaintiff, but in any case the money had been paid to plaintiff.

The first Court found these two pleas self-contradictory, that payment was not proved and decreed for plaintiff against defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

The Divisional Judge has dismissed the suit, not on the merits but on the preliminary technical point that the plaint disclosed no cause of action against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

The plaint certainly mentions that the mortgagee admitted his debt, but it does not state in clear unmistakeable terms that he admitted it, i. e., assured responsibility for it to the plaintiff and stepped into the original debtors' shoes in regard to plaintiff.

His Counsel stated to the Divisional Judge that he had drafted the plaint and intended to aver that the mortgagee at the time of the mortgage had orally undertaken to pay the plaintiff.

This matter was not gone into in the first Court. Now the fact that the plaintiff's guardian—the plaintiff is a minor—was present at the time of execution of the mortgage and signed the mortgage as a witness, lends support to the allegation of a separate oral agreement between plaintiff and the mortgagee.

Consequently and also in view of the fact that plaintiff is a minor and that his just claim should not be defeated by a technicality, we think that he should be given an opportunity of amending his plaint, so as to make it clear that the mortgagee orally agreed to pay plaintiff's claim.

We accordingly accept the appeal and remand the case to the Divisional (now District) Judge for a decision on the merits, viz., whether the mortgagee orally agreed to pay plaintiff, and, if so, whether the debt has been paid. It will be necessary for the District Judge to remand the case to the first Court under Order XLI, rule 25, as there was neither issue nor evidence on the point of oral agreement.

The parties shall bear their own costs in this appeal.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 38—Rectification of register—Application made late—Discretion.

A person who claims to have been misled by fraud or false representation into taking shares in a Company should raise the objection without delay.

The power to take summary action under section 38 of the Companies Act, 1913, is discretionary.

Application under section 38 of Act VII of 1913.

Lala Nihal Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 38 of the Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913, for the rectification of the register of the Popular Insurance Company, Limited, Rawalpindi, on the ground that the applicant was induced to take shares by the fraud practised upon him by the Managing Director, Gopi Chand. It is clear that the alleged fraud was committed in November 1912 and the present application was made in December 1914. It seems to me that the issue, whether the fraud was committed or not, involves the determination of complex questions which affect not only the party to this application, but also another person who originally held the shares which were transferred to the applicant.

Now, it is clear that the remedy provided by section 38 is a discretionary one: "If this legal title is clear, and there is no difficult question of fact to be investigated, the Court will rectify the register without directing an action to be brought; but the Court has a discretion as to whether it will interfere summarily under the Act or direct an action, and will be guided by the nature of the facts in dispute and by the desirability of having them investigated by a Jury. And if there is an equity against the applicant the Court will probably not exercise its power under this section." Vide Lindley, Volume I, page 167. The same principle is laid down in Halsbury's Laws of England,

CHENGA REDDI v. VASUDEVA REDDI.

Volume V, page 154: "The jurisdiction is practically unlimited, but discretionary. If, from its complexity or otherwise, the Court thinks that any case could be more satisfactorily dealt with in an action, the Court, without prejudice to the applicant's right to institute an action for rectification, will decline to make an order."

A person who claims to have been misled by fraud or false representation into taking shares in a Company should raise the objection at an early period. Having regard to the delay of two years and the complexity of the questions involved, I am of opinion that this is not a fit case for the exercise of my jurisdiction under section 38. The applicant has got his remedy by a regular suit, in which all the matters which he wants to urge before me can be properly enquired into I accordingly refuse the application but leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Application refused.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Testamentary direction to adopt a certain boy given to widow—Death of adoptee—Second adoption, whether valid.

A Hindu embodied in his Will a direction to his widow to adopt a certain boy and to put him in possession of all property at the end of her life. The widow did adopt the boy who, however, having died, she adopted another. The reversioners of the first adoptee sued to set aside the second adoption:

Held, Per Sankaran Nair, J.—(1) that the question whether the Will authorised a second adoption on the death of the first adoptee was one of intention to be gathered from the terms of the Will and the surrounding circumstances; [p 777, col. 2; p. 773, col. 1.]

An authority to adopt expressed in a Will must be construed with reference to the presumption that a Hindu testator always intends the perpetuation of his family and that authority to adopt one specific child should, in case of that child's death, be held to warrant the adoption of another unless there is something in the Will itself to show that the testator did not desire any other adoption to be made; [p. 774, col. 2.]

Where there is a conflict between the general presumption as to a testator's intention and the explicit or implied restriction contained in the Will itself the proper course is to attempt to ascertain with reference to the testator's own words and without reference to the general presumption whether he meant to restrict the authority he was conferring; and to have recourse to that presumption only after such attempt has failed. Where the Will contains a provision that the estate should pass on the widow's death to the adopted son and does not at the same time make a provision as to its succession on the death of the adopted son, it is clear that the testator was either indifferent or content to leave his widow to adopt with the consent of the sapindas. Appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Arcot, in Original Suit No. 3 of 1912 (Original Suit No. 3 of 1912, on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot).

FACTS.—The plaintiffs, reversioners to the estate of one Chenga Reddi, brought a suit in the District Court of North Arcot to set aside the adoption of the second defendant, Vasudeva Reddi, alleged to be made by the adoptive mother of the said Chenga Reddi, in accordance with the authority conferred on her by her husband by a Will. The Will, among other provisions, contained terms to the effect that he had two daughters, one of whom had two sons, and the other was the younger and likely to have more children. He wanted to adopt himself the second son of the eldest daughter, Chenga Reddi, but, as he was nearing death, he directed his wife to do so and pursuant to the terms of the said Will, the widow adopted Chenga Reddy, who subsequently died.

Twenty years after the widow, purporting to act under the said authority, adopted another boy who is the defendant in the suit. The suit is by the reversioners to the estate of the first adopted boy to set aside (the second) adoption.

The District Judge following the decision in Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana (1) dismissed the suit. This appeal is against that decree.

Dewan Bahadur L. A. Govindraghava Aiyar and Mr. A. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Plaintiffs-Appellants, contended that (1) the direction was specific and did not indicate any primary intention followed by a second intention, but the Will indicated that the deceased intended to take that boy and that boy alone in adoption, and (2) what was contained was only a direction to the widow to take that boy alone in adoption and to act according to the directions given by the husband at the time of his death. He distinguished the present case from the Privy Council case in Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana (1) and cited in support of his contention a ruling of the Privy Council in Surendra Nandan v. Sailaja Kant Das (2), Visalakshi Ammal v. Sivaramien (3), Mutsaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal (4), Venkata Narasimha v. Parthasarathy (5).

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and N. Krishnamachariar, for the Respondent, contended that (1) there was a distinction between the case where the authority to adopt takes the form of a power and a mere direction. In the former the widow is fettered by the condition imposed by the Will on her power, whereas in the case of direction, the primary intention must be borne in mind and effect should be given to the primary intentions of the testator, and the name of a particular boy to be adopted indicates his intentions but does not indicate a prohibition of further adoptions.

JUDGMENT.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—The suit was brought by the plaintiffs as the reversioners of one Chenga Reddi, deceased, the admitted owner of the properties in suit, to set aside an adoption made by his adoptive mother Subbamma, the 1st defendant, to her deceased husband. The plaintiffs' case is that Subbamma was not authorized by her husband to make a second adoption. The District Judge of North Arcot dismissed the suit holding that she had been authorized. The plaintiffs appeal.

The authority is alleged to be given by a Will executed by the husband of the 1st defendant shortly before his death. The Will is in the following terms :—

"The Will dated the 8th Avani of Vishu (22nd August 1881) executed by one Mogili Reddigari Chenga Reddi of Thondanada village, Chandragiri Taluq, in favour of yourself Subbu, my wife, is as follows :—We have no male issue, but have only got (1) one elder daughter Subbamma and (2) one second daughter Chinna Subbamma, the said elder daughter having two sons and the second daughter one son and one female (issue). She may still give birth to more children. As I am certain that the disease of dropsy which I am now suffering from would grow worse and my last days are at hand and as, according to my intention, there is no time to adopt Chenga Reddy, the second son of my said elder daughter, you shall, after my demise, adopt the said boy and the particulars of direction you have to carry out in regard to the whole of my estate are as follows ; (here properties are described). You shall put the above-mentioned properties in the possession of the said adopted son at the end of your life-time (during your last moments). You know for the maintenance of my step-mother, Pedda Amma alias Chengamma, a karar (agreement) has been executed by her in October 1865 and she has been enjoying the lands, etc., which have been granted to her for maintenance for her whole life. She shall enjoy the said properties according to the terms of the said karar. As the oustandings due to me, amounts due to me under decrees, silver, gold and cash amount altogether to about Rs. 50,000 at present, you shall collect the said debts, keep the said properties in your possession, have the said adopted son in your care and protection and after, at the time of your death, considering the then circumstances and agreeably to the estate making such gifts as may be proper in favour of your two daughters and the (other grandsons) sons of your daughters. deliver the whole of the remaining estate to the said adopted son. This is the Will got written out of my free will by Chamala Munusamy."

After her husband's death the 1st defendant adopted Chenga Reddi, the second son of her elder daughter, Subbamma. He died and she has since adopted the 2nd defendant in the suit, who is the son's son of the younger daughter, Chinna Subbamma.

Now it is argued before us that there is a direction in the Will to adopt only Chenga Reddi; that nowhere is any authority expressly given to make a second adoption on his death; nor is there anything in the Will itself to imply such an authority.

It is also argued that it was the testator's intention, as expressed in the Will, to make the adoption himself and it was only his physical inability to do so that put off the adoption and that if he had adopted Chenga Reddi himself, there would have been no Will and there would have been no authority given.

It is further contended that the provision in the Will, that the widow, the 1st defendant, should surrender possession of the properties to the "said adopted son at the end of your life-time," shows that the testator did not contemplate the necessity of another adoption or, in other words, the contingency of the death of the adopted son and, therefore, no implied authority for a second adoption is to be found in the document. These arguments are of great weight.

On the other hand, it is contended that according to the rule of construction laid down by the decisions of this Court and by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council we are bound to uphold the adoption. It is argued that the testator having clearly expressed his desire that he should be represented by an adopted son and the widow having been authorized to adopt, effect must be given to his intention.

In the earliest case brought to our notice Veerapermall Pillay v. Narain Pillay (6), the authority was contained in the following words of the husband's Will: "If Ayya Pillai beget a son besides his present son you are to keep him to my lineage." Sir Thomas Strange affirmed the validity of the adoption made by the widow of another boy, holding that she was not bound to wait indefinitely.

It is argued by Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar that there was another provision in that Will on which stress was laid by Sir Thomas Strange to show a primary intention on the part of the testator to be represented by an adopted son, and that Sir Thomas Strange said, with reference to that provision that it indicated an intention that the adoption should not be confined to any particular person or family and, therefore, he drew the inference that it was only a case of preference which the testator expressed that a son of Ayya Pillai should be adopted if available. This may be conceded but at the same time on reading the judgment there is no doubt that Sir Thomas Strange was of opinion that, if possible, effect should be given to the desire of the testator to be represented by a son. He said: "Of the advantages which, in the religious belief of the Natives, depend upon this mode of substitution where a man has no son of his own, their books are full; and yet, important as they are, we may readily imagine that the provision for it is frequently reserved for the chamber of disease, and the hour of dissolution, when pain and alarm often deprive us of the distinct use of every faculty, and leave us no power but that of expressing a general sentiment, or announcing a vague wish. * * * * * In such a state, will the law of the Hindu have best shown its wisdom in a matter upon which his happiness after death is supposed to depend, by requiring that, at the peril of his soul remaining in put, he shall specify a name which he cannot recollect, and declare a preference which it may be impossible for him at that moment to feel; or, by leaving it to the affectionate discretion of his surviving partner, consulting as it is her duty to do, with his nearest friends and relations, to substitute for him the person whom he would in all probability have himself preferred had he proceeded to adopt in his life-time, or had it occurred to him before his death to express a preference."

The next authority that is relied upon by the respondents' Pleader is the judgment of Farran, C. J., in Lakshmibai v. Rajaji (7). It was pointed out by the Chief Justice that it was common for a husband authorizing an adoption to specify the child he wishes to be taken and should that child die or be refused by his parents, the authority would still be held to warrant the adoption of another child, unless there is something in the Will itself to show that the husband did not desire any other adoption to be made. The ground of decision was stated to be that if a person desires an adoption and when he specifies the object he simply indicates a preference.

According to this view, the question for decision is not whether a husband only gives permission to his wife to adopt, leaving it entirely to her discretion to decide whether an adoption should be made or not, but whether he gives an imperative direction to her to adopt which she, as an obedient wife, was bound to obey. It was argued by the appellant's Pleader that this decision is not an authority to be followed in Madras because, in Bombay a widow is authorized to make an adoption without any authority from the husband and that the judgment must, therefore, be understood with reference to that rule of law. But it may be pointed out that this difference exists only when the husband is an undivided co-parcener and the reasoning of the Judge does not proceed on any such distinction. The case on which reliance is placed by the District Judge and by the Pleader for the respondents, is the judgment in Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana (8) confirmed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Suryanarayana

(6) 1 Strange's Notes of Cases 78 at p. 104; 5 Ind. Dec. (o. s.) 41.

v. Venkataramana (1). In that case the husband authorized his wife to adopt a son and died.. The widow adopted a son in pursuance of that authority but that son also died. The widow adopted a second time. It was held by the High Court that the husband's authority was not exhausted by the first adoption but held good for the second adoption also. In that case the authority was "in general terms requiring her to adopt so as to continue his line and to provide for his spiritual benefit." In that respect it differs from the case before us. There was no direction to adopt any particluar boy. But in delivering their judgment the learned Judges of this Court said: "We are of opinion that the husband's authority held good for the second adoption also. The object and purpose of the authority given by the husband was to perpetuate his family as well as to secure his spiritual benefit, and it would be unreasonable to hold that an accident such as the early death of the boy first adopted should be allowed to frustrate the fulfilment of his object and to preclude the widow from making another adoption in the absence of any legal impediment to her doing so. When the general intention of a Hindu to be represented by an adopted son is clear, as in this case, there seems no reason why effect should not be given to such intention, if it is possible to do so without contravening the law". And they refer to Ayya Pillia's case and the judgment in Lakshmibai v. Rajaji (7) already referred to. The learned Judges also relied upon Morley's Digest to show instances where a "widow makes a second adoption, on failure of the first by death, in fulfilment of a single injunction or authority of her husband, the object of such injunction being unattained unless the child live."

The learned Judges go even further and refer to a decision in Ramasami Aiyan v. Venkata Ramaiyan (9) as justifiying an adoption by a widow to carry out the husband's general intention, even where the husband did not directly give authority for the adoption. The judgment of their Lordships in Ramasami Aiyan v. Venkata Ramaiyan (9) does not, it appears to us, bear out the inference drawn by the learned Judges. There is no doubt, however, from this judgment that where the husband has clearly expressed his intention to be the perpetuation of the family and the securing of his spiritual benefit, the death of the boy first adopted should not stand in the way of the widow making another adoption if there is no legal impediment to her doing so. Of course any direction in the Will, express or implied, against a second adoption must be given effect to, and even if she is otherwise competent in law to make an adoption she cannot do it. This judgment was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In their judgment they cite with approval the passage above extracted from the judgment of this Court. They refer with approval also to an expression of opinion by the Calcutta High Court that considering the religious efficacy that ensues from an adoption, a Court "should rather do its utmost to support it unless such adoption is clearly in excess or in breach of the power to make it," and in pointing out the limitations to the application of the rule, they refer to their own judgment in Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sethupathy (10), that the authorities in favour of a widow's power to adopt with the assent of a kinsman proceed in a great measure upon the assumption that his assent to this meritorious act is to be implied wherever he has not forbidden it, and they proceed to indicate the circumstances in which such a prohibition by the husband may be inferred. They also express dissent from the view of the Calcutta High Court, that where the widow is directed to adopt a son she cannot adopt a second son if the first adopted son dies. The decision of the Calcutta High Court was based on the ground that as there was no permission to adopt one child after another the widow was not authorized to make a second adoption. There is little doubt that, in the opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council, if the intention of the husband that he should be represented by an adopted son is clearly expressed in the Will, the adoption should be upheld unless there is anything in the Will to show that a second adoption should not be made.

In the case before us, there is very little doubt of the husband's general intention. He wanted to adopt a son himself and he could not carry out his intention on account of his inability to do so. He expresses his regret in the Will that they had no male issue. He told his wife that she must adopt her daughter's second son. The general intention, therefore, is perfectly clear. It is true that he did not contemplate the contingency of the adopted son's death. But it is not always that a testator likes to refer to such an inauspicious circumstance in a Will.

Is there anything, then, to imply an intention on the part of the husband against a second adoption? Having regard to the rules laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the passage in Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sethupathy (10) extracted by their Lordships in their judgment in Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana (1), there is nothing in the disposition of his property or in the circumstances of the family to support that contention. The Will shows a clear intention that the bulk of his property should be taken by one of his descendants, and a desire to benefit also his other descendants. If the widow had no power to make a second adoption, this intention will be clearly frustrated. In the absence of any second adoption the property would not go to his own natural heirs, that is to say, his daughters and daughters' sons, but it would go to the heirs of his first adopted son i. e., the plaintiffs. An intention, therefore, to divert the property from his natural heirs i. e., his daughters and their issue has to be imputed to the testator if we deny the widow any authority to make a second adoption. The probabilities are that if he had fully expressed his intentions he would have authorized the widow to make another selection from his descendants.

Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar relied upon the opinion of the Judicial Committee in Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorga Soondery Dossee (11) and Amrito Lal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi (12) to show that even where there is a direction by the husband to make an adoption the widow was held not entitled to carry out that intention. It is true that in the earlier case there was a direction to his two widows by the testator for each of them to adopt a son. But the adoption was held invalid on the ground that the Will authorized only the simultaneous adoption of two sons and no other course. It was impossible to carry out, therefore, the testator's wishes unless two sons were adopted and such adoption was held to be illegal. The question, therefore, did not turn upon the nature of the power given to a widow to adopt, but upon the illegality of the power itself. In the other case, Amrito Lal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi (12), a husband purported to authorize his widows, jointly with two other persons, to adopt a son to him. This authority was held to be illegal.

In these cases the widow could not make any adoption at all, the question whether she could make a second adoption did not arise. Nor is the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Nidadavole case, Venkata Narasimha v. Parthasarathy (5), in point. In their judgment the Judicial Committee said: "He (that is, the testator) does not direct that there shall be an adoption, as he would naturally have done had he wished in all events to secure that there should be a son to perform the due religious rites. He makes it depend on the opinion of his widows whether and when an adoption should take place." The principle herein laid down is certainly not in support of the appellant's contention.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the adoption is valid. But as my learned brother disagrees with me, the decree of the lower Court is confirmed and appeal dismissed with costs under section 98, Civil Procedure Code.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question is whether the Will, Exhibit A, authorised the testator's widow to adopt a second time after the boy, whose adoption was specifically permitted by it, had been adopted by her and had died. I differ from my learned brother on a question of this kind with great diffidence.

(11) 19 C. 513 at p. 534; 19 I. A. 108.

(12) 27 C. 996; 27 I. A. 128; 4 C. W. N. 549.

But I do not think that the answer should be in the affirmative.

It is unnecessary for me to follow him in the majority of his references to decisions. For I accept his conclusion that a Hindu testator, who authorises an adoption generally, must be presumed to do so with the primary intention that his widow shall secure his posthumous representation by an adopted son and make successive adoptions, until that object is secured. Here, however, the question is of a conflict between that presumption and what are alleged to be restrictions on the use of the widow's authority implied in the terms conveying it, especially in the specification of the boy to be adopted. Only two of the decisions deal directly with such a case. The others merely lay down the presumption already stated in cases in which the authority was expressed in general terms; they did not and had not to deal with restrictions on it and, therefore, afford very little guidance. The first of those two decisions, Veerapermall Pillay v. Narain Pillay (6), is no doubt based on the presumption and applied it, although the authority specified the boy to be adopted. It, however, really carries the argument very little further. For, firstly, the application of the presumption could in fact be supported by the language of one of the collateral dispositions of property in the Will. And secondly, the specification was of a boy unborn, though his mother was pregnant at the date of the Will; and, after the boy thus born to her had died some months before the testator and before his Will had effect, the latter did not change it, though the mother had no other issue. In the circumstances the Court might well decide, as it did, that the testator had expressed his desire for posthumous representation subject only to a restriction, which had to his knowledge become inoperative, and give effect to the presumption it had formulated. There was not at the date when the Will spoke or later any boy, specified by it, in existence; and the authority had to be treated as general or given no effect at all. The case, therefore, differed entirely from that before us, in which such a boy was available and the restriction on the authority could be and was given effect, when the latter had to be exercised.

The other case, in which an authority to adopt a specified boy was in question, Lakshmibai v. Rajaji (7), is important because, although it was decided in Bombay, it is referred to by this High Court and the Privy Council in Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana (1) and Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana (8) as supporting the conclusion therein. But the authority in the latter case indicated no particular person for adoption by name or otherwise and placed no restriction whatever on the wife's discretion, the decision turning in both Courts on the general validity of the presumption already referred to which (in the absence of restriction on the authority) was sufficient to support the adoption. Lakshmibai v. Rajaji (7) was, no doubt, a case in which an adoption of a boy other than the one specified was upheld, when the latter was not available. But, firstly, as in Veerapermall Pillay v. Narain Pillay (6) the authority, as restricted by the testator, turned out to be ineffectual through causes beyond the widow's control. And, next, the case must, in my opinion, be distinguished on a more general ground, that the law under administration was different. For, though the judgment contains nothing explicit on the point, the first portion of it is statedly based on the law of the Bombay Presidency; and the facts that no co-parceners were parties and that the adoption was disputed by a widow indicated that the deceased testator was a divided co-parcener, since on the contrary assumption the widow would, whether or no the adoption was valid, have been entitled only to a maintenance and have had no interest in disputing it. If the decision is, as must be supposed, one regarding the widow of an undivided co-parcener, the question would be her general and subsisting right to adopt and of its revival, when the restriction placed on it by her husband turned out ineffective; and it would be decided on grounds inapplicable in Madras or in the present case, where the widow has no power to adopt inependently of her husband's authority and the question is whether, after a restricted authority has been acted on ineffectually, her possession of an unrestricted one can be presumed. In these circumstances the decision is not of assistance. And it is not necessary to treat it as imposed on Courts in this Presidency, as authoritative by either of the judgments above referred to. For those responsible for them cannot be supposed to have overlooked the indications that it related to a divided family or to have disregarded the distinctive character of the law under application. The references to it were made to support the liberal rule of construction, which the learned Judges and their Lordships were applying to the authority before them and are, I would respectfully suggest, explicable as relating to the second ground of decision, on which also the Bombay judgment was based.

Two Calcutta cases, Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorga Soondery Dossee (11) and Amrito Lal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi (12), were relied on by appellants. The authorities in them were, however, invalid ab initio since they conferred no power exercisable by the widow under Hindu Law, and the decisions regarding them, therefore, afford no guidance.

In the result, the two cases dealing with authorities specifying a particular boy are distinguishable from that before us; and the remaining cases dealing with unrestricted authorities contain nothing directly relevant. There, however, occur in them some incidental references to the construction of restrictions on authorities and I refer to them before dealing with the provisions of the Will before us. Earlier in this judgment I stated the question in issue as being of the conflict between the general presumption as to a testator's intention and the explicit or implied restriction, which the Will is alleged to contain. But it would have been more accurate to use no language which could suggest that the two were to be considered together and the latter weighed against the former. For the proper course is, as I think, first to attempt to ascertain, with reference to the testator's own words and without reference to the general presumption, whether he meant to restrict the authority he was conferring; and to have recourse to that presumption only after such attempt has failed. It is true that in Veerapermall Pillay v. Narain Pillay (6), "the collective effect of the Pandits' opinions" in favour of the general presumption is referred to as "repelling the construction attempted to be put upon the Will by defendants, ...had the intention of the testator ever so plainly required it" (page 98). But it was not necessary for the Court in that case to endorse those opinions to that extent. For immediately afterwards it pointed out only that where (as in the case before it) no such intention was expressed or was necessarily to be implied, none could be assumed and the general presumption as to the testator's object could be relied on. Again, whilst the High Court in Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana (8) said that "when the general intention of a Hindu to be represented by a son was clear, there seemed to be no reason why effect should not be given to such intention, if it were possible to do so without contravening the law. Each case must be decided on its own merits without applying too strict a rule of construction with regard to powers of this description," the Privy Council held consistently with the conclusion above stated that "the main factor for consideration is the intention of the husband. Any special instructions he may have given his widow must be strictly followed; where no such instructions have been given, but a general intention has been expressed to be represented by a son, effect should, if possible, be given to that intention." And their Lordships have given the clearest expression to these views in a very recent case, Venkata Narasimha v. Parthasarathy (5). In one passage in the judgment (page 223) they declined to treat the testator's motive as religious at all, because his language showed that it was secular. In another (page 222) they recognised that surrounding circumstances (including race and religious opinion) deserved consideration in arriving at a right construction of the Will and ascertaining the meaning of its language "as used by that testator in that document." But they held that " So soon as the construction is settled, the duty of the Court is to carry out the intentions as expressed, and none other. The Court is in no case justified in adding to testamentary dispositions. . . . . If they leave any eventuality unprovided for, the estate must, in case that eventuality arises, be dealt with according to the law, which provides for succession of property in the absence of testamentary directions applying thereto. But the Court never adds to a Will anything which needs to be done by testamentary disposition."

The terms of the Will in this case must accordingly be construed strictly as they stand, and without any addition to them to provide for subsequent eventualities or expansion of them based on any presumed intention of the testator. I note, first, the statement that he had no time to adopt Chenga Reddi, as he intended to do; and here, as later, I can find no reason for assuming what he could easily have expressed, if he had wished, that his intention to adopt was not restricted to Chenga Reddi, but was general. There is, next, the direction to the widow to adopt Chenga Reddi, followed by no provision for the contingency of the latter's death or the refusal of his parents to give him. The result, as I read it, is that testator gave an authority to adopt, restricting its operation to Chenga Reddi, and I find myself unable to understand how a testator, who certainly did not trust his widow unreservedly in the action, which he authorised expressly, can be presumed to have authorised her to take further action by implication or to have meant to leave her to do so unfettered. And lastly, as regards the absence of any provision for future eventualities, the testator's attitude is made yet clearer by his reference to the devolution of his estate on the adopted son on his widow's death and the assumption it involved, that the former would survive the latter. That assumption was, as already observed, involved also in the restriction of the widow's authority. Its repetition makes it the more difficult to disregard it. The omission to provide for this eventuality in connection with the direction to adopt was merely tacit; but, as shown, authority would forbid the Court even in those circumstances to supply it by implication. The Courts' disability to do so is the clearer, when, as is the case here, the testator has elected not to provide for this eventuality, though he has provided for its converse, and the inference must be that he was either indifferent or content to leave his widow to adopt with the consent of the sapindas. It is not possible to supply the omission by any expedient, which would add to or modify the Will, as that proposed by respondent would do. My conclusion therefore, is that the Will authorises no second adoption after the failure of that of Chenga Reddi.

I would, therefore, reverse the lower Court's finding on issue 1. If this were the decision of the Court, it would be necessary to proceed to deal with issues 4 and 5. I do not do so, because in accordance with my learned brother's judgment the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Sham Lal, for the Appellants.

WADHAWA v. Musammat HASSI.

Messrs. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi and Daulat Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the landlord to oust from the land in suit the defendants, alleged by him to be trespassers.

These latter pleaded that they held the land from their ancestors, Nathu and Kundan, who had acquired occupancy rights in it.

The plaintiff retorted that Kundan and Nathu had a right to occupy the land for their joint lives.

The first Court found in this sense and on the ground that Nathu, the last joint tenant, was now dead, decreed for plaintiff.

From that decree all the defendants other than the descendants of Nathu, but including transferees of Nathu, appealed to the Divisional Court, but that Court dismissed the appeal, refusing to entertain the one real plea of the appellants, viz., that they were entitled to hold the land as occupancy tenants.

Before us in second appeal, it is contended that the suit was instituted on 1st July 1912 and that Act III of 1912 came into operation on 24th May 1912, and so governs this case.

That Act provides that if in any civil suit it becomes necessary to decide any matter reserved under section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act for the exclusive determination of the Revenue Courts, the plaint shall be returned for presentation to the Collector.

The plaintiff-respondent contends that the Act is inapplicable to this case, as it is not necessary to determine the question of occupancy status, inasmuch as it is res judicata that the tenancy determined on the death of the last joint tenant.

He relies on the proceedings of 1863, 1875, 1892 for his view that the matter is res judicata.

After consulting the available documents we do not think that the objection can be upheld.

The proceeding of 1863 was apparently that of an Assistant Settlement Officer and though in his reasons for his order, he remarks that the landlord shall have a right of entry on the death of Kundan and Nathu, his order is simply to the effect that plaintiff must pay a sum of Rs. 54 to defendants, in which case he will be entitled to a rent of Rs. 18-12-0 per cent, or failing to pay Rs. 54, he will be entitled to 5 per cent. only during the life-time of the defendants.

Such tenants were called panahi or protected for a term of years, but this order was passed before the enactment of the first Tenancy Act of 1868, and a panahi was not debarred from establishing occupancy rights under the Tenancy Act (cf. Revised Settlement Report, Sialkot, paragraph 127).

This Court's order of 1876 proceeds upon the decision of 1863 and though it does not decide, it suggests that the tenancy will terminate on the death of the surviving joint tenant.

So much of its order, however, as comprises this suggestion was made obiter, for that question was not at that time before the Court.

The proceedings of 1892 were based solely on the 1863 and 1876 decisions.

In all this there is no clear bar to the defendants' plea that they are entitled to occupancy rights.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are represented before us by Counsel, but they did not appeal to the lower Appellate Court and we need merely note that they support the appeal. From the foregoing, it seems to us clear that the defendants' claim to occupancy rights should have been tried.

It should have been tried by a Revenue Court under Act III of 1912. It was tried, though not in a very thorough manner, by the first Court while the lower Appellate Court refused to entertain it.

We have considered whether Act III of 1912 sets up any bar to action under section 100 of the Tenancy Act, but inasmuch as the Act of 1912 merely adds a proviso to section 77 of the Tenancy Act we hold in the negative.

The Munsif tried the case straightforwardly and we see no reason for throwing on the parties all the expenses of a fresh trial ab initio.

We, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that the Subordinate Judge's decree be registered as a decree of an Assistant Collector, first grade, that the lower Appellate Court return the appeal for presentation to the Collector who will decide the case either on the materia already on the record or if he deems it necessary, after a remand. Parties shall bear their own costs in this Court, and in the lower Courts, as may be ordered by the Revenue Court.

Appeal accepted.

Custom—Alienation by widow—Necessity—Payment of debt due by husband—Hindu Law—Payment of barred debt—Payment out of income of property.

Under the Hindu Law a widow can validly alienate property to raise money for payment of debt due by her husband, even if she be able to pay it off out of the income of the property in her hands, but under the Customary Law she is not competent to do so.

Ramasami Chetti v. Mangal Karasu Nachiar, 18 M. 113; Veerabadra Aiyar v. Marudaga Nachiar, 8 Ind. Cas. 1072; 34 M. 188; 9 M. L. T. 235; 21 M. L. J. 320; (1910) M. W. N. 799 and Debi Dayal Sahoo v. Bhan Pertap Singh, 31 C. 433; 8 C. W. N. 408, referred to.

Under Customary Law, unlike Hindu Law, a widow is not bound to pay debts due by her husband which have become barred by limitation.

Musammat Mulo v. Phulo Missar, 108 P. R. 1888, referred to.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur Division, dated the 22nd January 1914, varying that of the Munsif, first Class, Hoshiarpur, dated 4th August 1913, decreeing the claim in part.

Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Appellant.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point for determination in this appeal is, whether the mortgage by the widow is valid to the extent of Rs. 160 the which was borrowed to pay off the debt due by the husband. It is quite clear that the widow had ample income out of which she could, if she liked, pay the above amount. The learned Divisional Judge has consequently held that there was no necessity for the mortgage, and after considering the matter carefully I see no reason to take a different view.

It appears that under the Hindu Law widow is not bound to pay the debts of her husband out of the income of the property and that she can validly alienate part of the immoveable property to raise money for payment thereof. [Vide Ramasami Chetti v. Mangal Karasu Nachiar (1); Veerabadra Aiyar v. Marudaga Nachiar (2) and Debi Dayal Sahoo v. Bhan Pertap Singh (3).] The learned Pleaders on both sides are unable to cite any authority which deals with the similar point under the Customary Law. It is, however, noteworthy that as regards the barred debts, the rule of Hindu Law has not been applied to cases governed by the Customary Law, vide Musammat Mulo v. Phulo Missar (4). Taking a broad commonsense view of the matter, I think it can hardly be said that a widow who has ample funds to meet the debt is under the necessity to make an alienation of the property inherited from her husband. The law enunciated in paragraph 65, Explanation I, of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, goes to show that the income of the widow is an important factor to be considered in the determination of the question whether the alienation is, or is not for necessity.

Accordingly I am inclined to agree with the conclusion of the learned Divisional Judge and consider that necessity for the alienation has not been established. I affirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and, dismissing the appeal, direct the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Legal necessity —Knowledge and consent of next heir—Construction of deeds—Guiding principle.

Where, therefore, in order to pay off some existing ancestral debts and some others contracted by her for necessity, a Hindu widow sold a house with the knowledge of her daughter, whose husband attested the deed of sale, and the debts were, as a matter of fact, paid out of the purchase-money and the recitals in the deed of sale contained a detailed account of the circumstances under which the house was being sold, and the vendor purported to convey all her own existing right, title and interest in or belonging or appertaining to the houses including easements, and declaring that the vendee shall be full owner and proprietor of the house sold:

Held, that the widow intended to convey absolute property in the house to the vendee and the daughter could not challenge the alienation. [p. 784, col. I.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Allahabad High Court, dated February 6th, 1912, reversing those of the Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated July 20th, 1910.

FACTS.—The pedigree of the plaintiff appears from the following table :—

RAS BIHARI LAL

Radha Gobind (died childless).	=Phundo Bibi, (widow).	Krishen Chaitan Deo, Kunj Behari Lal—Rama Bibi (widow).
		Chanda Bibi (daughter) (plaintiff).

The property in question was acquired by Ras Bihari. After his death Radke Gobind and Krishen Chaitan remained in possession. The former having died, leaving a widow in Phundo Bibi, Krishen Chaitan came into exclusive possession of the property. He also having died his son, Kunj Bihari, came into possession, on whose death his widow, Rama Bibi, obtained possession as widow. The appellants wishing to build a dharamsala at Benares purchased the houses in question from Rama Bibi and as Phundo Bibi had a right to maintenance, she was also joined as vendor. Out of the purchase-money some existing ancestral debts were paid and so were some of the debts contracted for necessity. On the death of the widows Chanda Bibi, daughter of Kunj Bihari Lal, sought to set aside the deed of conveyance on the ground that her mother had alienated her life-estate only and that her consent was not obtained and could not be obtained as she was a minor at the date of sale. The Subordinate Judge decided against her, holding that the alienation by the widow was for necessity and that it was effected with full knowledge and consent of Chanda Bibi. The High Court on appeals decided that it was not clear from the recital of the deed that the widow intended to convey more than her life-estate and allowed the appeal. The appellant then appealed to His Majesty in Council in due course.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. Lowndes), for the Appellant, contended that on reading the deed of conveyance as a whole and having regard to the circumstances, it was evident that all parties intended that the whole estate should pass under the conveyance. In all cases of contract and deed by the people of India the real intention of the parties only should be the governing factor. The appellant was buying the house for erecting a dharamsala and paid adequate consideration. The widow had some debts, both ancestral and of her own, which were satisfied out of the purchase-money. She being owner had power to sell absolutely under such circumstances. The respondent gave her consent by allowing her husband to sign the deed and, as a matter of fact, he lived in the house purchased with part of the sale-price. The appellant was further protected by section 38 of the Transfer of Property Act. Having paid a valuable consideration for the house in good faith he must be protected. In any case respondent was not entitled to the house now standing and should pay for the same before obtaining possession of the same.

Reference was made to Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1); Transfer of Property Act, sections 8 and 38.

THAKUR VASONJI MORARJI v. CHANDA BIBI.

JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad, dated the 6th February 1912, whereby a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Benares, dated the 28th of July 1910, was set aside. The respondent did not appear on the hearing before this Board to support the judgment appealed from.

The suit out of which the appeal has arisen was brought by the respondent against Thakur Vasonji Morarji, a well-to-do merchant of Bombay, to recover possession of a certain house in the city of Benares, and also mesne rates.

The land upon which this house is built was part of the immoveable property inherited by the respondent's father, one Kunj Behari Lal, the last surviving male member of a joint Hindu family, who died on the 6th of November 1890. He left his widow, Musammat Rama Bibi, and the respondent, his daughter, by that lady him surviving. He had no other issue. One Musammat Phundo Bibi, the widow of Goshain Radke Gobind, the paternal uncle of Kunj Behari Lal, was, in and subsequent to the year 1892, entitled to maintenance out of the property so inherited by the latter. By deed, dated the 24th of November 1892, these two widowed ladies jointly conveyed to Thakur Vasonji Morarji some interest in the site of the aforesaid house with the two houses then standing upon it in consideration of the sum of Rs. 10,500.

The main question in dispute upon which the two Indian tribunals have differed is the nature of the interest so conveyed. The Subordinate Judge held in effect as a fact, first, that the sale of these houses was made by Musammat Rama Bibi as a matter of necessity, in order to discharge out of the purchase money certain debts due respectively by her husband's father, Krishen Chaitan Deo, deceased, and his aforesaid paternal uncle amounting to Rs. 9,500 with interest, for the payment of which the creditors were pressing, and also certain debts incurred by herself, in order to obtain the necessaries of life for the family; and, secondly, that Musammat Rama Bibi, having under these circumstances the power to sell the absolute interest in this immoveable property, she intended so to do; that this deed, on the true construction of its terms, effected her intention, and carried to and vested in the purchaser the absolute interest in the then existing two houses and their sites.

The High Court, while not differing from, or disturbing in any way the conclusions of fact at which the Subordinate Judge had arrived, or questioning the intention of Musammat Rama Bibi to sell and convey the absolute interest in this piece of immoveable property, held that the terms of the deed were inadequate to convey to the purchaser anything beyond her own interest in the same, which they described as a life-interest.

The purchaser, the defendant in the suit, died on the 22nd of March 1913. He purchased these houses for the purpose of founding a dharamsala on their site, and with that object caused the two dilapidated houses standing upon it at the date of the deed to be demolished, and one house to be erected upon the site at a cost to him of Rs. 13,000. Rama Bibi died on the 19th of August 1909, Phundo Bibi having pre-deceased her. On the 12th of January 1910 this suit was instituted by the respondent, as heir of her father, claiming the relief asked for on the ground that the sale by her deceased mother was made without necessity and without her, the respondent's, consent. The Subordinate Judge found as a question of fact that the respondent was not a minor at the date of the deed, and that she had full knowledge of the intended sale, and consented to it. Owing to the fact that the respondent did not appear on the hearing of this appeal, their Lordships thought it right not to content themselves with accepting and acting on the findings of fact of the Subordinate Judge, without examining for themselves the evidence upon which those findings purport to be based. Counsel for the appellant has accordingly fully opened this evidence. Their Lordships have fully considered it, and are clearly of opinion that the existence of the debts incurred by the predecessors of Kunj Behari Lal to the amount mentioned, the necessity for the sale of the absolute interest in these two houses in order to discharge them, and the payment of them out of the purchase-money, when obtained, are clearly established Their Lordships see no reason whatever t dissent from any of the Subordinate Judge's findings of fact.

The question of the proper construction of the deed of conveyance remains. The principle laid down by Lord Justice Knight Bruce in delivering the judgment of this Board in the case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musamnat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1) is particularly applicable to this case At page 411-412 of the report he says :—

"Deeds and contracts of the people of India ought to be liberally construed. The form of expression, literal sense, is not to be so much regarded as the real meaning of the parties which the transaction discloses."

Well, it appears to their Lordships that an examination in detail of the provisions of the deed of conveyance in this case cannot leave any doubt upon one's mind that all the parties meant that the absolute interest in these two houses should be conveyed to the purchaser, and thought that it had by the deed been effectually conveyed to him. That instrument commences with a full and detailed recital of the title to the property. It contains a declaration that Rama Bibi is the owner of all the property left by her deceased husband, but that Phundo Bibi being an elderly woman in the family, this property was by courtesy enjoyed by the latter jointly with herself.

It is then recited that the deceased husbands of these two ladies (both of whom execute the deed) did not leave behind them property, the produce of which was sufficient to meet their necessary expenses ; that they had been obliged to borrow money to provide the ordinary necessaries of life ; that the father and paternal uncle of Kunj Behari Lal were at the time of their respective deaths each indebted to several creditors, still unpaid, who were pressing for their money; and that the only way by which money could be procured to discharge all these debts was by selling a portion of the property inherited by Kunj Behari Lal. Not, be it observed, a particular estate, or interest in the whole or a portion of that property, but a portion of the property itself, part of the corpus as it were, if one may use that expression.

Now, it is plain that all those recitals touching the existing indebtedness of the executants and their predecessors could only have been introduced for the purpose of showing that the circumstances were such as to give to the executants the power to dispose of the absolute interest. The recitals were entirely otiose, serving no purpose whatever, if the intention and object of the parties were merely to dispose of the interest to which Rama Bibi would normally be entitled as the widow of her deceased husband. She could dispose of that interest whether debts existed or not. So that special pains are taken to set out in detail the facts and circumstances which remove every fetter from her power of disposition over the absolute interest.

It is next recited that the two executants have jointly and severally agreed to sell and convey all their full and existing rights in the two houses to the purchaser for the sum of Rs. 10,500 to be paid in cash; and that Phundo Bibi has joined as an executant by virtue of her position in the family for the additional guarantee of the vendee. Her right to maintenance was a liability affecting the absolute interest in every portion of the property left by Kunj Behari Lal. It might last beyond the life of Rama Bibi if Phundo Bibi outlived her; but the vendee, it was agreed, was to enjoy the property absolutely discharged from this latter liability for all time. By the operative granting part of the deed Rama Bibi in the first place sells, conveys, and transfers all her rights and interest in these two houses to the purchaser without any reservation. Then Phundo Bibi transfers to him her only right in the property, namely, her right to maintenence. And then the two ladies jointly proceed to sell and convey to him all their own existing right, title, and interest in, or belonging or appertaining to these two houses, including easements, and declare that from the execution of the deed thenceforth the purchaser shall be—

"the full owner and proprietor of the said houses in our stead, and shall own, possess, and enjoy them in the same way as we have been hitherto doing."

Then there follow two very significant provisions, first, that—

"as proof of the existing debts and the necessity of conveying the property for purposes aforesaid Sham Lal, the husband of Chandra Bibi" (the respondent) "has signed as one of the witnesses of the deed," and secondly, that—

"should at any time the said vendee or his heirs and representatives be deprived of the whole or part of the property conveyed by this deed, he or they would be entitled to recover the money in full or in part, as the case may be, from us and rest of our property."

That guarantee might not be of much value, but it contemplated a loss which might occur after the death of Rama Bibi. Well, the purchase-money was paid, the debts were discharged, and Sham Lal and the creditors of the male debtors, whose claims were paid, signed the deed as witnesses.

Thus every precaution which apparently occurred to the minds of the parties to the instrument or to those of their advisers was taken to show on the face of the document that circumstances existed which would empower Rama Bibi to dispose of the absolute interest in this property.

There can be no doubt, therefore, as to the object and intention of the parties to the transaction, and as to their view as to the meaning and effect of the language of the instrument. They all obviously intended that all the interest which the recited circumstances, true in themselves, empowered Rama Bibi to alienate should pass to the vendee, and it is equally plain that they thought that the effect of the instrument was to pass it to him.

The High Court seem to have attached little importance to some, if indeed not all, of the pregnant recitals which have been referred to. They took the two following passages from the granting part of the deed, first:—

"I, the said Rama Bibi, do hereby convey sell, and transfer all my rights and interest in the said houses which I inherited from my said deceased huband, Goshain Kunj Behari Lal."

And secondly—

"We . . . sell all our existing rights, title, and interests . . ."

as together with the declaration that the vendee—

"will be the full owner and proprietor of the said houses in our stead, and shall own, possess, and enjoy them in the same way as we have been hitherto doing."

They then proceed to say—

"These recitals" (as they erroneously style them) "show that the widow wa selling such rights as she had as widow, that is to say, her life-estate."

With all respect to the learned Judges of the High Court, their Lordships are quite unable to take that view. They think that the High Court fell into the very error which Lord Justice Knight Bruce, in the passage already quoted, stated should be guarded against in the construction of deeds between the people of India. They took the strict literal sense of the words in the passages referred to, and ignored the meaning which the parties to the transaction obviously attached to them. It is not quite accurate to describe the interest which a widow normally takes in immoveable property, which her husband inherits and leaves at his death, as a "life-estate."

In Chapter XX of Mr. Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 846, he lays it down that it is wholly incorrect so to describe her estate, and that it would be just as untrue to speak of the estate of a father under the Mitakshara Law as one for life.

"Hindu law," he says, "knows nothing of estates for life or in tail, or in fee. It measures estates not by duration but by use. The restrictions upon the use of an estate inherited by a woman are similar in kind to those which limit the powers of a male holder but different in degree. The distinctive feature of the estate is that, at her death, it reverts to the heirs of the last male owner."

And again at page 870:—

"It is not a life-estate, because, under certain circumstances, she can give an absolute and complete title. Nor is it in any sense an estate held in trust for the reversioners. Within the limits imposed upon her, the female holder has the most absolute powers of enjoyment."

If the circumstances existed which enabled her to dispose of that absolute interest, and she intended to dispose of it, the language of the instrument does not seem inadequate for the purpose.

Taking the deed as a whole and endeavouring to reconcile its various provisions the one with the other, giving effect as far as possible to each, their Lordships find nothing in its language constraining them to adopt a construction which would plainly defeat the object and intention of the contracting parties. They think the passages relied upon by the High Courts may well be construed as meaning to refer to the right to, and interest in, the property which Rama Bibi, as the widow of her deceased husband, had, in the particular circumstances of the case, power, for the purpose indicated, to sell and dispose of, that is, the absolute interest, and not as merely meaning to refer to the right and interest which a widow normally takes in the immoveable property which her husband owned at his death and leaves after him.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the decree appealed from was erroneous and should be reversed, that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored with costs throughout, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The respondent will pay the costs of this appeal.

Decree reversed.

Hindu Law—Adoption, suit to set aside—Plaintiff and his mother living together—Knowledge of plaintiff's mother, whether knowledge also of plaintiff—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 118.

Where both the plaintiff and his mother live together in the same house, his mother's knowledge as to the date of a certain adoption is also his knowledge for purposes of Article 118 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Nellore in Original Suit No. 44 of 1910.

FACTS.—One Narasiah died in 1889, leaving behind him his widow, the second defendant, and two daughters by another wife. One of the daughters adopted a son, and the widow also adopted one in pursuance of an authority given by her husband. The plaintiff, as the adopted son of the daughter and as reversioner to the estate of the deceased Narasiah, sues to set aside the adoption of the 1st defendant as having been made without authority. The District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation.

Mr. L. A. Govindaragava Iyer, for the Appellant:—The plaintiff knew of the adoption only in 1905 and as the suit was brought within six years from that date is not barred by limitation.

Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Respondents:—It is impossible that the plaintiff should not have known the adoption when he was living with his mother in the same house. The plaintiff further is more than 35 years of age and is also a Pleader's clerk. In these circumstances, knowledge of the fact of adoption ought to be imputed to him.

JUDGMENT.—We agree with the District Judge that the suit is clearly barred. The plaintiff's evidence that he came to know $3\frac{1}{2}$ years before suit is inconsistent with evidence of his mother, and the general evidence clearly shows that the plaintiff must have been aware that the 1st defendant was being put forward as the adopted son of his grandfather much more than six years before the institution of this suit.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Punjab Courts Act (IV of 1912), s. 41 (1) (c)—Second appeal—Finding of fact—Substantial error in procedure—Court overlooking material evidence—Consideration—Legal necessity.

RANZOR SINGH v. GAYAN.

A finding of fact arrived at by a lower Appellate Court can be assailed on second appeal only where it appears that in giving its decision the lower Appellate Court has not taken into consideration material evidence on the record and other material circumstances connected with the case. [p. 786, col. 1.]

In cases of old mortgages, where mortgagors have had subsequent opportunities of asserting want of consideration but expressly and impliedly admitted receipt of it in full, Courts will not expect mortgagees to give the same precise proof of payment and 'necessity' as in cases in which the transactions are of recent date.[p. 786, col. 2; p.787, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Ambala Division, dated the 14th October 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, third Class, Ambala, dated the 8th August 1912, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Brij Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit is part of a larger area that was mortgaged by registered deed for Rs. 1,200 to the plaintiff on 28th May 1895. This portion (8 bighas 3 biswas) was in the personal possession of defendant No. 2, the rest being in possession of tenants who have all along attorned to plaintiff. The cause of action is said to be the fact that defendant No. 2 stopped paying rent and refused to vacate. The Munsif gave a decree for possession, whereupon defendants appealed to the Divisional Court, which remanded for further inquiry and report. The Munsif inquired and reported that the mortgage was for consideration and "necessity" and that defendant No. 1, regarding whose age there was some doubt, was certainly adult. The lower Appellate Court, however, took the view that passing of consideration was not proved, and so, holding that there was no legal mortgage, it dismissed the suit with costs throughout.

The second appeal here can succeed only under clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 41 of the Courts Act, for the decision of the lower Appellate Court is essentially based on a finding of fact pure and simple, and I have, therefore, to see whether plaintiff's complaint that the learned Divisional Judge has gravely erred by overlooking material evidence present on the record is justified.

The consideration (Rs. 1,200) is thus stated in the deed;—

	Rs.
To be paid to Gopi, previous mortgagee, and "others"	905
Paid to Chamela (one of the mortgagors) a week earlier	125
To be paid before Sub Registrar ...	145
Costs of conveyance	25

The learned Divisional Judge finds that Rs. 600 were due to, and paid to Gopi, that Rs. 145 is not certified as having been paid before the Sub-Registrar, that the alleged payment of Rs. 400 to one Dina, said to be a creditor, unsupported by any receipt or proof of indebtedness, must be rejected, that the Rs. 125 item, not being evidenced by receipt and being a priori improbable, cannot be allowed.

To meet this Mr. Sundar Das points to the proof on the record that Rs. 400 was in fact paid to Dina, to the fact that at mutatation Chamela admitted receipt of full consideration and to the still more important fact that on 31st August 1900, Chamela and Nathu (defendant No. 2) executed an additional mortgage-deed on the same land for Rs. 531 making no protest that full consideration had not been paid on the previous mortgage. He also urged that possession should have been accorded against the money that actually did pass, but this is contrary to all authority [e. g., Khaira v. Maula (1)] (Nathu was probably a minor in 1900, but we are not concerned with that here).

Now there is no question that the payment of Rs. 125 and Rs. 145 is not directly proved, and the evidence of payment of Rs. 400 to Dina is weak; and there remains only consideration of the weight to be given to the admission by Chamela at mutation and the indirect admission in 1900. As the learned Divisional Judge has not taken these matters into account at all, I am at liberty to do so, adding also the apparently uncontested facts that for all these years the tenants aforesaid have attorned to plaintiff and that for many years mortgagors paid rent for the land now in suit. It has been frequently ruled by this Court that, after the lapse of many years—17 in the pesent case specially where mortgagors have had subsequent opportunities of asserting want of consideration and have expressly and impliedly admitted receipt of it in full, Courts will not expect mortgagees to give the same precise proof of payment and "necessity" as in cases in which the transactions are of recent date. In my opinion, in the present case the conduct of parties since 1895 more than outweighs all deficiencies in the direct evidence and I cannot agree with the lower Appellate Court when he talks about defendants falling 'into the mouth of a shark." I can see no sufficient reason for doubting that the whole transaction was a perfectly ordinary and honest one.

For these reasons, interfering on the ground that the lower Appellate Court has committed a substantial error in procedure in ignoring patent facts and in ignoring the principles established by this Court for dealing with cases of old alienations, I allow this appeal and set aside the lower Appellate Court's judgment and decree, and grant to plaintiff a decree in full with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

COXE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain land that was sold in execution of a decree against one Harnandan Thakur in May 1900. It was purchased ostensibly by the defendant, Jadu Nandan Thakur. The plaintiff is the heir of one Rajbati, the sister of Jadunandan, and his case is that Jadunandan purchased the property with Rajbati's money and on her behalf, and that she remained in possession till her death in January 1906, since when the defendants are in possession. The 2nd defendant is said to have purchased a portion of the property from Jadunandan in June 1904, in full knowledge that Jadunandan was merely a farzidar. The defence is that Jadunandan bought the property himself.

The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit, holding that it is barred by section 66 of the Code, and also that Jadunandan was the real purchaser. The plaintiff appeals.

Against Shia Thakur, the 2nd defendant, the plaintiff has, in my opinion, no case whatever. There is no evidence worth a moment's consideration that Shia had any reason to think that Jadunandan was not the real purchaser. Bhaya Singh, an important witness for the plaintiff, admits that Shia Thakur has been in possession since his purchase, which was $1\frac{1}{2}$ years before Rajbati's death. Learned Counsel contended that Rajbati, being a pardanashin, could not be estopped from pleading that the ostensible owner was not the true owner, unless it was shown that everything had been explained to her. This seems to me an untenable contention. To accept it would be equivalent to holding that, though a purchaser is not bound to inquire whether his vendor is the benamidar for another man, he is bound to ascertain whether or not he is the benamidar of a woman. This is evidently unreasonable.

As regards Jadunandan I feel no hesitation in holding that the suit is barred by section 66 of the Code and, therefore, need not examine the question whether Jadunandan was or was not the real purchaser. But I may say that I incline to the belief that the Subordinate Judge's view of the facts is correct. Learned Counsel has subjected the defendant's case to powerful criticism, but clearly the whole burden of proof rests on the plaintiff. It is argued that there is a discrepancy between the defendant's pleading and his proof. In the first he asserts that he bought the property himself, whereas in his evidence he says that he obtained the money from his brother with whom he lives in commensality. This does not seem to me of very much importance, especially when it is remembered that the defendant's case is that the sale certificate is conclusive. It is contended also that as Jadunandan was Rajbati's mukhtear, the burden of proving the good faith of all transactions between them rests on him. But it is open to doubt whether the power-of-attorney authorised Jadunandan to purchase property for Rajbati or to manage her estates, and in any case we have not to decide what was the character of a transaction between them; but whether there was any transaction between them or not. No real explanation has been given why Rajbati should want to buy his property which is many miles away from her home. It can hardly have been with a view to enrich the estate, because that had to descend to the plaintiff with whom she had quarrelled. The reason assigned in the evidence, namely, that she wanted to restore it to the judgment-debtor who was her kinsman, would have appealed with equal strength to her brother, Jadunandan.

As I have said, however, the suit is, in my opinion, barred by section 66 of the Code, which lays down that no suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims. Now here the defendant certainly claims under a certified purchase and the suit is based on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest. Learned Counsel contends that the plaintiff also sues on the ground that Rajbati remained in possession till her death and relies on the decision in Sasti Churn Nundi v. Anopurna (1), which certainly is in his favour.

If the decision quoted is correct, it makes a very serious inroad on the section, and indeed I do not think it would be going too far to say that, if it is accepted, the section is for all practical intents and purposes repealed. The section is clearly aimed at benami purchases at execution sales. We have no need of a specific provision of law that a suit against a real purchaser, based on a false allegation that he is a benamidar, must fail. The clear intention of the section is to stop benami purchases by making it impossible for the real owner to question the benamidar's title. It is sometimes said that the Legislature cannot have intended to enable fraud to be practised. But I cannot attach any other meaning to the section than this, that it aims at discouraging benamis by rendering the real purchaser helpless if he is cheated by his benamidars.

Now if the view taken in the case cited above is correct, namely, that the real purchaser can base a suit against his benamidar on the fact of possession, it is evident that the section at once loses all its effect. The purchase being ex hypothesi a benami purchase, the real purchaser would naturally get possession in every case, so that the only cases in which the section would be of any practical use would be those rare instances in which the parties quarrel immediately, even before possession is delivered. It can never have been the intention of the Legislature to enact the section for this limited purpose.

I agree with the decision in Bishan Dial v. Ghazi-ud-Din (2). It is not necessary, however, to refer the decision in Sasti Churn Nundi v. Anopurna (1) to a Full Bench, because the present case can be distinguished, as the trial Judge has pointed out, though it must be conceded that the distinction is somewhat unreal. Reading paragraph 7 of the plaint it cannot be disputed that this suit was brought "on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims."

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. Defendant No. 2 is entitled to separate costs.

SHARF-UD DIN, J.—I agree.

In the memorandum of appeal, we are informed that the value of the appeal has been put down as Rs. 2,249-8-6, which is a mistake for Rs. 6,005.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 120, 125—Custom—Alienation by widow—Occupancy rights, creation of—Suit for declaration that creation of occupancy rights by widow was invalid—Limitation, starting point of.

Article 125, and not Article 120, of the Limitation Act, applies to a suit for a declaration that a creation of occupancy rights by a widow is invalid as against reversionary rights of the plaintiff and the period of limitation for such a suit begins when occupancy rights are created. [p. 789, col. 2.]

A subsequent and belated objection in partition proceedings as to the partition of the occupancy holding does not give a fresh period of limitation. [p. 790, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur Division, dated the 17th May 1913, confirming that of the Munsif, first Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 26th October 1912, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are very simple. The husbands of Mussammats Murto and Gaurju died some time prior to 1879 and in that year the widows' names were recorded in the Revenue papers in the ownership column. In 1882 the widows appeared before the Revenue Authorities and stated that they had made their brother Hira an occupancy tenant and desired that the alienation in his favour should be recorded. It would appear that notice was issued and proclamation made, but that as no one came forward to object mutation was effected in Hira's name. In 1911 Hira appeared before the Revenue Authorities and had his two brothers' names added to his own as occupancy tenants and subsequently he, his brothers and Musammat Murto applied for partition of the land in their possession. Plaintiffs, who are the reversioners of Musammat Murto and Musammat Gaurju and also co-sharers in part of the land in dispute, objected to the partition proceedings on the ground apprently that Hira was not occupancy tenant of the land. The Revenue Officer decided, under section 117 of the Land Revenue Act, not to proceed with the partition proceedings until the question of Hira's right to the property had been determined by a competent Court, whereupon plaintiffs instituted the present suit for a declaratory decree in the Court of the Extra Assistant Settlement Officer who tried it as a Munsif, first Class. It is quite clear from the objection raised by plaintiff before the Revenue Officer in the partition proceedings, from the pleadings and issues in the present case, from the judgment of the Munsif and from the decree granted by him and accepted without demur by the plaintiffs, that all parties as well as the Court itself regarded the suit as one for a declaration that the creation of occupancy rights by the widows in 1882 in favour of Hira was invalid. Regarded in this light there can be no possible doubt that the suit is barred under Article 125 of the Limitation Act, and I am quite unable to follow the officiating Divisional Judge when he holds without any discussion that the Article applicable is Article 120 and that the time when right to sue accrued was the date when Hira applied for partition. In my opinion the suit as laid, as understood by everybody in the Courts below, was clearly barred by time. Mr. Sheo Narain for the respondents seeing this difficulty has argued that the claim was really one for a declaration that Hira, as the person in whose favour occupancy rights had been created by a widow merely holding for life, was not entitled to claim partition. This is an ingenious attempt to get over the difficulty, but I cannot allow the whole aspect of the case to be thus changed in second appeal.

I accordingly hold that the suit was barred under Article 125 and accepting the appeal, I set aside the orders of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—The point in contest in this litigation is whether in a Dayabhaga family, the great-grandfather's son's daughter's son or the maternal uncle is to be preferred. The proposition only has to be stated to make one realize what an amount of learning and industry the problem might demand. We have had the advantage of having the position of the maternal uncle advocated before us by one who is worthily following in the steps of his distinguished father and we can say; much as we regret the absence of Babu Golap, we do not feel we have suffered anything in view of the argument that has been addressed to us.

Undoubtedly there are, as Babu Rishendra Nath Sarkar has brought clearly to our notice, a number of considerations that might be brought into play were the matter untouched by authority. But a Full Bench of this Court, as far back as Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose (1), came to a conclusion as to the principle of succession in a Dayabhaga family which really governs this case. It has been treated as governing cases of a similar description by other distinguished Judges, whom I name in this particular connection merely because they are Judges who would be particularly familiar with and interested in the question. The learned Judges are Mr. Justice Guru Das Banerji, Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea. And they one and all have felt that it is not for this Court, at any rate, to question the propriety of that Full Bench decision. In the case of Kailash Chandra Adhikary v. Karuna Natha Chowdhury (2) the contesting parties were in the precise position, curiously enough, of those who are now litigating before us, that is to say, the contest there was as here: between the great-grandfather's son's daughter's son and the maternal uncle. There it was decided in favour of the great-grandfather's son's daughter's son. And I see no ground on which we can refuse to follow that ruling. The learned Vakil in the course of his argument before us has done his best to depreciate the value of the maxim stare decises. But that is an argument that must be addressed to a higher authority and not to this Court.

(2) 19 Ind. Cas. 677; 18 C. W. N. 477.

There was another argument advanced before us, namely, that the possession of Tulsi was such that her existence offers a complete bar against the suit. But that was a point not taken in the lower Courts, nor in the original grounds of appeal here. It was a very late development. But obviously the basis of that argument involves an investigation into facts on which it is beyond our competence to embark. We cannot, therefore, give effect to it.

As to the first point our decision, in obedience to the authorities, is that the plaintiff who claims under the great-grandfather's son's daughter's son is entitled to succeed. This is in accordance with the view of the learned Subordinate Judge and the Munsif.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

N. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree that the principle of succession governing this case must be taken to have been settled by the Full Bench decision in Goo.oo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose (1). The particular point raised in this case was decided in the case reported as Kailash Chandra Adhikary v. Karuna Natha Chowdhury (2) and I see no reason to alter the opinion which I expressed in that case.

Appeal dismissed.

Miss HAMILTON—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

SHANKAR DAS—PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution—Money-decree—Attachment before judgment—Deposit in Court—Decree in favour of 3rd parties against judgment-debtor—Subsequent decree-holders, whether can attach money deposited in Court—First decree-holder's lien.

The plaintiff in an action for money against one K got his property attached before judgment. Later, he obtained a decree, but its execution was stayed on the application of the judgment-debtor pending the decision of the appeal. Subsequently, with the consent of the parties the Court modified its order allowing K to sell the property on condition that after paying off the debts etc., he paid the remainder into Court as security for the decree against him. It was subsequently discovered that another creditor had a mortgage in his favour on the estate and in consequence of this both the parties arrived at a fresh agreement, the terms of which were embodied in an application to the Court signed by both the parties which stated specifically that the plaintiff should have a first lien on the balance for the sum for which he may ultimately get a decree. This application was granted and the property sold. The plaintiff then filed cross-objections asking for a further sum and increased interest from the date of the institution of the suit. Ultimately the judgment-debtor's appeal was dismissed and the cross-objections partially accepted by the Chief Court.

During the pendency of the appeal the defendant obtained a money decree against K and attached the money paid by him into Court as security. The plaintiff objected, but the executing Court ordered rateable distribution. The plaintiff then sued for a declaration that he was entitled to payment in preference to the other decree-holders:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff was fully justified in bringing the declaratory suit; [p. 792, col. 2.]

(2) that the money was deposited by K and accepted by the Chief Court as security for the due performance of such decree as might ultimately be binding upon him and the defendant by attaching the money before the date of the final decree in favour of the plaintiff did not prejudicially affect the latter's rights. [p. 793, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Lahore, dated the 24th of February 1913, decreeing plaintiff's claim.

Mr. B. Bevan Petman, for the Appellant.

Lala Durga Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case, so far as they are relevant to the matter in controversy in this appeal and the connected Appeal No. 1160 of 1913, are as follows. The respondent, Shankar Das, brought an action in 1903 for Rs. 21,589-7-6 against Mrs. Kennelly and got the Charing Cross Hotel, the property of the defendant, attached before judgment. On the 10th of April 1909 he obtained a decree for Rs. 6,132-13-6 with future interest and costs against Mr. Kennelly, the son and heir of Mrs. Kennelly, who had died during the pendency of the suit, and on the 9th of June 1909 the judgment-debtor preferred an appeal against that decree to the Chief Court and applied for stay of execution thereof pending the decision of the appeal. The prayer for the stay of execution was granted by the Chief Court on the 9th of June 1910 and the building of the hotel was accepted as security for the decretal amount and the judgment-debtor was prohibited from making an alienation of it.

It appears that in September of that year Mr. Kennelly received an offer from Mr. Faletti for the sale of the property and applied to the Chief Court for permission to sell it and stated that "he is ready to deposit in the Court of the District Judge, Lahore, the amount of the decree in dispute as security if the sale takes place."

With the consent of the parties the Court, in modification of its order dated the 9th June 1910, passed on the 10th of September 1910 an order allowing Mr. Kennelly to sell the estate to Mr. Faletti for Rs. 1,90,000, on condition that Mr. Kennelly after paying the debt due to the mortgagee and retaining Rs. 5,000 for his private purposes, paid "the remainder of the sale-money into this Court as security for the decree against him." It was subsequently discovered that another creditor had a mortgage in his favour on the estate and it was in consequence of this and other reasons that Shankar Das and Mr. Kennelly arrived at a fresh arrangement by which after paying off the debt due to the mortgagees and certain other creditors and retaining Rs. 8,800 for his own expenses, Mr. Kennelly agreed to deposit the balance, Rs. 26,141-12-3, in the Chief Court. The terms of the agreement were embodied in an application presented to this Court on the 16th of September 1910 and it is noteworthy that this application, which is signed by both the parties, states specifically that Shankar Das shall have a first lien on that amount for the sum for which he may get a decree in the Chief Court. The Court granted the application, varied its order of the 10th of September 1910, and allowed Mr. Kennelly to sell the property in accordance with the terms of the agreement. Four days later, Mr. Kennelly deposited in the Chief Court the above-mentioned sum and on the 8th of October 1910 Shankar Das preferred cross-objections against the decree of the District Judge asking for a further sum of Rs. 15 770-2-11 and increased interest from the date of the institution of the suit. The Division Bench, who heard the appeal and the cross-objections, decided on the 1st of July 1912 that the appeal be dismissed and accepting the cross-objections partially, they passed a decree for Rs. 17,555 in favour of Shankar Das.

During the pendency of the appeal in the Chief Court and after the order dated the 16th of September 1910, Miss Hamilton and Mrs. Daly instituted suits against Mr. Kennelly and each obtained a simple money-decree for the sum due to her. In execution of her decree Miss Hamilton attached on the 28th of June 1912, four days before the decree of the Chief Court in favour of Shankar Das, the money paid by Mr. Kennelly into the Court. Shankar Das objected to this attachment and the executing Court decided on the 28th of October 1912 that the money be distributed rateably among the three decree-holders. Dissatisfied with this order, Shankar Das brought on that very day the present action, alleging that the money constituted security for the satisfaction of the decree passed in his favour by the Chief Court, and asked the Subordinate Judge to give him a declaration that he was entitled to payment in full in preference to the other decree-holders. The Court of first instance has decreed this claim and against its decision Miss Hamilton and Mrs. Daly have preferred separate appeals Nos. 514 and 1160 of 1913, respectively, which will both be disposed of by this judgment.

As regards the form of the suit, we may state at once that the plaintiff-respondent was fully justified in bringing a declaratory suit. On the 28th of October, when the action was commenced, the whole of the money was in deposit in Court and consequently the plaintiff's obvious remedy was to seek a declaration in the manner he has done. The mere fact that the defendants have during the pendency of the suit taken away a part of the deposit does not affect the plaintiff's remedy, more especially when we find that the money still in deposit is sufficient to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff.

Upon the merits, the determination of the appeals rests upon the contract entered into between Shankar Das and Kennelly on the 16th of September 1909. There is no doubt whatever that the hotel was released from attachment and the decree obtained by Shankar Das was stayed upon Kennelly depositing the balance of the money as security, and the question for decision is whether the money so deposited was to constitute security for such sum, not exceeding the amount decreed by the District Judge, as may be found due to Shankar Das by the Appellate Court, or for any amount irrespective of that limit which the Court of Appeal may decree in his favour. In support of the former alternative, which is the contention urged by the learned Counsel for the appellants, we have the fact that on the day of the deposit there was before the Court only the appeal instituted by Kennelly and Shankar Das had not yet filed his cross-objections, and the further fact that if Kennelly had deposited in Court the amount decreed against him by the original Court, he would have got his property released from attachment and Shankar Das could not have insisted upon the deposit of a larger amount. But we are concerned, not with what might have been done by Kennelly, but with what was actually done by him. Now it is absolutely clear that on the 16th of September neither of the appellants, who obtained their decrees subsequently, had any right to the balance of the price of the hotel and it is beyond dispute that Kennelly, subject to the rights of Shankar Das, had an absolute power of disposal over it and could give it to anybody he liked. To understand the intention of the parties in making the deposit we have got the evidence of Mr. B. Petman, Barrister-at-Law, to the effect that before the date of the deposit Shankar Das had decided to file cross-objections against the decree granted to him by the District Judge and that it was for this reason that Kennelly's claim to take all the money over and above the sum required to satisfy the decree then under appeal was resisted by Shankar Das. The result was that the two came to terms and Kennelly paid into the Court the sum specified above which, it is to be noted, greatly exceeds the amount payable by him in pursuance of the decree of the District Judge and is nearly equal to what would have been the total amount of Shankar Das's claim as laid in the plaint with future interest and costs. A perusal of the application presented by both the contracting parties to the Chief Court on 16th of September 1910 shows that Mr. Kennelly agreed "that the balance Rs. 26,141-12-3 be paid into the Chief Court, Punjab, and that Lala Shankar Das have a first lien on the same for the sum or which he may get a decree in the Chief Court and this will be looked upon and shall constitute a first charge." Ex facie this document is a valid contract between the parties and it fully supports the contention of the respondents that the deposit was to be security, not only for the amount decreed by the District Judge, but also for any sum by which that decree may be enhanced by the Chief Court at the instance of the respondent. This view receives support from the facts which we have set out in the preceding paragraph and which afford the only possible explanation of the payment into Court by Kennelly of a sum far in excess of the amount awarded to the plaintiff by the Court of first instance. It will be observed that the language of the application is in accordance with the terms of Order XLI, rule 5 (3) (c), which deals with the stay of execution by the Appellate Court during the pendency of the appeal.

We have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the money was deposited by Mr. Kennelly and accepted by the Chief Court as security for due performance of such decree as may ultimately be binding upon him, and it seems to us clear that Miss Hamilton by attaching the money before the date of the final decree in favour of the respondent did not prejudicially affect his rights. The attachment did not and could not render nugatory the contract of security entered into between Kennelly and Shankar Das and in law it operated upon such sum as was in excess of the amount decreed by the Chief Court. This principle is perfectly clear and if any authority is needed, we would refer to the observations in a judgment of this Court reported as Kanwar Hira Singh v. David Parkes Masson (1).

It follows from the above discussion that the Court of first instance was quite right in deciding the suit in favour of the plaintiff. We accordingly affirm its judgment and decree and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Redemption, right of—Plaintiff, whether compelled to set up prior mortgage against his Will.

One K S was the owner of a certain zemindari. One of the four sons of K S mortgaged a one-fourth share to the father of R, the defendant, on the 7th of December 1877. On July 27th, 1877, the whole property was usufructuarily mortgaged by the four sons to Z. The entire consideration of Z's mortgage went towards satisfying a decree for sale obtained on a previous mortgage of 1872. The plaintiffs, having acquired certain shares in the equity of redemption from some of the descendants of K S, redeemed the entire mortgage from Z. R brought a suit on her father's mortgage and she impleaded only the son of her mortgagor and also Z, but not the present plaintiffs. She obtained a decree for sale of the one-fourth share and purchased it herself. The plaintiffs then brought the present suit for redemption of the mortgage of December 7th, 1877:

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem the mortgage of the 7th of December 1877 and that whatever rights Z or the plaintiffs, as her successors-in-interest, might hold in respect of the mortgage of 1872, these were not rights which the plaintiffs could be compelled to set up or to exercise against their will and that the possible existence of such rights did not affect the position of the plaintiffs as mortgagees subsequent to the defendant. [p. 795, col. 1.]

Held, further, that R as auction-purchaser of the equity of redemption, had a right of redemption. [p. 795, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 14th February 1914.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sowhny, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The somewhat complicated facts out of which this second appeal arises are fully given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The essential point in issue admits of being briefly stated. There was a certain zamindari property belonging to a family descended from one Khuwat Singh. A one-fourth share in this zamindari property was mortgaged by one of the four sons of the said Khuwat Singh to the father of Musammat Rampiyari, the present defendant-appellant. The date of this mortgage was December 7th, 1877. On July 27th, 1887, the whole o the property in question was mortgaged by the four sons of Khuwat Singh, with possession, to one Musammat Zaibunnisa. The plaintiffs in the present suit acquired certain shares in the equity of redemption from some of the descendants of Khuwat Singh and on the strength of this acquisition, have redeemed the entire mortgage in favour of Musammat Zaibunnisa, and have apparently obtained possession. Subsequently Musammat Rampiyari brought a suit on her father's mortgage of December 7th, 1877, in which she impleaded only the son of her mortgagor, and also Musammat Zaibunnisa, who had at the time no interest in the property in question, as her mortgage had been paid off. She did not implead the present plaintiffs. She got a decree for sale in respect of the one-fourth share covered by her mortgage, brought that share to sale and purchased it herself. Whether she has or has not succeeded in obtaining effective possession of this one-fourth share as against the plaintiffs is not clear from the pleadings on the evidence in the case. The present suit is by the plaintiffs for redemption of the mortgage of December 7th, 1877, in favour of Musammat Rampiyari's father. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, but has been decreed on appeal. In both the Courts below the only point actually decided was a very narrow one. It appears that the entire consideration of Musammat Zaibunnisa's mortgage of July 27th, 1887, went towards satisfying a decree for sale which had been obtained on a previous mortgage, affecting the entire property of Khuwat Singh, executed on April 16th, 1872. Musammat Rampiyari contends that the plaintiffs have succeeded to the rights of Musammat Zaibunnisa in respect of her mortgage of July 16th, 1872. The argument is that Musammat Zaibunnisa could have held up this prior mortgage as a shield in any suit brought against her in respect of her mortgage of July 27th, 1887, that she was, therefore, in effect a prior mortgagee as compared with the father of Musammat Rampiyari and not a subsequent mortgagee. I agree with the learned District Judge that, whatever rights Musammat Zaibunnisa, or the plaintiffs as her successors-in-interest, might held in respect of the mortgage of July 16th, 1872, these were not rights which the plaintiffs could be compelled to set up or to exercise against their Will. The possible existence of such rights does not, therefore, affect the position of these plaintiffs as mortgagees subsequent to the defendant-appellant. Had they been impleaded in the suit brought by the latter on her father's mortgage, they would not have been bound to set up any claim in respect of the mortgage of July 16th, 1872, and they might have been content to exercise the right of redemption which they possess as subsequent mortgagees under the deed of July 27th, 1887. They were deprived of this option by not being impleaded as defendants in the suit for sale brought by Musammat Rampiyari. I hold, therefore, that these plaintiffs possess an existing right of redemption in respect of the mortgage of December 7th, 1877, which they are entitled to exercise, as they claim to do, in the present suit.

The memorandum of appeal to this Court raises a further point, about which I feel considerable difficulty. Musammat Rampyari's present position is not merely that of a mortgagee under the deed of December 7th, 1877, but she is also the purchaser of the equity of redemption in respect of the share affected by that mortgage. The transfer of the equity of redemption by the auction sale under which Rampiyari purchased was effected behind the backs of the present plaintiffs, and could not deprive them of the right of redemption which they possess as subsequent mortgagees. It was, however, an effective transfer qua the rights of the mortgagor, just as much as if the mortgagor had sold his equity of redemption to the prior mortgagee by a private sale behind the back of the subsequent mortgagees. I have no doubt, therefore, that the defendant-appellant, Musammat Rampiyari, has a right of redemption as against the plaintiffs-respondents. In Hassanbhai v. Umaji (1), in a case strongly analogous to the present one, the High Court in second appeal passed a decree which had the effect of giving the prior mortgagee, who had acquired the equity of redemption, a first option of redeeming the subsequent mortgages, even while asserting the right of the subsequent mortgagees to redeem the prior mortgage, if the holder of the equity of redemption failed to redeem them. The difficulty I feel about passing a similar decree in the present case is in the main a practical one, arising out of the state of the pleadings and the evidence. It is true that, in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of her written statement, Musammat Rampiyari did plead her rights as a purchaser of the equity of redemption. She went on to assert that the present suit had only been brought in order to anticipate a suit for redemption which she herself was about to institute against the present plaintiffs. She did not, however, proceed to claim any sort of alternative relief on the strength of these pleadings, apart from the dismissal of the plaintiffs' suit altogether. Something must have been said about the point in argument in the Court of first instance, for the learned Munsif fixed an issue in the following terms: "Can the plaintiffs or the defendant No. 1 get any relief in this case?" No evidence was led by either party to show the amount that would be due to the plaintiffs for the redemption of Musammat Zaibunnissa's mortgage, beyond the fact that the sum actually paid to Musammat Zaibunnissa by the plaintiffs-respondents was Rs. 1,000. Whether there were any costs of redemption which the plaintiffs would be entitled to add to this amount is not apparent from the record. Moreover, no question was raised in the Courts below, or has been gone into, as to whether the integrity of the mortgage in favour of Musammat Zaibunnissa has been so broken up as to entitle Musammat Rampiyari to redeem a one-fourth share of the property affected by that mortgage on payment of one-fourth of the mortgage-debt. Some argument has been addressed to me on the questions of law involved; but I doubt whether the materials on the record are sufficient to enable me to decide them. A question of limitation might perhaps arise, in view of the fact that the plaintiffs paid off the whole of Musammat Zaibunnissa's mortgage at a time when they only held a fractional share in the equity of redemption, and they would consequently become the holders of a charge in respect of the shares in the equity of redemption which do not belong to them, including, of course, the share of the mortgagor whose rights have been acquired by Musammat Rampiyari. Under all the circumstances I do not think that the right of Musammat Rampiyari, as owner of the equity of redemption, to redeem from the plaintiffs-respondents, either the whole of the property covered by the mortgage of July 27th, 1887, or a one-fourth share in the same on payment of a proportionate fraction of the consideration, can properly or conveniently be determined in the present suit. I, therefore, content myself with dismssing the appeal and I do so accordingly with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 11, rules under —Jurisdiction of Court — Waiver—Consent—Valuation of suit.

The valuation of a suit, for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of a certain land assessed with land revenue for purposes of jurisdiction is governed by rules framed under the Suits Valuation Act, and the plaintiff cannot fix an arbitrary valuation and make the suit cognizable by a Court of a particular grade.

Neither waiver nor consent of parties can confer upon a Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit which is beyond its pecuniary limits. The fact that the defendant did not object to the jurisdiction of the Court does not validate the proceedings.

Petition, under section 70 (a) of Act XVIII of 1884 as amended by Act XXV of 1899, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 1st August 1914, confirming that of the Munsif, first Class, Mianwali, dated the 30th April 1914, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

Pandit Ram Bhaj Datta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing Counsel on both sides I have arrived at the conclusion that the Munsif had not the jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit and that all the proceedings in his Court are ultra vires and must be set aside. It appears from the patwari's jard filed by the plain iff with her plaint that land revenue assessed on the land is Rs. 46-11-0, and it is clear that the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is more than Rs. 1,000. It is true that in the plaint the value for purposes of jurisdiction was fixed at Rs. 1,000 and that this valuation was not objected to by the defendant-petitioner in his written statement; Mr. Ram Bhaj Datta for the respondent argues that as the defendant impliedly admitted the valuation put upon the suit by the plaintiff he should not be allowed to allege in the Court of Revision that that valuation was wrong. This contention I am unable to accept. It is a well-established principle of law that neither waiver nor consent of parties can confer upon a Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit which is beyond its pecuniary limits. In this case I have no doubt that the suit was beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif.

The provisions of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act have obviously no application to the circumstances of the case.

It has been laid down in several judgments, vide, inter alia, Gunga Sahai v. Sheo Lal (1) and Khuda Yar v. Wahab Din (2), that that section applies to cases in which the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction depends upon the parties or the Court, and not to cases where the valuation is determined by rules having the force of law. In the case before me the rules framed under the Suits Valuation Act determine the value for jurisdiction and neither the parties, nor the Court, has any discretion in the matter.

In fact the learned Pleader for the respondents does not rely upon section 11 and I have no doubt that it is wholly inapplicable to the case.

I am accordingly constrained to hold that the proceedings of the Munsif, the order of reference made by him and the award of arbitrator are coram non judice and must be set aside. The application for revision is, therefore, accepted and the Court of first instance is directed to return the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. As the objection to jurisdiction was not taken in the Court of first instance, I direct the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 2 —Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 29, Sch. I, Art. 116—Arrears of rent, suit to recover—Agricultural land, lease of, for agricultural purposes—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 107.

In a suit for arrears of rent the rent that was in arrears and was sued for, was for the year 1313 B. S. under a first kabuliat, and for the years 1313-1318 B. S. under a second kabuliat. The defendant's estate was taken charge of by the Court of Wards on the 11th November 1903, and whilst his estate was under their charge the Collector gave an acknowledgment in writing on the 20th September 1910 with respect to the rent now sued for:

Held, per Fletcher, J., that the rent sued for the year 1313 was barred by limitation, as the case came under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the leases were found to have been granted for agricultural purposes. [p. 798, col. 1.]

The Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to leases of agricultural land which are not for agricultural purposes. [p. 798, col. 1.]

Umrao Bibi v. Mahomed Rojabi, 27 C. 205; 4 C. W. N. 76; Burna Moyi Dassee v. Burna Moyi Chowdhurani, 23 C. 191, Promotho Nath Mitter v. Kali Prasanna Chowdhry, 28 C. 744, referred to.

Per Richardson, J.—Where a lease relates to agricultural land but is not a lease for agricultural purposes, it is clearly governed by the Transfer of Property Act. Such a lease can only be made under section 107 by a registered instrument [p. 798, col. 2.]

Where a lease appears to be in substance a temporary lease granted to a rent-farmer or middleman and relates to agricultural lands, there is no question of any conflict between the Bengal Tenancy Act and the Transfer of Property Act or of applying any provision of the latter Act. [p. 799, col. 1.]

Section 29 of the Limitation Act contains a saving clause in regard to special and local laws. [p. 799, col. 1.]

Whether a lease of agricultural land is or is not a lease for agricultural purposes the Bengal Tenancy Act applies, and the period of limitation applicable is that provided by that Act. [p. 799, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, First Court, Bhagalpur, dated the 28th of April 1913.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Prosad Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—The only question raised in this appeal is whether the period of limitation for a portion of the claim is governed by Article 2 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act or Article 116 of the Indian Limitation Act. The suit was brought to recover arrears of rent due under two kabuliats. The first kabuliat was dated the 23rd of May 1902 and was given in respect of certain properties leased to the defendant for a term of four years (1310-1313) at a rent of Rs. 1,200, per annum. The second kabuliat was dated the 15th of January 1906 and was given in respect of certain other properties leased to the defendant for a term of eight years (1313-1320) at a rent of Rs. 438 a year.

The rent that was in arrears and was sued for was for the year 1313 under the first kabuliat and under the second kabuliat for the years 1313 to 1318. The defendant's estate was taken charge of by the Court of Wards on the 11th November 1908, and whilst his estate was under their charge the Collector gave an acknowledgment in writing on the 20th September 1910 with respect to the rent now sued for.

The only question, therefore, that arises is with reference to the rent due for the year 1313, for if the period of limitation applicable to the present suit is that provided under Article 2 of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act then when the Collector gave the acknowledgment in writing on the 20th September 1910, the rent for the year 1313 was already barred by limitation. The leases in the present cases are expressed to be mustajiri leases. Although a mus'a-giri lease is sometimes and perhaps usually a lease to middleman, yet in Behar the term is applied frequently to temporary leases instead of the word thika (see Land Law of Bengal by S. C. Mitra). The two clauses in the lease that are chiefly relied upon are first the words: "I the mustajir shall enjoy the parti land which may be converted into culturable land in the jamabandi of the mouza, which may be increased till the terms of this Settlement." The translation is not a very happy one, but the meaning seems to be that the tenant may either cultivate the waste land or let it out to tenants and enjoy the increased rental.

The words relied on by the respondent to this appeal are: "Be it known that in the said mouzas you the proprietors have no kamat land," that is, lands in the possession of the zemindars.

Now the Bengal Tenancy Act does not define the classes of leases to which the Act applies. The local extent of the Act is given in section 1 (3) of the Act. It has, however, always been held that the Act only applies to agricultural land. A class of cases, however, has grown up in the Courts to the effect that the Act does not apply to leases of agricultural land which are not for agricultural purposes [see Umrao Bibi v. Mahomed Rojabi (1)].

The case of Promotho Nath Mitter v. Kali Prasanna Chowdhry (2) was much relied on in argument. The remarks of Maclean, C. J., in that case are only to the effect that a putni was not a lease for agricultural purposes, and, therefore, the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act applied as to the merger of the putni on its being purchased. That some of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, viz., those as to the period of limitation provided by the Act for recovering arrears of rent from the patnidar, apply had already been decided in this Court in the case of Burna Moyi Dassee v. Burna Moyi Chowdhurani (3). That case remains unaffected by any subsequent decision of this Court. If the period of limitation provided by the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to arrears of putni rent, it must also apply to the leases in the present suit even if we accept the construction placed on those leases by the Vakil for the plaintiffs. I think, however, that the leases in the present case, even apart from the decision in Burna Moyi Dassee's case (3), come under the Bengal Tenancy Act. One of the purposes for which the leases were granted was to authorise the defendant to bring under cultivation the waste land which, I think, is obviously an "agricultural purpose."

That being so, I think that the rent sued for the year 1313 is barred by limitation. The decree of the lower Court must be varied by deducting from the decretal amount the amount of rent and interest thereon for the year. Subject to that modification the decree appealed against will be affirmed.

As the appellant has only succeeded as regards the rent for 1313 there will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

The order of the lower Court as to the costs in that Court will remain unaffected.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. It is not always easy to ascertain precisely what the purposes of a lease are and in the present case I doubt whether it is necessary to determine, whether the lease in question is or is not a lease for agricultural purposes within the meaning of section 117 of the Transfer of Property Act. Under clause (3) of section 1 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that Act extends to the whole of Bengal with the exception of certain specified areas, with which we are not now concerned. The lease covers land to which the Act prima facie extends. It has been held, however, that there are non-agricultural lands outside the excepted areas to which the provisions of the Act according to their true construction have no application [Raniganj Coal Association Ltd. v. Judoonath Ghose (4); Umrao Bibi v. Mahomed Rojabi (1); Hedayet Ali v. Kalanand Singh (5)]. But the land here is admittedly agricultural land and these authorities, therefore, are not pertinent. On the other hand where a lease relates to agricultural land but is not a lease for agricultural purposes, it is clearly governed by the Transfer of Property Act, which is an Imperial Act, in respect of matters within the scope of that Act (so far as its operation is not excluded by anything in its section 2). By way of illustration reference may be made to Promotho Nath Mitter v. Kali Prasanna Chowdhry (2). Such a lease again can only be made under section 107 by a registered instrument. In these and other cases the Transfer of Property Act has been held to apply. In other respects, however, the relationship between the parties to such a lease may still be subject to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [Durga Prosad Bundopadhya v. Brindabun Roy (6); Peary Mohan Mukhopadhya v. Sreeram Chandra Bose (7); Burna Moyi Dassee v. Burna Moyi Chowdhurani (3)]. The Government have not found it necessary to issue any notification in exercise of the power conferred by section 117 of the Transfer of Property Act and so far as I am aware, the position gives rise to no practical difficulty, except the initial difficulty in some cases of determining whether a particular lease is or is not a lease for agricultural purposes, that is to say, where the question is whether some provision in the Transfer of Property Act is or is not applicable. That question does not really arise in the present case. The lease here appears to me to be in substance a temporary lease granted to a rent-farmer or middleman. It relates, as I have said, to agricultural lands. There is no question of any conflict between the Tenancy Act and the Transfer of Property Act or of applying any provision of the latter Act. The point is whether the period of Limitation applicable to a suit for arrears of rent due under the lease is that prescribed by the Limitation Act or that prescribed by the Tenancy Act. The argument for the respondents is that the lease is not a lease for agricultural purposes, and is, therefore, subject only to the Transfer of Property Act, and is not governed in any respect by the Tenancy Act. But in the view of the cases cited and of the terms of section 117 itself, that conclusion by no means follows from the premise. There is no dispute that if the Tenancy Act applies for any purpose the period of limitation is three years as provided in Article 2 of the Schedule, III of the Tenancy Act. Section 29 of the Limitation Act contains a saving clause in regard to special and local laws. In my opinion whether this lease is or is not a lease for agricultural purposes, the Tenancy Act applies and the period of limitation applicable is that provided by that Act.

Bakhshi Gokal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Both the Courts are agreed in finding that the sum of Rs. 200 was actually paid to Pala Singh, an antecedent creditor, and the sum of Rs. 45 to Arjan, also an antecedent creditor. The first Court, upon the strength of the Full Bench ruling in Devi Ditta v. Saudagar Singh (1), held that it was unnecessary for the vendee to show that the debts to Pala Singh and Arjan were themselves incurred for necessary purposes. The Divisional Judge did not accept this view and as a result granted plaintiffs a decree to the effect that the sale would not affect their reversionary rights after the death of the vendor. This decision is clearly opposed to the ruling of the Full Bench and as there is no reason to doubt the genuineness of the debts due to Pala Singh and Arjan, the items in question must be held, so far as the present vendee is concerned, to have been incurred for necessary purposes. It may be conceded that the evidence adduced by the vendees in this case is not as strong as it might have been, but at the same time it is to be remembered that the sale took place in 1902, that the original vendee, Budh Singh, died in 1904 and that the present contesting defendants were minors at the time of the transaction and cannot be expected to know much about this incident. I accordingly accept the appeal and restore the decree of the first Court, as I agree with the Munsif that the small sum of Rs. 45 alleged to have been due on a book account forms but a trifling part of the total consideration. I am also by no means prepared to say that this latter item could not have been proved to have been incurred for necessary purposes had the plaintiff sued while Budh Singh himself was alive. The appeal is accepted and respondents must pay costs throughout.

Mr. Rahman, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. N. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.— This is a suit upon an award, which has been upheld by both the lower Courts. The objections urged before me were, first, that the procedure of the Court of first instance had been highly improper and prejudicial to the appellant's case in that the learned Sub-Divisional Judge had allowed the plaintiff's Counsel, after one arbitrator had been examined at length, to put his desposition to the other arbitrators and ask if it was correct. The lower Appellate Court severely criticised this procedure with the result that the Sub-Divisional Judge was called on for a report, when he explained that the procedure in question was adopted at the request of both the parties. Under such circumstances the objection falls to the ground under Evidence Act, section 142. The second objection was that the reference was bad in that a mother referred to arbitration the questions whether her deceased husband had not deposited during his life-time certain property with the defendant and whether he should not restore the same to her as one of the heirs and as representing her minor children. The defendant was found by both Courts to have assented to the reference but it having gone against him, he now disputes the authority of the mother to make the reference and says it is not binding on him. It cannot be disputed that she was the natural guardian of her own minor children and as pointed out at page 137 of Trevelyan's "Law relating to Minors" she had as such power to do all acts which were necessary and proper for realization, protection and benefit of the property of the minors. The defendant having denied the factum of the deposit, it was clearly to their interest that the matter should be settled. In Temmakal v. Subbammal (1) it was held that a guardian could bind minors by a reference. In Romon Kissen v. Hurrololl (2), Trevelyan, J., held the same, though he seems to have been, of the opinion that a minor might be able to upset the award on coming of age, if the award was shown to be contrary to his interest—a proposition which seems too general having regard to the decision of Sakrappa Lingappa Hebsur v. Shivappa Basappa (3), if the award was bona fide. Here, however, not only were the minors interested but the mother was also interested and the question does not really arise for, as pointed out in Russell on Awards, 9th Edition, at page 30, the defendant must, if the minors were not bound, be presumed to have known the law and facts and to have got all the consideration for which he stipulated in the consent of the mother, who was of full age and who also bound herself. I am not satisfied, therefore, that a natural guardian cannot refer a question that concerns her wards to arbitration and I am satisfied that when the question does not concern the minors solely but also the guardian, there is consideration and mutuality sufficient to preclude the other party to the reference from repudiating it. Custom—Sale—Consideration—Necessity for trifling amount not proved, effect of—Punjab Courts Act (IV of 1912), s. 41 (1) (a)—Second appeal, ground for interference in.

In a suit to set aside a private sale the Courts should not interfere where the sale is an act of ordinary prudence or where the consideration is held to be necessary except to a comparatively trifling amount.

Therefore, where a lower Court overlooks these provisions, the Chief Court is entitled to interfere in second appeal.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge of the Ferozepur Division at Ludhiana, dated the 22nd October 1913, reversing that of the Civil Judge, exercising the powers of a Munsif, first Class, Ferozepur, dated the 15th April 1913, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Santanam, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Gokal Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The two sales here in dispute were effected by Wazir Singh in June and July 1904, and for practical purposes they may be considered as forming one transaction. The vendor died in January 1907, and the present suit by his nephew as reversioner was not brought against the sons of vendee till nearly five years later. The only explanation that can be given of the delay is that the plaintiff was engaged in business in China.

The first Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit finding that the whole consideration was valid and necessary. The lower Appellate Court has upheld the consideration up to Rs. 1,513 out of the total nominal sum of Rs. 1,750, rejecting a variety of small items covering some minor debts of the vendor and expenses of the deeds. It has on this finding converted the sale into a mortgage for Rs. 1,513, and the case is before me on second appeal by the sons of the vendee.

I cannot allow a contention on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that no question of law is involved. The law in these cases is somewhat indefinite, but there are several well-known rulings to the effect that the Courts should not interfere where the sale is an act of ordinary prudence, or where the consideration is held to be necessary except to a comparatively trifling amount. Both these propositions of law seem to me to have been overlooked by the learned Divisional Judge.

The vendor was a pensioned soldier, aged 62, whose son had long before disappeared. Judging by the revenue assessment the land must have been of poor quality, and in selling to another retired soldier in the village the vendor was not acting capriciously in order to spite his reversioners. 134-14/20 kanals had been already mortgaged to different mortgagees. By selling 116 kanals the vendor was able to clear off all these mortgages together with some small but apparently genuine debts. He left 24 kanals free of incumbrance on his death, so that he can hardly be said to have alienated his land unnecessarily.

The small items of consideration to which the lower Appellate Court has objected appear to be all genuine enough, and I fail to understand why these outstanding debts should not be treated as debts of which the payment was necessary. An old man left alone in the world may easily find it difficult to avoid contracting debt to some extent and too severely critical an attitude towards him is quite out of place.

My conclusion is that these sales should not be interfered with in any way, many years after the bargains were made. The appeal is, accordingly, accepted and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the first Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit is restored with costs to the defendants-appellants throughout.

Custom—Necessity—Alienation of ancestral property—Good faith—Second appeal—Question of law or fact.

The question of valid necessity may be one of law, or of customary law or one of fact according to the peculiar circumstances of each case.

Where, therefore, in a suit by the minor sons for a declaration that the sale of ancestral property by their father shall not affect their reversionary right after his death, it appeared that the alienor was really in need of money for household necessities and that he took the money in good faith for ordinary purposes:

Held, that the question of valid necessity was one of fact in the case and its necessity being proved, the plaintiffs' suit must fail.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jhelum Division, dated the 12th March 1912, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, second Class, Gujrat, dated the 24th April 1911, decreeing the claim on payment of Rs. 300.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Appellants.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The case is the familiar one of minor sons contesting the alienation of ancestral property by their living father, who, of course, is a pro forma defendant. The first Court held that the suit was within time, that Rs. 300 of the Rs. 600 purchase-money was not for "necessity," and that on the death of the alienor plaintiffs would be entitled to recover the land sold from the alienees on payment of Rs. 300. The lower Appellate Court, however, took the view that there were indications that in consequence of famine and so forth, alienor probably really did require the cash item (Rs. 350), that the alienation was old, made nearly twelves years before suit, and that it was unreasonable to expect from vendees any precise proof of "necessity."

Plaintiffs filed a revision here, but by a special order of the learned Judge in Chambers, who held that perhaps appeal lay but certainly revision did not, the revision was turned into an appeal, and was referred to a Division Bench specially for a ruling on the question, whether "valid necessity" is a point of law only or a point of Customary Law. We may note that no certificate for second appeal has been put in. We find ourselves unable to give a plain answer to this question. It seems to us that according to the peculiar circumstances of each case the question may be one of Customary Law or one of law or one of fact. In Santa Singh v. Waryam Singh (1), for instance, there is a case in which the question was one of law merely, while in the present case it strikes us as being one of fact, viz., was alienor really in need of Rs. 350 for household necessities? The parties are in no wise at variance as to any principle of law or of Customary Law.

On the merits we entirely agree with the learned Divisional Judge. In our opinion there is on the record, if the rulings of this Court as to quantum of proof required in cases where suit has been long delayed be followed, ample proof that the alienor took the money in good faith for ordinary purposes and not at all for any of the purposes denounced in such rulings as Devi Ditta Singh v. Saudagar Singh (2).

In short, we think there is no force in the appeal and we dismiss it with costs.

Babu Karunamoy Bose, for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babus Joges Chandra Roy and Sitaram Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is a defendant in a suit for the recovery of enhanced rent. It has been conclusively determined that he is a tenure-holder and not a raiyat and the only question that remains for decision is, whether the rent he pays is liable to enhancement. The Subordinate Judge of the first Court at Midnapur held that the rent was enhancible and dismissed the suit. This decree has been reversed by the District Judge.

From the decree of the District Judge the present appeal has been preferred. Among the points urged in opposition to the appeal is the contention that the conclusion of the District Judge is on a question of fact and so it cannot be questioned in an appeal from appellate decree.

To appreciate this argument it is necessary to observe what the conditions are which bear on the question of enhancibility of rent. Variableness is the normal condition and even the naming of a sum is not conclusive against this.

Each case, however, has to be judged by its own peculiar circumstances. If there is no document, the conduct of the parties, especially where it extends over a long period of time, may justify an inference as to the terms on which land is held.

But where there is a document defining the right of the parties, its terms must, in the first instance, be investigated.

Here the rights of the parties must be determined by the terms of the documents, and this is a matter of construction which is open to this Court on second appeal.

There are several documents and the first is dated as far back as 1824. It is expressed to be granted to Gopi Nath Mittra, "a tenant, for clearing jungle." The jama is at the rate of 5 annas 7 gundas per bigha and the land leased and the total rent was said to be Rs. 66-14. The lease, however, provided for remissions, which had the effect of making the rent progressive until in 1237 (1830) it was payable at full rate, Rs. 66-14. This, it was agreed, should be paid year by year as the rent of the 200 bighas. And then the document proceeds as follows: "You shall continue to enjoy the jungle land with great felicity on bringing the same under cultivation, and causing the same to be held in jote by other persons, according to the former boundaries thereof. If you bring or cause to be brought under cultivation any land in excess of this quantity of land, then you shall separately pay rent of the land that may be found to be excess by measurement, at the rate of 5 annas 7 gundas per bigha as stated in this patta. This patta is granted to you in respect of the land, with the exception of the hasil and paikan lands included in former jama but lying within the aforesaid boundaries. You shall not get any remission (in rent) on account of drought, inundation, destruction of crops by worms, jungle or waste lands."

This then is the first document we have to construe and in asscertaining its meaning the Court must have regard to every fact a knowledge of which may conduce to the right application of the words used.

Though it may be that the construction placed on no document is an authority for the construction of another, yet we have the sanction of the Privy Council that it is relevant to the construction of the lease now under consideration that it was granted with a view to the reclamation of jungle land that for the first few years the amount of rent payable was progressive, and that then a fixed-rate was named. [Soorasoonderee Debia v. Golam Ali (1).] This decision has been accepted as furnishing a test in later cases, and among them it will suffice to mention Huro Prasad Roy Chowdhury v. Chundee Churn Boyragee (2).

(2) 9 C. 505; 12 C. L. R. 251.

In view of the salient facts of this case I hold that on the true construction of the lease of 1824 the rent payable by the tenant is not enhancible in the manner claimed. Of the five remaining leases four appear to be in the nature of grafts on that with which I have dealt, and each to be a recognition the additional land has come within its scope as was contemplated from the first. To each of these the same considerations apply and I hold that the rent in each case is not enhancible.

But to the 6th and last lease none of the considerations which have influenced the construction I have placed on the five earlier ones apply, and I can find no sufficient ground for excluding the normal condition of variableness. In the case of the last lease, therefore, the rent is enhancible.

We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court with costs throughout to be paid by the respondent. The case will go back to the lower Appellate Court for the rent of the 6th lease only to be fixed in accordance with these remarks and for a decree.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1085 OF 1913.

June 14, 1915.

Present:—Sir Donald Johnstone, KT., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Rattigan.

SULTAN SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

HASHMAT ULLAH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 29, 31—Permission to guardian to sell ward's property—Power of Court to stop sale if detrimental to ward—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 38, 41—Plaintiff repudiating transaction must restore benefits received only if other party acted in good faith—Defendant not to restore benefits.

The Legislature did not intend that a Court should give permission to a guardian to sell the ward's property without fixing at least an approximate price and without clearly ascertaining what is to be sold and the value of it. [p. 805, cols. 1 & 2.]

Even if a Court has given sanction under section 29 and section 31 (1) it is not beyond the power of that Court to intervene and stop the sale, if it finds something detrimental to the ward's interest is contemplated. [p. 805, col. 2.]

If a plaintiff sues to undo a transaction entered into by his guardian in his name during his minority, then if the other party has acted in good faith and the plaintiff or his estate has actually received benefit, the plaintiff must, as a condition precedent to the undoing of the said transaction, restore the said benefit. If, however, the minor or quondam minor is the beatus possidens and is being sued by the other party; a claim against the minor for refund of the benefit would fail. [p. 805, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 20th February 1913, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Delhi, dated the 19th August 1911, decreeing Rs. 2,800 with proportionate costs.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar and Lala Balwant Rai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand and Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Moti Sagar on behalf of plaintiff-appellant began his address by giving us a history of the affair. As the facts are stated by him with substantial correctness, though with one notable omission, we reproduce his version here, remarking at once that in our opinion, upon a correct interpretation of the facts and a sound application of the law thereto, the plaintiff has no case.

The relationship of the defendants, who are minors, to their present and quondam guardians and others appears from the podigree-table given in the judgment of the lower Court, thus:

Musammat Hussaini, (now gardian ad litem)
|
Musammat Imtiyazi Begam, (guardian under the Act)

Musammat Imtiyazi Begum has had two husbands, viz., Salim Ullah, deceased father of defendants, and Ali Hussain, their stepfather, who is still alive. The minors have property in the United Provinces as well as in Delhi, and Musammat Imtiyazi Begum many years ago was appointed statutory guardian by the District Judge of Muradabad. Debts were outstanding against the minors, and on 3rd August 1906 the guardian procured from the District Judge aforesaid leave to sell property in Delhi, but the sanction was very general and did not state terms or details of any kind. Time passed, and at last on September 30th, 1908, the guardian entered into a contract to sell 3/16ths share of specified house property in Delhi to plaintiff for Rs. 35,000. The deed was registered and Rs. 600 was paid over to the guardian before the Sub-Registrar. For this sum a receipt was taken and in that document the terms of the contract were stated in full. It seems that plaintiff wished that the minors' share in the property should be partitioned before actual purchase, and it was, therefore, agreed between him and the guardian that she should sue for partition, he undertaking to supply funds for litigation expenses up to Rs. 12,000 to be credited to plaintiff as part of the Rs. 35,000 aforesaid. Then on 13th November 1908 he advanced Rs. 2,000 on this agreement, and the guardian proceeded to institute two partition suits, which, we may remark, have not yet been finally disposed of. Then on 25th January 1909 the guardian applied to the District Judge of Muradabad for approval of the sale to plaintiff, but that officer refused sanction, called upon plaintiff to show cause why the contract should not be rescinded and the Rs. 2,600 returned, and then asked the Delhi District Judge for an estimate of the actual value of the property under consideration. The latter made an estimate of Rs. 45,000 as the fair market value, whereupon the other District Judge offered plaintiff his option of taking the property at that figure, or buying only some 11 shops for Rs. 18,000, which was an alternative proposal made by the guardian. On 25th February 1910 plaintiff refused both offers, and the District Judge of Muradabad sanctioned the sale of 11 shops at Rs. 18,000 in the open market. Next day one Parmeshri Das having accepted the bargain, a draft deed in his favour was approved, and, when a few days later plaintiff offered Rs. 19,000, the offer was refused as too late. On 18th July 1910 the sale to Parmeshri Das was finally sanctioned, and next day plaintiff filed against the minors alone his present claim, which is for Rs. 2,600 advanced plus Rs. 574-4-3 interest and expenses.

It is convenient here at once to dispose of a contention of Mr. Moti Sagar's. He argues that the sanction of 3rd August 1906 was sufficient authority for the completion of the sale, that the guardian's application of 25th January 1909 was uncalled for, and that the District Judge of Muradabad should not have interfered any further with the guardian's discretion. In support he quotes section 29 and section 31 [especially sub-section (3) (a)] of the Act; but, in our opinion, it was probably never intended that a Court should give permission to a guardian to sell the ward's property without fixing at least an approximate price and without clearly ascertaining what was to be sold and the value of it—as to this see section 31 (1). Again, the guardian evidently never understood she was to have carte blanche, for she did ask for sanction before completing the sale, and in any case it seems to us that, even if a Court has given sanction under section 29 and section 31 (1), it is not beyond the power of that Court to intervene and stop the sale, if it finds something detrimental to the ward's interests is contemplated. Lastly, the Court had never, even in the most general way, sanctioned the actual contract entered into with plaintiff, viz., the arrangement that the guardian was to get advances from him, to count as part of the purchase-money, in order to bring partition suits for the benefit of plaintiff. We find, therefore, that the Court was justified, both in law and in equity, in its order refusing sanction to the sale to plaintiff and to the contract of 1908.

But plaintiff's Counsel argues that in any case he is entitled to refund of his actual advances, and he quotes rulings dealing with the well known doctrine that a minor, even if he is entitled in law to repudiate a transaction done on his behalf by his guardian, should restore to the other party benefits received. The law on that subject is clear and can be stated in a few words, and we need not discuss the rulings in which it is to be found. If a plaintiff sues to undo a transaction entered into by his guardian in his name during his minority, then, if the other party has acted in good faith and the plaintiff or his estate has actually received benefit, the plaintiff must, as a condition precedent to the undoing of the said transaction, restore the said benefit. If, however, the minor or quondam minor is the beatus possidens and is being sued by the other party, ordinarily, according to the authorities, a claim against the minor for refund of the benefit would fail. Passing over the latter proposition, however, and looking at the history of the case, one cannot help seeing how hopelessly plaintiff fails in connection with the first proposition. The litigation to be undertaken was not for the benefit of the minors in intention and there is no evidence that it has turned out so in fact, and one has only to look at the discreditable transaction with Ali Hussain, step-father of defendants, discussed by the lower Appellate Court at page 10 of the paper-book but not mentioned by Mr. Moti Sagar as part of the history of the case, to see that plaintiff can never be allowed to say that his hands are clean and that he has acted in good faith. Apparently plaintiff was ready to pay not only Rs. 35,000 but some thousands more for the bargain, and the diversion of those additional thousands from the pockets of the minors into the pocket of Ali Hussain puts plaintiff out of Court at once.

We entirely agree, therefore, with the learned Divisional Judge in holding that the suit fails, and we wholly dissent from the first Court's way of looking at the case.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where the plaintiff sues one of the co-sharers for damages for the wrongful removal of fish from a tank and it is found that there was an arrangement by which the defendant was put in possession of the tank with the right to take fish from it:

Held, that the arrangement or lease could not be void even under the Transfer of Property Act, because the act that was done in removing the fish was a past act and at that time, if under an arrangement, lease or license, whatever it may be called, the right was in existence, the defendant was justly exercising his right in fishing in the tank, and damages could not be claimed against him.

Babu Monmotho Nath Ganguli, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the decree of the Small Cause Court complained of should not be set aside. The plaintiffs are the petitioners in this Rule. The plaintiffs brought the suit against the defendant No. 10 and others claiming damages for the wrongful removal of fish from a tank. The defendant No. 10 is a co-sharer of the plaintiffs and the other defendants. He set up the plea that, by means of an arrangement arrived at between him and the other sharers, he had been put in possession of the tank with the right of fishery therein for a period of nine years and that he removed the fish under such authorization. It is said that that lease is void having regard to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. That makes no difference in a suit like this, because the act that was done in removing the fish is a past act and at that time, if under an arrangement, lease or license, whatever it may be called, the right was in existence, the defendant No. 10 was justly exercising his right in fishing in the tank and damages cannot be claimed against him. I see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court that there was an arrangement by which the defendant No. 10 had been put in possession of the tank with the right to take fish from it. The view that the learned Judge has taken is that, owing to the large accession of fish in the tank that arose from the flood last year, the plaintiff required further rent from the defendant No. 10 and it was only when the defendant No. 10 refused to pay the increased rent that the present suit was lodged against him. That seems to be amply sufficient to dispose of the present Rule without considering whether, if the lease is not proved, the defendant No. 10 as a co-sharer had the right to remove the fish without being liable to account to his co-sharers. The present Rule, therefore, fails and must be discharged with costs, two gold mohurs.

ROE, J.—I agree.

Rule discharged.

Rent, suit for—Kabuliat, construction of—Enhancement, no question of.

Where on the face of a document which was to have effect for three years, it appeared that the rent fixed was a certain amount but that the landlord allowed a certain amount to be held in abeyance for three years, and for those three years, year by year a certain amount was to be paid by the defendant according to the instalments mentioned, and where the landlord sued for the arrears:

Held, that what the plaintiff sued for was not enhancement, no more than if a landlord gave a receipt for half the rent for the first year, half the rent for the second year, and half the rent for the third year, and subsequently sued for the whole rent.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rangpur, dated the 4th of February 1897, modifying that of the Munsif, first Court, Gaibanda, dated the 18th August 1896.

Babus Srinath Das and Kolada Kinkar Roy, for the Appellants.

Babu Ishar Chandra Chakravarti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Rangpur, dated the 4th February 1897.

The suit was for rent and was based on a kabuliat dated the 1st Baisak 1295. The parties have left the case in such a position that all we have to do is to construe that document. Nothing in regard to conduct amongst themselves has been left to us to determine. The document is in regard to a meadi sarasari jote, and was to have effect for three years. In the first column of the schedule of land and jama set out in that document is a description of the land, in the second column is the total area, in the third column the rate per bigha, in the fourth column is the rent in sicca rupees, in the fifth column is the batta on the Company's coin, in the sixth column is the total rent in the Company's coin, which is stated at Rs. 19-0-18¼ gandas, in the seventh column is the hajat allowed till the end of the term, which is stated at Rs. 10-8-4½ gandas, and in the last column is the balance, being the net rent payable which is stated at Rs. 8-8-13¾ gandas. Further on the document runs thus:—"And on the expiry of the term of this daul, I shall pay in the manner aforesaid the full jama of Rs. (19-0-18¼) nineteen and gandas eighteen and a quarter including the said amount left in abeyance." The plaintiffs now sue after expiry of the three years for the full jama of Rs. 19-0-18¼. The defendant denied the kabuliat altogether. He also stated that he knew nothing about hajat in the kabuliat. But subsequently he admitted that he executed this document.

On the face of the document it appears that the rent fixed was Rs. 19-0-18¼ but that the landlords allowed a certain amount to be held in abeyance for three years, and for those three years, year by year Rs. 8-8-13¾ were to be paid by the defendant according to the instalments mentioned. In that view of the case what the plaintiffs sued for was not enhancement, no more than if a landlord gave a receipt for half the rent for the first year, half the rent for the second year and half the rent for the third year, and subsequently sued for the whole rent. It may be for, ought we know, that it was never intended to act upon that document, but no such case was placed before us.

We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the Court of first instance, with costs in all the Courts.

Decree set aside.

PADMAN AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

HANWANTA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Will not produced—Presumption—Secondary evidence, admissibility of—Estoppel.

The rule of law that "when a Will is traced to the possession of the deceased and is not forthcoming at his death the presumption is that he has destroyed it", must be applied with considerable caution in India in view of the habits and condition of the people. [p. 810, col. 2.]

A Hindu Jat in 1884 executed a Will under which his surviving sons and a grandson whose father had died were to take equal shares. In 1898 he revoked that Will and executed another by which he excluded two of his sons. After his death mutation was made in accordance with the Will of 1884. The devisees under the second Will, except two of the grandsons, sued for the shares in respect of which the two excluded sons had been recorded as owners. Before the trial of the suit the parties agreed to refer the dispute to arbitration. The arbitrators made an award and in accordance therewith the suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs applied for revision of the order and one of the plaintiff's thereafter applied to withdraw his application for revision. The Chief Court reversed the order of dismissal and remanded the case for trial. At the trial the original Will of 1898 was not forthcoming but a copy of that Will was obtained from the Registrar's Office and admitted in evidence without any objection:

Held, that the Will was admissible in evidence as the reasonable presumption was that the Will was mislaid and lost or else stolen by one of the defendants after the death of the testator. [p. 810, col. 2.]

Held, further, that the plaintiff who had withdrawn his revision petition was not estopped from claiming his share nor were those who had not joined in the suit. [p. 811, col. 1.]

Welch v. Phillips, 1 Moore P. C. 299; 12 E. R. 828; 43 R. R. 83, dissented from.

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Punjab Chief Court, dated July 17th, 1909, reversing those of the Divisional Judge of Ferozepore, dated December 6th, 1907, affirming those of the Court of the District Judge of Ferozepore, dated July 22nd, 1907.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are sufficiently set forth in their Lordships' judgment.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., (with him Mr. Parikh), for the Appellants, contended that it was not proved that Daula at the time he made the Will in question was of sound disposing mind. The parties were governed by the Punjab Customary Law. The property being jointly acquired, Daula could not dispose of it to the exclusion of two of his sons who had helped in acquisition thereof. There was no pooof that the Will was lost and, therefore, secondary evidence was inadmissible. It was proved that Daula had concealed the Will by his subsequent acts. The Will was in the custody of Daula himself and as on his death it was not found, the presumption was that hed estroyed it. This presumption was not rebutted; on the contrary there was evidence in support of it. In any case the respondents could recover only their own share of the property in suit. Withdrawal from the proceedings to set aside the award of the arbitration could not deprive those who were rightly entitled to a certain share of their shares. It was settled law that guardians on behalf of a minor could not compromise without the leave of the Court. The object of the Civil Procedure Code was to secure the finality of an award. Under section 522 the decree passed on an award was not appealable. Error in law did not vitiate the award. Application in revision under section 622 was subject to the Limitation Act, Schedule II, Article 158, and section 12.

Reference was made to Welch v. Phillips (1), Manohar Lal v. Jadu Nath Singh (2), Ganesha Row v. Tulju Ram Row (3), Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Hussain (4).

Mr. Arthur Grey, for the Respondents, contended that sufficient evidence had been given of the execution of the Will of 1898 at the time of the death of the testator and the contents thereof were rightly proved by secondary evidence. The Will was not destroyed with the intention of revoking it. The findings of facts in which the Divisional Judge and the Chief Court had concurred could not be disturbed. The property was self-acquired and, therefore, Daula had power to dispose of it as he chose. The Chief Court was right in refusing to review the decree with regard to the share of Ram Sukh and still more with regard to the share of Bhinja and Shera.

[LORD ATKINSON:—You sued for undivided whole.]

He was entitled to sue for a declaration and be trustee for others. Such suits were frequently brought and proper decree made without prejudice to the rights of others.

[MR. AMEER ALI: Declaration is one thing and suit for possession another.]

[SIR GEORGE FARWELL:—In England it would be impossible suing on behalf of one and making him defendant. It was settled Hindu Law that no trusteeship was created by joint beneficial interest.]

[MR. AMEER ALI:—Is not Shera's case distinct from others?]

In appeal it was open to the parties to raise any point, but not on revision. Nobody had a right to be heard. Proceedings were by petition (see section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and the Punjab Courts Act XVIII of 1884, section 70, which applied section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 with-

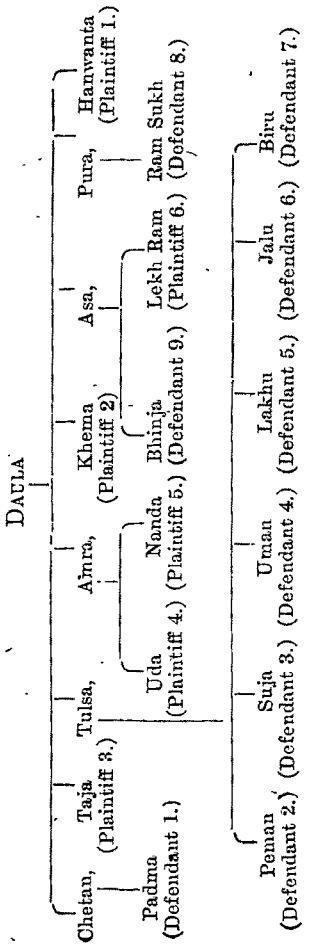
JUDGMENT

MR. AMEER ALI.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab, dated the 17th of July 1909, and the dispute relates to the property of one Daula, a Jat by origin who migrated from Bikanir many years ago and settled in the Ferozepore District. He died in April 1902, leaving a large family of sons and grandsons and considerable landed property.

The following pedigree will explain the relative position of the contesting parties in the present litigation.



In 1884 Daula had executed a Will, which was duly registered at the time, under which his surviving sons and a grandson, Ram Sukh, whose father, Pura, had died, were to take his properties substantially in equal shares.

In January 1898 he revoked his former Will and made another, which also was registered, by which, excluding Chetan and Tulsa, he left his property in six equal shares to his four other surviving sons and to Ram Sukh, the son of Pura, and to Bhinja and Lekh Ram, the two sons of Asa, who had died in the meantime.

On Daula's death there were the usual mutation proceedings for the registration of the names of his successors in the Collector's Register, in the course of which the devisees under the second Will claimed to have their names recorded to the exclusion of Chetan's and Tulsa's representatives. In view, however, of the provisions of the Will of 1884 the Collector ordered the names to be entered in eight shares and referred the contending parties to settle their respective claims in the Civil Court. This happened in September 1902, and in December following the present suit was brought by the persons taking under the second Will against the representatives of Chetan and Tulsa, defendants Nos. 1 to 7, to establish the plaintiffs' claim under the Will of 1898 and to recover possession of the one-fourth share of Daula's lands in respect of which Chetan and Tulsa had been recorded as owners. This one-fourth includes the shares of Ram Sukh and Bhinja, who, on their refusal to join in the action, had been made defendants Nos. 8 and 9.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 7 raised various objections to the plaintiffs' suit, the nature of which is indicated by the issues framed by the Court of first instance. They are as follows:—

(1) Whether the property in dispute was acquired by Daula alone or jointly by him and his sons.

(2) Whether the Will of 1898 was executed by Daula voluntarily and whether he was competent to make such a Will.

(3) If so, whether the Will has been cancelled by any subsequent act on his or on the part of the plaintiffs.

Before trial, however, the parties agreed to refer the dispute to arbitration. The arbitrators made an award, and on the 25th November 1903 the District Judge, in accordance therewith, dismissed the plaintiffs' claim. On revision under section 623 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, the Chief Court reversed the order of dismissal and remanded the case to be disposed of according to law. On remand the first Court went into evidence and in the result dismissed the plaintiffs' claim, principally on the ground that the lands in dispute were not the self-acquired properties of Daula over which he had a right of disposition dehors the ordinary law, under which ancestral property is inheritable by sons and grandsons per stirpes in equal shares. The District Judge does not say this in so many words, but this is clearly the effect of his judgment. On the other issues he does not appear to have come to definite findings.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the Divisional Judge was of opinion that the properties to which the suit related were the self-acquired properties of Daula within the Hindu Law, and that the Will of 1898 was not open to the objection of having been executed under undue influence or without due comprehension; but he considered that the subsequent acts of Daula showed that he had revoked or cancelled it. He was further of opinion that no sufficient foundation was laid for the admission in the first Court of secondary evidence of the Will of 1898. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal.

From his judgment the plaintiffs appealed to the Chief Court, which agreed with the Divisional Judge in his finding that the properties in dispute were the acquisitions of Daula who had a right of disposition over them. The learned Judges were also of opinion in agreement with the second Court on the question of the competency of Daula to make the Will of 1898, but they differed from the Divisional Judge on the point on which he had dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. They held in substance that there was no sufficient evidence of revocation. They accordingly set aside the Divisional Judge's judgment and gave the plaintiffs a decree for the entire one-fourth share claimed by them.

An application for review of judgment was made to the Chief Court under the provisions of section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, for the exclusion of the shares of Ram Sukh and Bhinja from the decree in favour of the plaintiffs. It was also attempted to be argued on this application, on certain grounds to which their Lordships will refer presently, that the share of Shera, one of the sons of Khema who had died after the institution of the suit, should be excluded. These applications were rejected by the Chief Court.

The defendants have now appealed to His Majesty in Council, and the case has been argued on their behalf in great detail. It was urged in the course of the argument that a registered copy of a Will of 1898 was admitted in evidence without sufficient foundation being laid for its admission. No objection, however, appears to have been taken in the first Court against the copy obtained from the Registrar's office being put in evidence. Had such objection been made at the time, the District Judge, who tried the case in the first instance, would probably have seen that the deficiency was supplied. Their Lordships think that there is no substance in the present contention.

As regards the question of revocation, the Chief Court, after reviewing all the circumstances, said as follows: "We think that the more reasonable presumption in this case is that the Will was mislaid and lost, or else was stolen by one of the defendants after the death of Daula"; and they held that in their opinion it was not revoked. Their Lordships think that it was perfectly within the competency of the learned Judges to come to that finding. Much stress has been laid on the view expressed by Baron Parke, in Welch v. Phillips (1), that when a Will is traced to the possession of the deceased and is not forthcoming at his death, the presumption is that he has destroyed it. In view of the habits and conditions of the people of India this rule of law, if it can be so called, must be applied with considerable caution. In the present case the deceased was a very old man and, towards the end of life, almost imbecile. There is nothing definite to show that he had any motive to destroy the Will or was mentally competent to do so. On the other hand the circumstances favoured the view the Chief Court has taken that the Will was either mislaid or stolen.

As regards the contention that the shares of Shera, Ram Sukh, and Bhinja should be excluded from the decree in favour of the plaintiffs, their Lordships will first deal with Shera's share. It is urged that inasmuch as Shera had put in a petition in the Chief Court to withdraw his application for revision in the arbitration matter which was formally granted on the 3rd April 1906, he must be taken as estopped from questioning the defendants' right so far as his particular share is concerned. In other words, that he must lose his share, if he is otherwise entitled to it, by the simple fact of having withdrawn or tried to withdraw his application for revision. Their Lordships think this contention is clearly not well founded. On the same day on which the order was made on Shera's petition, viz., the 3rd of April, the Chief Court set aside in toto "the reference to arbitration and subsequent proceedings as altogether bad." The parties were thus relegated to their original rights; Shera is now a plaintiff, and entitled, like the others, to his share.

The effect of the order in the mutation proceedings was to place the representatives of Chetan and Tulsa in possession of two-eighths or one-fourth share of the property, and the suit is to recover from them this share; but Ram Sukh and Bhinja, who are entitled, under the Will of 1898, to one-sixth and one-twelfth respectively under the second Will, disclaim all benefit thereunder. They are apparently in possession under the Revenue Court's order of one-eighth and one-sixteenth respectively. The one-fourth share claimed by the plaintiffs, for which the Chief Court has made a decree in their favour, includes the excess share of Ram Sukh and Bhinja, which amounts to one-twenty-fourth and one-forty-eighth respectively, in the aggregate one-sixteenth. The plaintiffs are clearly not entitled to a decree for their shares. The decree of the Chief Court must, therefore, be modified to that extent. In other words the decree will be for three-sixteenths instead of one-fourth. And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Having regard to the general result of the appeal, their Lordships think the ends of justice will be met by ordering each party to bear their own costs.

Decree modified.

LABAN SARDAR v. CHOYEN MALLICK.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for contribution. His case is that he and the defendants borrowed money from one Fazil Mandal with a view to carry on a business for the sale and purchase of goods. The money borrowed was applied for the purposes of the partnership and in fact constituted the nucleus of the capital. Fazil Mandal subsequently sued the plaintiff and defendants and obtained a decree on the 2nd February 1907. He took out execution, however, against the plaintiff alone who was thus constrained to satisfy the decree, under compulsion of legal process, by payments made from time to time during the years 1908 and 1909. The plaintiff now seeks to recover from each of the defendants the sum payable by him in respect of the debt due to Fazil Mandal. The first defendant resisted the suit substantially on the ground that the partnership had been closed, that the accounts had been adjusted and that the plaintiff had been paid the sum which was due to him. The allegation in substance was that the plaintiff alone was bound to furnish the entire capital and had been repaid. The second defendant also resisted the claim on similar grounds. The Courts below have dismissed the suit, on the ground that it is not maintainable in the form in which it has been brought and that the remedy of the plaintiff is by way of a suit for dissolution of partnership and for adjustment of accounts. The Courts below have found in effect that the money was borrowed by the plaintiff and the defendants jointly and that it was applied for the purposes of the partnership business. The Courts below have further found that the plaintiff alone was liable to furnish the entire capital, that there has been no adjustment of accounts as alleged by the defendants and that the plaintiff has not been paid the sum due to him.

The question in controversy between the parties is, whether in this state of facts the suit as framed is maintainable. On behalf of the respondents, it has been argued that no contribution suit lies, because the parties stood in the position of partners and that the only remedy of the plaintiff is to institute a suit for adjustment of accounts after realization of the assets. In our opinion the contention of the defendants cannot be sustained.

The rule applicable to cases of this description is thus formulated in the Laws of England edited by Lord Halsbury, Volume XXII, paragraph 66: "Though partners are jointly liable to third persons, a partner who pays more than his share of a partnership debt, whether voluntarily or not, is entitled to contribution from his partners." In support of this statement reference may be made to the cases of Boulter v. Peplow (1), Sedgwick v. Daniell (2), Betard v. Hawes (3) and Fitzgerald v. McCowan (4). In the case of Sedgwick v. Daniell (2), the plaintiff and the defendants were share-holders in a Joint Stock Mining Company. Money was required to work the mine. T, who was also a share-holder, applied to a Bank for an advance of £500, which had consented to make an advance on the security of the joint promissory note of the plaintiff, the defendants and T. The note was given and the money advanced was applied to the purposes of the mine. The plaintiff was subsequently compelled by the creditors to pay more than his share of the note. He, therefore, sued the defendants for contribution. It was ruled that this was not a part of the partnership transaction and that the action was maintainable. In the case of Betard v. Hawes (3), the plaintiff along with eleven others including the defendant became liable for a debt contracted in respect of a scheme. The creditor sued the plaintiff who ultimately paid the whole debt. Two of the original contractors died before payment. The plaintiff sued the defendant for contribution. It was ruled that although there might be many cross-liabilities amongst the provisional committee men in respect of the scheme, an action lay at law for contribution against such of them as were liable to pay this debt. Similarly in the case of Boulter v. Peplow (1) A, B and C, by an agreement in writing, hired the premises of D. The premises so hired were intended to be and were used for the purposes of the Joint Stock Company of which A, B and C were at the time of the contract committee men. The rent was for some time paid by the Company, but ultimately fell into arrears. Thereupon D sued A, B and C upon the agreement, B and C suffered judgment by default. D recovered the amount of rent and costs from A. It was ruled that A was entitled to sue B and C for contribution and that the remedy against B was not affected by the circumstance that B had ceased to be a member of the Committee before accrual of the rent in respect of which the action had been brought. Mr. Justice Maule observed as follows: "Prima facie, where one of three joint contractors who are jointly sued, pays the whole debt, he is entitled to receive contribution from the other two. That state of circumstances exists here: and the only question is, whether there existed any other facts which afford an answer to the plaintiff's right to such contribution. It does not appear to me that any such answer has been given." Mr. Justice Williams stated that whatever remedy the persons who had made themselves liable for the rent might have against the other members of the Company, when these persons placed themselves under this liability to the landlord of the premises, they likewise came under an implied liability, inter se, that if one should be called upon to pay and should actually pay the whole rent, the other two would reimburse him in respect of their respective shares. This implied contract was not in any degree affected by the rule of law that one partner cannot sue his co-partner in respect of a partnership debt. Mr. Justice Talfourd added that the contract out of which the cause of action arose was entirely for that partnership and that the defendants were liable to contribution irrespectively of the accounts amongst the partners. This view of the law has been adopted by the Courts of this country, as is clear from an examination of the decisions in Guda Kulita v. Joyram Das (5), Durga Prosonno Ghose v. Raghu Nath Das (6), Subbarayudu v. Adinarayudu (7), Sadhu Narayana Aiyangar v. Ramaswami Aiyangar (8) and Gudlavellaru v. Vellathambi (9). In the first of these cases, Mr. Justice Banerjee pointed out that a suit for contribution by a partner against some of his co-partners, on account of money paid by him for the satisfaction of a debt contracted by him jointly with the said co-partners, is maintainable in cases where the liability satisfied by the plaintiffs is not a joint liability of the entire partnership or where the said partners were some only of several persons comprising the partnership and the bond was executed not in the usual course of business of the partnership. A suit for contribution is also maintainable in cases where the partners expressly promised to contribute their share of the debt after a decree had been passed upon the bond. The rule is similarly stated by Mr. Justice Muttusami Ayyar in the case of Sabbarayudu v. Adinarayudu (7). The learned Judge pointed out that it is no doubt a settled rule of law that advances made by one partner to the partnership concern can only result in matters of accounts and cannot be made the subject of a separate suit. But to this general rule there are exceptions where the ad ances are made by one partner not to the partnership concern, but to the other partners in respect of what he has to contribute to the joint capital, as in French v Styring (10); or where two partners borrow from a Bank on their joint promissory note and apply the money borrowed to the partnership concern and one of the partners is compelled to pay more than his share of the debt, the transactions have been considered to be separate and altogether dehors the partnership and as such capable of sustaining an action for contribution: Sedgwick v. Daniell (2). In the case before us, as already explained, the plaintiffs and the defendants borrowed money in their individual capacity. They were sued as such by their creditor and the decree obtained by the latter was executed, not against the partnership property, but against the private property of the plaintiff alone. The payment by the plaintiff to the decree-holder really signifies that he has in substance been called upon to supply the entire capital, although the initial arrangement between the parties was that the capital should be furnished by all the share-holders in equal proportion. In circumstances like these, a suit for contribution is obviously maintainable.

On behalf of the respondents, reference has been made to section 43 of the Indian Contract Act. That section lays down that when two or more persons make a joint promise, the promisee may, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, compel any one of such joint promisors to perform the whole of the promise. Each of the two or more joint promisors may compel every other joint promisor to contribute equally with himself to the performance of the promise, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract. In the case before us, consequently, the plaintiff is prima facie entitled to call upon each of the defendants to contribute equally with himself to the performance of the promise jointly made by them in favour of their creditor. The only question is, whether a contrary intention appears from the contract. The circumstances as already explained do not indicate that there was any contrary intention on the part of the partners. On the other hand, the intention to be gathered is that each of them agreed to contribute a rateable share of the partnership capital. If the plaintiff is refused relief in this suit, that agreement between the parties would practically be ignored.

It has finally been contended on behalf of the respondents that they may be permitted to establish in the present litigation that if the partnership accounts are adjusted, it would be found that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the whole of the sum claimed from each of the defendants. In our opinion, although a defence of this character might well have been available to the defendants in the Court of first instance, it is too late for them to urge the point in this Court. The defence was to the effect that the accounts had been adjusted and that upon settlement of accounts the plaintiff had been paid the sum legally due to him. This defence has failed and the defendants cannot be permitted at this stage to make a new case which involves the investigation of facts and must, if entertained, necessitate a remand to the Court of first instance.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decrees of the Courts below set aside and a decree made in favour o the plaintiff for Rs. 148-3 against the first defendant, Rs. 152-3 against the second defendant and Rs. 152-3 against the third defendant. Each of these sums will carry interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the 14th April 1909 to the date of the institution of the suit. The decretal amount will carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the commencement of the suit to the date of realization. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs in all the Courts.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 36—Burden of proof—Transferee to prove good faith and valuable consideration.

Section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act lays the onus upon the transferee to prove that the transfer made by an insolvent was made in good faith and for valuable consideration. [p. 815, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated 12th December 1913.

Babus Gobind Chandra Dey Roy and Aboni Nath Bhattacharjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Murshidabad declaring a mortgage said to have been executed by an insolvent in favour of the appellant on the 13th November 1912, void against the Receiver in the insolvency proceedings and annulling the same. The learned Judge upon a consideration of the circumstances and the evidence adduced on behalf of the Receiver has come to the conclusion that the mortgage was a bogus transaction effected in bad faith and that it was not for valuable consideration.

JAIRAM v. DOMA.

It is contended on behalf of the defendant that the onus is upon the Receiver to show that the transfer was not made in good faith and for valuable consideration. We are of opinion that the onus is upon the appellant to prove that the transfer was made in good faith and for valuable consideration. The wording of the section, in our opinion, leaves no doubt as to the person on whom the onus should rest. This contention, therefore, must be overruled. It is next contended that the appellant had not sufficient opportunity of adducing evidence. It appears that the appellant had no witnesses in Court present, except one, on the day on which the matter was taken up by the Judge. An application was presented on behalf of the appellant to the Court for postponing the case on the ground that the witnesses were not present and that he himself was not able to attend Court to give his deposition. The learned Judge disallowed that application and the result was that the case had to be decided on the evidence adduced by the Receiver only. In all the circumstances of the case we think that another opportunity ought to be given to the appellant to produce evidence in the case. But this must be upon terms. We accordingly direct the case to be sent back to the lower Court at once; and on the appellant depositing into the Court below the costs incurred by the respondent in the lower Court and the costs of this Court, the hearing-fee in this appeal being assessed at five gold mohurs, within one week from the date of arrival of the record and this judgment, and on the appellant applying to the Court below to issue summons upon his witnesses and depositing all necessary costs for the purpose within one week from the arrival of the record and this order, the Judge will issue summons upon the witnesses for the appellant and fix an early date for the re-hearing of the case. The appellant will be entitled to have the five Calcutta witnesses who were cited summoned by the Court and also the two witnesses mentioned in the list of witnesses dated the 14th November, who are residents of the District of Murshidabad, examined provided the appellant can procure their attendance without summons. The respondent will be entitled to adduce any rebutting evidence he wishes to do.

On the appellant failing to deposit the costs within the time specified, this appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

DOMA—RESPONDENT.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 13—Suit by malguzar to recover value of manure under Wajib-ul-arz—Small Cause—Second appeal, if competent.

The plaintiffs, malguzars of a certain mauza, sued to recover from the defendant a sum of Rs. 34, on account of the wrongful removal of manure to which they set up title under a clause of the Wajib-ul-arz, which ran as follows:—

'In this village the malguzar takes according to long custom the manure of those who have no fields of their own: in return he shall allow them free grazing and nistar:

Held, that a second appeal in this case was barred under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as the suit was of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, because

(a) it was one for damages consequent on the wrongful removal of manure to which the plaintiffs were entitled, and not for delivery of that manure, or

(b) even if the claim were regarded as one for the manure itself as a 'due' within the meaning of that term as used in Article 13 of the second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, that 'due' was not payable to the plaintiffs by reason of their interest in immoveable property. [p. 816, col. 1.]

The dues contemplated by Article 13 are payments to which a person is entitled as representing his interest in certain immoveable property, and not because he possesses some interest in immoveable property. [p. 816, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 29th October 1913, confirming that of the Munsif, Bhandara, dated the 15th November 1912.

Mr. A. M. Mudaliar, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in the suit of which this second appeal arises are the malguzars of Mauza Malipar. They sued to recover from the defendant a sum of Rs. 34, being the value of manure to which they set up title under clause XIV of the wajib-ul-arz. The relevent part of that clause runs as follows:—

"In this village the malguzar takes according to long custom the manure of those who have no fields of their own: in return he shall allow them free grazing and nistar."

The plaint alleges that the defendant is a non-agriculturist who habitually grazes his cattle in and takes fuel from the village jungle without paying fees and till the end of the Falsi year 1319 (1909-1910 A. D.) regularly gave his manure to the plaintiffs. In 1320 and 1321, however, the defendant wrongfully sold his manure to others for Rs. 20 and Rs. 14 respectively. The total sum claimed including interest is Rs. 37-2-9.

The first Court allowed Rs. 28 for principal and Rs. 1-2-4½ for interest. The defendant's appeal to the District Judge was dismissed.

To this second appeal preferred by the defendant a preliminary objection is taken, viz., that the suit being of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, section 102, Civil Procedure Code, bars the appeal. To this it is replied that the suit is for a due payable to the plaintiffs by reason of their interest in immoveable property and, therefore, falls within the purview of Article 13 of the second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887. No authority is cited at the Bar on either side.

I am of opinion that the preliminary objection must succeed. In the first place, the suit is really one for damages consequent on the wrongful removal of manure to which the plaintiffs are entitled, not for delivery of that manure. And secondly, even if the claim be regarded as one for the manure itself as a "due" within the meaning of that term as used in Article (13) aforesaid, still that due is not "payable to the plaintiffs by reason of their interest in immoveable property." As stated in the wajib-ul-arz the malguzars' claim rests on custom. I think too with Abdur Rahim and Sundara Ayyar, JJ., in Sri Maharajah of Vizianagaram v. Kota Veeranna (1) that the dues contemplated by Article (13) are payments to which a person is entitled as representing his interest in certain immoveable property, not because he possesses some interest in immoveable property. A similar view seems to have been taken by Shephard and Subramania Ayyar, JJ., in Mullapudi Balakrishnayya v. Venkatanarasimha. Appa Rau (2).

I am asked to treat the memorandum of second appeal as an application for revision, in which connection the second and fourth grounds only are pressed. The former ground impeaches the finding of the District Judge in appeal that inasmuch as the defendant merely takes land on batai he comes within the category of persons who have no fields of their own. The other ground urges that the plaintiffs failed to discharge the burden which lay on them of showing that they allowed the defendant full nistar in respect of fuel as required by the wajib-ul-arz. Now the evidence of the defendant being a bataidar is of the vaguest description, his witnesses merely deposing that "he does batai work for others." A bataidar may or may not be a tenant: see Khoshal v. Nanhu (3), Deopuri v. Arjun (4) and Ganoo v. Mukund (5). If the defendant merely enters into cultivating partnership, he certainly cannot be regarded as having any fields, and for all his evidence establishes he does no more than that. In this connection I have to observe that the backbone of his case was a claim to be joint tenant of a holding recorded in the name of a nephew, a plea which failed in both the lower Courts. With regard to the burden of proof the defence regarding fuel was thus put in paragraph 3 of the defendant's written statement:—

"It is denied that the plaintiffs allow full nistar of fuel to the defendant and his nephew. The defendant had, therefore, to use the droppings of cattle as fuel."

This plea relates solely to the joint tenancy set up by the defendant but not established. It was not even suggested that regarded as a person without a field, the defendant was not allowed nistar as required by the wajib-ul-arz, and consequently no issue to cover such an allegation was framed. In these circumstances I cannot attach any weight to the general statement made by Aba (D. W. No. 3) that the malguzar charges 1 pice per head-load for fuel brought from the forest.

I hold that no appeal lies and that no sufficient ground for interfering in revision is made out. The decree of the District Judge is affirmed and costs in this Court will be paid by the defendant. Rs. 10 are allowed as Counsel's fee here.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 24, 25, 26, 27—Confession—Information received from accused, how far relevant.

Where the statement made by an accused to the Sub-Inspector of Police was to the effect that he would point out the spot where he had committed the murder, and thereafter he conducted the Police to a spot where earth was found saturated with blood:

Held, that so much of the Sub-Inspector's evidence as related to the alleged confession by the accused that he committed the murder was not admissible in evidence. [p. 820, col. 1.]

It was not the intention of the Legislature to allow the Police by an ingenious perversion of the provisions of section 27, Indian Evidence Act, to get rid of the safeguards thrown round prisoners by sections 24, 25 and 26 of the Act and the exception to the general rule must be very strictly confined within its legitimate limits. JUDGMENT.—One Natha Singh Jat aged about 40 years (according to Exhibit 6), owned land in the village of Subhrai, in the Kasur Tahsil and also in a small adjacent village called Bhura Hitar, and he had been residing for some time with his wife, Musammat Nihali (aged 30), and his children in the latter village. According to the evidence on the record, he was a professional thief and used to associate with Thakar Singh (P. W. No. 3), an approver in this case, and Tara Singh, appellant, and the three committed thefts together. His wife, Musammat Nihali, (also an accused in this case) is a woman of bad character, and has had immoral relations with Thakar Singh and Tara Singh as well as with another man in Mouza Waighil. The woman's conduct and her relations with Thakar Singh and Tara Singh created a scandal in Mouza Subhrai and Mouza Bhura Hitar, and Natha Singh was frequently requested to put a stop to her proceedings. He seems however, to have been an easy-going and complaisant husband and despite his neighbours' remonstrances continued his friendship with his two companions in crime.

On the 11th April 1914 Natha Singh was at work in his field in Mouza Subhrai, and in the evening while he was so engaged, Thakar Singh and Tara Singh appeared and asked him to accompany them [See the evidence of Kundan Singh (P. W. No. 5) and Wasawa Singh (P. W. No. 6)]. Later on the same evening the three were seen together by Chet Singh (P. W. No. 7), Arur Singh (P. W. No. 8) and Massa Singh (P. W. No. 9) and finally by Buta Singh (P. W. No. 10). Since then nothing has been heard of Natha Singh, nor has any one seen him. His continued absence, at a time when his presence in his fields was urgently required, gave rise to suspicions and rumours, and eventually on the 29th April Kundan Singh (P. W. No. 5) made a report at the Police station (see Exhibit P-7) setting forth the facts as above stated and suggesting that Natha Singh had been murdered by Tara Singh, Thakar Singh and Musammat Nihali.

The Sub-Inspector proceeded without delay to Mouza Bhura Hitar and searched the house of Musammat Nihali, but without result. The following day the houses of Thakar Singh and Tara Singh were also searched but nothing was found. Later on Thakar Singh and Tara Singh were produced before the Sub-Inspector, Sheikh Barkat Ullah (P. W. No. 18), and arrested. The Sub-Inspector, after stating the facts as above set forth, deposes as follows :—

"I took Tara Singh's statement. Tara Singh said that he would show me the spot where he had murdered Natha Singh. I went with him and he showed me a place where I found that the earth was stained with blood. It was literally soaked with blood as if it was fermented. There was also hair there, but I cannot say if the hair was mixed with the earth or separate from it. He also showed me a place at the river where he said that he had thrown the corpse of Natha Singh into the river."

From a reference to the Police diaries, it appears that Thakar Singh refused to make any detailed statement or to give any information unless he were first tendered a free pardon and that the statement of Tara Singh referred to by the Sub-Inspector in his evidence was recorded as follows: " Yeh bhi kaha ke wuh mauqa qatl ka nishan de sakta hai." If this record is accepted as correct, there was in fact no such definite admission of guilt as is deposed to by the Sub-Inspector.

On the 2nd day while the Police were making their investigation, a human arm was found on the river bank about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile lower down from the spot where the body is said to have been thrown in. On the 11th May the accused persons were taken before Lala Labhu Ram, Magistrate, first class, who recorded a note (see page 24) to the effect that Tara Singh denied all knowledge about Natha Singh's murder or that he had any acquaintance with Natha Singh, Musammat Nihali or Thakar Singh; that Thakar Singh on the other hand admitted that he had taken part in the murder in conjunction with Tara Singh and Musammat Nihali, and that he had in his possession a pagri of the deceased and the weapon with which the murder was committed but that he would not give this up unless first given a promise of pardon; and that Musammat Nihali admitted illicit friendship with Tara Singh and Thakar Singh during the last six months and added that while Tara Singh had no wife of his own, Thakar Singh had a wife, but on her account had sent his wife away to her own parents. Her statement will be found at page 24 of the record.

On the 12th May Thakar Singh was granted a padron and on the 13th May he took the Police and the investigating party first to the place where the murder is alleged to have been committed and then to a place near the river where he stated that he had buried certain blood-stained clothes and the chhavi with which the crime had been committed (Exhibits P-A, B, C, D and E). On digging up the ground at the place indicated the articles in question were found and in the pagri (Exhibit P-A) there was found a letter addressed to Natha Singh. This letter has been proved to have been delivered to the latter a few days before his disappearance. [See Jagat Singh (P. W. No. 21), Tilok Singh (P. W. No. 22) and Ranga (P. W. No. 23)]. Among the clothes was a chaddar said to belong to Tara Singh (Exhibit P-B), but Tara Singh was not questioned with regard to this and there is no proof that it ever belonged to him. There is also evidence on the record to the effect that Musammat Nihali tried on one occasion to get some arsenic from Ishar Singh (P. W. No. 25) and this witness goes so far as to assert that when he asked her why she wanted it, she told him that she intended to give it to her husband. Hukam Singh (P. W. No. 26) deposed that he heard this story shortly afterwards from Ishar Singh, but the Sessions Judge has very rightly discredited all this evidence as improbable in itself and irrelevant in the present case. He has also and equally rightly rejected the evidence of Narain Singh, P. W. No. 17, who stated that one morning at about dawn he saw Thakar Singh and Tara Singh go to Natha Singh's house and there heard them tell Musammat Nihali that "they had finished off the business." The learned Sessions Judge, while accepting the evidence of the witnesses who depose that they saw Natha Singh in the company of Thakar Singh and Tara Singh on the evening of the 11th April, points out, and we agree with him, that this evidence proves nothing more than that the three men were in company together a good many hours before the alleged murder was committed. He also attaches no importance to the discovery of the arm-bone as reliable proof of the death of Natha Singh. The result is that, so far as the above evidence goes, there is no reliable corroboration of the statement of the approver that Tara Singh was one of Natha Singh's murderers. The learned Sessions Judge, however, lays great stress on the statemant alleged to have been made by Tara Singh to the Sub-Inspector on the 30th April before Tara Singh pointed out the spot where the murder is said to have been committed. As already remarked, the Sub-Inspector deposes that Tara Singh told him that he would point out a place where he (Tara Singh) had committed the murder. The learned Judge holds that a statement of this kind, whether it amounts to a confession or not, is admissible in evidence, provided that it led to the discovery of some fact, and that the question then merely is whether the statement is true and the discovery is genuine. He finds that the statement is true and that the spot pointed out by Tara Singh is actually the spot where the murder was committed, and he concludes with the words: "I consider that the guilt of Tara Singh is fully established by the evidence of the Sub-Inspector and of Chet Singh as to his statement, coupled with his discovery of the blood-stained soil." The Assessors were also of opinion that Natha Singh had been murdered, and two of them were of opinion that Tara Singh's guilt has been fully established; agreeing with them, the Sessions Judge convicted him of murder and sentenced him to death. One Assessor thought the case doubtful and did not credit the evidence that Tara Singh had pointed out the scene of the murder, Musammat Nihali, who was alleged to have abetted the murder, was acquitted on the ground that there was no sufficient corroboration of the evidence of the approver.

The appellant has appealed through his Counsel, Messrs. Muhammad Shafi and Brij Lal, and Mr. Broadway, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, appeared at the hearing on behalf of the Crown.

After careful consideration of the evidence on the record and of the arguments addressed to us, we are satisfied that Natha Singh was murdered on the night of the 11th April 1914 and that Thakar Singh, the approver, and Tara Singh, appellant, were both concerned in the murder. There can be no doubt that the letter (Exhibit P-4) found in the pagri (Exhibit P-A) was the one addressed to Natha Singh a few days before his disappearance. Jagat Singh (P. W. No. 21) testifies that he wrote it at the instance of Tilok Singh (P. W. No. 22), and his evidence is corroborated by that of Tilok Singh and of Ranga (P. W. No. 23), the messenger who delivered the letter to Natha Singh. The Sub-Inspector, Sheikh Barkat Ullah (P. W. No. 18), states that he found the letter in the pagri; that when found it was "stained with blood" and that it was not sent to the Chemical Examiner because it was feared that the process of chemical examination might seriously damage it. The discovery of this letter corroborates the statement of the approver as to the fact of the murder of Natha Singh, and the genuineness of the discovery is testified to by unimpeachable evidence [see the evidence of Honorary Captain Sardar Bahadur Lehna Singh (P. W. No. 10); Ram Chand (P. W. No. 11)]. The fact, then, that this letter (Exhibit P-4) was undoubtedly found in the pagri (Exhibit P-A) which was dug up at the spot indicated by Thakar Singh, must be taken as strong circumstantial proof that Natha Singh met with a violent death and that Thakar Singh at all events was concerned in the murder.

The next question is whether participation in this murder has been satisfactorily brought home to the appellant, Tara Singh. The learned Sessions Judge, in finding that it has, has relied very largely upon the statement alleged to have been made by Tara Singh to the Sub-Inspector to the effect that "he would point out the spot where he had committed the murder," a statement which, in the opinion of the learned Judge, was admissible in evidence in its entirety. Upon this point we cannot agree with the Sessions Judge. Section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act provides (as an exception to the general rules laid down in sections 25 and 26) that "when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a Police officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved."

In the present case the appellant is alleged to have said: "I will point out the spot where I committed the murder," and thereafter he conducted the Police and the other witnesses to a spot where earth was found saturated with blood. Obviously the words, "where I committed the murder," did not in themselves "distinctly relate" to the discovery of that spot, as the locus delicti could have been discovered just as easily had he merely stated "I will show you the scene of the murder," or "I will take you to a particular place where you will find blood." A person who had no hand in the murder but had chanced to witness its commission might well have been able to lead the Police to the spot in question, and, other considerations apart, the learned Sessions Judge was not justified in assuming that it would have been impossible for Tara Singh to direct the Police to the spot, had he not taken part in the murder. It has frequently been laid down that it was not the intention of the Legislature to allow the Police, by an ingenious perversion of the provisions of section 27, to get rid of the safeguards thrown round prisoners by sections 24, 25 and 26 of the Act, and that the exception to the general rule must be very strictly confined within its legitimate limits. [See Empress v. Rama Birapa (1), Reg. v. Jora Hasji (2), Queen-Empress v. Kamalia (3), Queen-Empress v. Commer Sahib (4) and Abdul Jamal v. Emperor (5)] In the case last cited it was definitely held by a Division Bench of this Court that an accused's statement that "he would point out a certain spot would be relevant, and that at the spot indicated blood would be found, would be admissible, but not the further statement that it was at this spot that he had committed the murder." With this exposition of the law we entirely agree, and we are unable to appreciate the Sessions Judge's difficulty as to recording a "partial confession of this character." We hold, therefore, that so much of the Sub-Inspector's evidence as relates to the alleged confession by the appellant that he committed the murder, was wrongly admitted in evidence.

The fact, however, remains, and is proved satisfactorily, that the appellant actually took the Police and the investigating party to a spot where the earth appeared to be soaked with blood and that earth taken from this spot was subsequently found by the Chemical Examiner to bear traces of mammalian blood (see Exhibit P-VIII). Appellant has not attempted to explain how it was that he knew that blood would be found at this spot, and his defence consists in a total denial of everything. In the circumstances the only inference possible is that he actually participated in the murder, and to that extent his conduct in pointing out the spot corroborates the evidence of the approver, and establishes his guilt.

We are not, however, prepared to accept the evidence of the approver at its face value or hold that appellant was the prime-mover and principal in this crime. As supplying the motive for the murder, the Sessions Judge refers to Tara Singh's liaison with Natha Singh's wife, Musammat Nihali, and in proof of this intimacy relies upon the evidence of Partap Singh (P. W. No. 27), Sham Singh (P. W. No. 28), Hukam Singh (P. W. No. 26), Chet Singh (P. W. No. 7), Kundan Singh (P. W. No. 5) and Wasawa Singh (P. W. No. 6). But of these witnesses, Sham Singh and Hukam Singh say nothing about the alleged liaison; Kundan Singh and Chet Singh suggest that Thakar Singh had also an intrigue with Musammat Nihali, and Wasawa Singh positively asserts that such was the case. Furthermore, Kundan Singh in the report which he made to the Police (page 3) distinctly stated that both Tara Singh and Thakar Singh had intimacy with the woman, and the latter, in the statement made by her to Lala Labhu Ram, Magistrate, first class, admitted the fact and further added that it was on her account that Thakar Singh had sent his own wife away to her parents' home. The learned Sessions Judge in his judgment does not allude to Thakar Singh's intimacy with Musammat Nihali, but that there was such intimacy is fully proved and its existence tends to negative Thakar Singh's statement that he was taking but a secondary part in the commission of the murder and this, too, with reluctance. He and Musammat Nihali are of about the same age; Tara Singh is some five years younger; and the man who got rid of his own wife in order to carry on his intrigue with Natha Singh's wife had obviously just as strong a motive for murdering Natha Singh as Tara Singh had. As a matter of fact it appears to us that in all probability it was Thakar Singh, the elder man, who took the leading part in his murder, and that he has ascribed to Tara Singh acts which he himself committed. He had to admit that it was he himself who buried the clothes—an act which in itself shows that he retained his presence of mind on the occasion because Tara Singh had not disclosed, or had been unable to disclose, to the Police the fact that the clothes were buried at a particular place.

Taking all the circumstances into consideration we are satisfied that Tara Singh actively abetted the murder of Natha Singh, but that Thakar Singh was the more guilty party of the two, and upon the view we take, we cannot but regret that the principal offender has, by his astuteness in refusing to make any admission unless granted a free pardon, succeeded in escaping scot-free. But as matters stand, we have no hesitation in agreeing with the Sessions Judge and the majority of the Assessors that Tara Singh was present at and abetted the murder of Natha Singh (sections 114, 302, Indian Penal Code). As, however, we regard him as the less guilty of the two, and as there is no direct evidence of the actual death of Natha Singh (though we have no reason whatever to doubt that fact), we feel justified in substituting the sentence of transportation for life for the capital sentence awarded by the Sessions Judge. Except to this extent, the appeal of Tara Singh is rejected.

Appeal rejected; Sentence modified.

SHER SINGH AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 121,514—Security for good behaviour—Subsequent conviction under s. 325, Penal Code—Forfeiture of bond of sureties.

Where a man was placed on security under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, not merely as being a receiver of stolen goods but also as being a dangerous man and the son of a notorious dacoit, and was subsequently convicted of a bad offence under section 325, Indian Penal Code:

Held, that there was nothing in law to prevent the forfeiture of the bond of sureties under the circumstances. [p. 822, col. 1.]

Udham Singh v. Emperor, 21 Ind. Cas. 175; 334 P. L. R. 1913; 14 Cr. L. J. 575; 15 P. R. 1913 Cr; 39 P. W. R. 1913 Cr., explained and distinguished.

Case reported by the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore Division, with his No. 927, dated the 20th September 1913, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

FACTS.—On 13th January 1912, Mohan Singh, son of Bur Singh, was called upon to give security amounting to Rs. 1,000 for good behaviour for a period of one year, under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and the two petitioners, Sher Singh and Mangal Singh, were accepted as his sureties. During the period of security (i. e., on the 30th July 1915) Mohan Singh was convicted under section 325, Indian Penal Code, and the two accused petitioners were ordered on 22nd April 1913 to pay Rs. 500 on their bonds.

The accused on conviction by Sardar Jiwan Singh, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the first Class in the Lahore District, were ordered, by order dated 22nd April 1913, under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to pay Rs. 500 on their bonds. On appeal to the District Magistrate of Lahore, the petitioners were ordered to forfeit Rs. 250 each.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following

GROUNDS.—Revision is sought in this Court on the grounds:—

(1) that in view of Gul Khan v. Emperor (1), the order confiscating the security was illegal. On this point I agree with the opinion of the District Magistrate for the reason stated by him;

(2) that the amount ordered to be forfeited is excessive and that the offence of Mohan Singh was not against property.

In this latter connection the case is on all fours with Udham Singh v. Emperor (2) and, if the principles laid down by Kensington, J., in that judgment are to be followed, and so far as subordinate Courts are concerned they must, of course, be followed, the petitioners are entitled to urge that the order of the District Magistrate is wrong. I accordingly recommend that it be set aside and if the whole or any part of the sum of Rs. 250 demanded from petitioners have been paid, that they be refunded.

ORDER.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Lala Nihal Chand, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—We cannot altogether follow the learned Sessions Judge in his reference to the ruling Udham Singh v. Emperor (2). The head-note of that ruling is no doubt misleading* and goes beyond the terms of the judgment, but a perusal of the judgment itself should make it clear that the Chief Court has not, as he appears to think, prohibited the forfeiture of security under certain circumstances. Liability to forfeiture, with reference to section 121, Criminal Procedure Code, was recognised, and all that the ruling indicated was the necessity for moderation and the exercise of reasonable discretion where so rigorous a measure as forfeiture from sureties was contemplated.

The facts of the present case have been examined at some length. We find that they differ materially from those dealt with in the ruling referred to as Udham Singh v. Emperor (2).

The convict was here previously placed on security under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, not merely as being a receiver of stolen goods but also as being a dangerous man and the son of a notorious dacoit. He was subsequently convicted of a bad offence under section 325, Indian Penal Code, which showed that this character was well deserved.

We are not prepared to say that there is anything wrong here in the reduced penalty exacted from the sureties by the District Magistrate. They must have known quite well that they ran a serious risk in becoming sureties for a man of this class, and their liability can be properly enforced to that extent.

We decline to interfere on revision and direct that the records be returned to the Sessions Court without further action.

Revision rejected.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Wild Birds Protection Act (X of 1887)—Wild Birds and Animals Protection Act (VIII of 1912), s. 3—Rules framed under Act of 1887 not superseded by new rules under Act (VIII of 1912)—Old rules to be interpreted by sections of later Act—Burden of proof.

Though the rules framed under the Wild Birds Protection Act of 1887 have not been superseded by the rules framed under Act VIII of 1912, they are to be interpreted by the sections of the later Act. [p. 822, col. 2.]

The burden of proving that the egrets whose feathers were alleged to have been imported into Monywa Municipality were captured or killed during the close season contrary to the rules lies on the prosecution and it is illegal to lay it on the accused. [p. 823, col. 1.]

Mr. J. N. Basu, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—Applicant has been convicted under section 3 of the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1912, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs 50 or to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month in default, on a charge of having imported into Monywa Muncipality 50 ticals of egrets' feathers during July 1913, that is, during the breeding season according to the rules then in force, namely, those contained in General Department Notification No. 105, dated the 30th May 1901.

These Rules were framed under the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1887, but at the date of the institution of this case were still in force, not having yet been superseded by rules under Act VIII of 1912.

Rule 2 of these Rules declares that the breeding season of egrets shall be held to extend from the 15th of April to the 31st of October, and Rule 3 prohibits possession or sale within the limits of a Municipality of any egret recently killed or taken, or the importation into a Municipality of the plumage of an egret during its breeding season. But this rule must be interpreted by the provisions of section 3 of Act VIII of 1912. As it stands, it goes beyond that section, which makes it unlawful to capture an egret during the close time, or to kill during the close time an egret which has not been captured before the commencement of such close time, or to sell or buy or offer to sell or buy or to possess any such bird which has not been captured or killed before the commencement of such close time or the flesh thereof, or if any plumage has been taken from any such bird captured or killed during such close time, to sell or buy or to offer to sell or buy or to possess such plumage. The applicant, therefore, could only be convicted if the egrets which supplied the plumage in question were captured or killed during the close season as laid down in that section.

The District Magistrate held, on the ground that the applicant was found in possession of egrets' feathers two months after the beginning of the close season, that the burden of proving that they were not killed during the breeding season was upon him.

It is contended on applicant's behalf that this was illegal. The District Magistrate has not instructed the Government Prosecutor to support the conviction as he might very well have done. The Act is a new one and the point is important.

On consideration, I am of opinion that section 3 of Act VIII of 1912 is not framed in such a way as to lay the burden of proof upon the accused in cases under section 3. It would have been easy to frame the definitions of offences with reference to section 105 of the Evidence Act. As the section stands, it does not do this, and I think it must be taken that the burden of proof is on the prosecution.

Now in the present case, there was no evidence against the accused except the opinion of a Forest Ranger that many of the feathers in question are this year's feathers, that these feathers come on at the breeding season and fall in Tawthalin or Thadingyut, and that from the appearance of the feathers in question, they would seem to have been taken from birds that had been shot, and the improbabi ity of any one taking feathers obtained, as applicant says he obtained those in question, in Rangoon to Monywa for sale.

The Deputy Conservator of Forests and the second of the two witnesses already referred to were unable to give any sort of opinion as to the age of the feathers. This neutralises to a great extent the opinion of the Forest Ranger who is not shown to be an expert.

The applicant proved that his brother in Rangoon had purchased egrets' feathers to the extent of about four times the quantity of those in question at Government auctions on the 30th November 1912 and 7th December 1911 and he said that the feathers in question were some of those.

It follows from the foregoing that the case against the applicant really rests on the improbability before mentioned and I do not think that a conviction can safely be based on such a ground. It might have been an extremely foolish thing to do to bring egrets' feathers to Monywa for sale, and at the same time applicant might have done this. The conviction, therefore, in my opinion, cannot be sustained.

I set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine be refunded, and that the order confiscating the egrets' feathers be set aside and the feathers returned to the applicant.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 157, 165—Locking of doors of accused's house by Police of one Police station in jurisdiction of another Police station, whether ultra vires

Although the wording of section 165, Criminal Procedure Code, limits the powers of a Police officer to the places within the limits of the station of which he is in charge or to which he is attached and although the locking of the doors of an accused's house is a step which would facilitate the search of the house and would make the search a thing of some value, yet the locking of the doors and the keeping of guard over the house are also a part of the ordinary duties of the Police under the words in section 157 "to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case and to take such measures as may be necessary for the discovery and arrest of the offender;" and in section 157 there is no provision preventing the Police of one Police station from acting under that section in the jurisdiction of another Police station. [p. 824, col. 2.]

NATHA SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Petition for revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Montgomery Division, at Lahore, dated the 11th January 1915.

Mr. Taj-ud-Din, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This case comes before me at the petition stage, but I write a formal judgment because of the importance of the point raised. I do no think I need issue notice, or have the case further argued, because the true interpretation of the powers of the Police in investigating cases seems to me quite clear.

It seems that the Police Inspector of the Tarn Taran Circle sent certain Head Constables and Police Constables to the house of Sawan Singh and Natha Singh, accused, which lies in the jurisdiction of the Sharakpur Police station in the Gujranwala District. The matter before the Police was a burglary, which was under investigation in the Tarn Taran thana of the Amritsar District. The Police officers concerned on reaching the village found the house in question and locked the doors and despatched a note to the local thana for the usual assistance in making the search. This was done in view of the provisions of section 165 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That night the said Constables kept guard over the house along with two lambardars and a chaukidar, and in the middle of the night were attacked by a number of armed men who overpowered them, broke open one of the rooms that had been closed and took away two bundles which are reasonably supposed to have contained stolen property.

The first class Magistrate exercising powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, convicted the three accused before him, having discharged certain others, and sentenced them to various terms of imprisonment and to fine. They appealed to the Sessions Court, which made some alterations in the convictions, etc., but substantially left things as they were.

The revision in this Court practically proceeds upon one point, namely, that the Police of Tarn Taran were acting ultra vires in closing the house of Sawan Singh and Natha Singh, and that, therefore, the accused had a right of private defence of property and were justified in assaulting the Constables. This point was also taken before the learned Sessions Judge who gave a very brief answer, namely, that the Police did not search the house.

Before me it was very persistently argued that section 165, Criminal Procedure Code, was infringed by the Police in view of the words: "In any place within the limits of the station of which he is in charge or to which he is attached." It is argued that, though no doubt the Tarn Taran Police did not actually search the house in the absence of the local Police, yet the closing of the doors was a step preliminary to search and was, therefore, illegal. It is also suggested that the closing of the doors was an act of criminal trespass. Such an argument as this is only possible if one ignores other relevant provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I need only refer to section 157 of the Code, which says that if an officer in charge of a Police station has reason to suspect the commission of an offence of a cognizable nature he shall proceed in person or shall depute one of his subordinate officers to proceed to the spot to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case and to take such measures as may be necessary for the discovery and arrest of the offender. No doubt the locking of the doors of the accused's house was a step which would facilitate the search of the house and would make the search of the house a thing of some value; but the locking of the doors of the house and the keeping of guard over the house were also certainly a part of the ordinary duties of the Police under the words in the section 157 "to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case and to take such measures as may be necessary for the discovery and arrest of the offender"; and in section 157 there is no provision preventing the Police of one Police station from acting under that section in the jurisdiction of another Police station.

I, therefore, overrule the objection, and, inasmuch as the learned Counsel has no further arguments to offer, I reject the revision.

Revision rejected.

NGA HEIN—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Charge to be communicated to accused—Reputation, nature of, evidence of—Order without reasonable grounds as to prevent accused from furnishing security, legality of—Sureties, qualifications of.

An order under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be made unless the charge which the accused has to meet is communicated to him. [p. 825, col. 1.]

When it is sought to prove the reputation of a person, the evidence which is required is the evidence of respectable persons who are acquainted with the person on his trial, who live in the same neighbourhood and are aware of his reputation, and these persons, should ordinarily not be officials. [p. 825, col. 2.]

An order under section 114 framed without reasonable grounds or with the express intention of preventing the accused from furnishing security is ultra vires. [p. 826, col. 1.]

The sureties required in a case under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code are persons who are in a position to influence the accused and likely to be able to restrain him and who, if they fail to do so, can forfeit the amount mentioned in the bond. [p. 826, col. 1.]

It is not to be supposed that only holders of landed property can be in such a position. [p. 826, col. 1.]

Mr. S. Vasadevan, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The District Magistrate has commented upon some of the grosser errors of the Magistrate who tried this case. He has also raised an objection, which was perhaps hardly justified, to the form in which the order setting forth the substance of the information received was recorded.

The order was in the words of section 110 (a), Criminal Procedure Code, and was in the nature of an alternative charge. The applicant knew what he had to meet and there can be no doubt that he was not prejudiced. It is extraordinary that having displayed so much solicitude on the applicant's behalf lest he should have been prejudiced by an order containing a charge which was communicated to him, the District Magistrate should have upheld the proceedings of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the ground that the applicant was a dangerous character a charge under section 110 (f), Criminal Procedure Code, which was never communicated to him. On this ground alone, it appears to me that the order cannot stand. But the proceedings appear to reek with everything with which proceedings of this kind should not.

The applicant was charged with being by habit a robber, house-breaker or thief. He has never been convicted, and it is apparently sought to prove the fact by evidence as to his reputation. The witnesses called were three Police officers and three ward-headmen. Only one of the latter is a resident in the same quarter as the applicant. Where it is sought to prove the reputation of a person, the evidence which is required is the evidence of respectable persons who are acquainted with the person on his trial, who live in the same neighbourhood and are aware of his reputation and, as the District Magistrate notes, these persons should ordinarily not be officials. Reputation may be due to the fact that the respondent is suspected of having committed certain acts, but such evidence is not generally of great value; where it is the evidence of persons who are responsible for the maintenance of order and who have attempted unsuccessfully to procure the conviction of the respondent, it is probably of very little value indeed.

Here, the Magistrate in his order states supicions as facts and proceeds to argue upon them. He says:—'The facts as established by the evidence for the prosecution are that he is in possession of two revolvers." And he then proceeds to argue that because revolvers had been used in certain crimes the applicant-respondent must have been concerned in them, and so on. The Magistrate appears to have been of the opinion that the present condition of the country made it necessary for the protection of the well-disposed members that "a man of accused's class" should be put upon security. What the condition of the country is, or whether the Magistrate supposes that, because he thinks that the condition requires it, the provisions of the law should be overridden is not clear. What does appear to be clear is that the Police look upon the applicant-respondent as a clever scoundrel and they have been unable to convict him of any particular offence, and they, therefore, desire to have him locked up. Section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no doubt, provides for such proceedings, but it does not provide for an order being made without reasonable grounds.

MUHAMMAD SHARIF v. EMPEROR.

Moreover, it appears probable that the order of the Magistrate as to security was framed with the express intention of preventing the applicant from furnishing security, and if so, I can only say that it was in keeping with the rest of the Magistrate's procedure, in which he admitted evidence which can have had no object but to prejudice the applicant and apparently held that a conviction was a conviction whether it was upset in appeal or not.

The order both of the Magistrate and of the District Magistrate requiring the sureties to be respectable holders of landed property was also an improper order. The sureties required in a case of this kind are persons who are in a position to influence the respondent and likely to be able to restrain him and who, if they fail to do so, can forfeit the amount mentioned in the bond. It is not to be supposed that only holders of landed property can be in such a position. Such a restriction should not be made in the order, but it is for the Magistrate when security is offered to consider whether sureties are persons of the kind described.

The order of the Magistrate is set aside and if the applicant is in custody he will be released, or if he has executed a bond, the bond will be cancelled.

Order set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 75, 59—Sentence—Transportation for life or for ten years.

Under section 75 of the Indian Penal Code, the Court, if it awards a sentence of transportation, must sentence the convict to transportation for life. [p. 826, col. 2.]

Arura v. Emperor, 31 P. R. 1903 Cr.; 14 P. L. R. 1904; 1 Cr. L. J. 89; Queen v. Naiada, 1 A. 43 (F. B.), referred to.

In lieu, however, of such sentence it may sentence the convict to imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and under the provisions of section 59 of the Code, it may, in every case in which the offender is punishable with imprisonment for a term of seven years or upwards, instead of awarding sentence of imprisonment, sentence the offender to transportation for a term not less than seven years, and not exceeding the term for which under the Code such offender is liable to imprisonment. [p. 826, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi Division, dated the 14th October 1914.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Muhammad Sharif, aged 29, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi Division, of an offence punishable under section 380, Indian Penal Code; and in view of his four previous convictions (the last of which was had on the 3rd April 1908 when he was sentenced to 7 years' rigorous imprisonment) has been sentenced, under section 75, Indian Penal Code, to transportation for 14 years.

The Judge in Chambers before whom this appeal came in the first instance was satisfied that the appellant's guilt had been clearly established, but referred the question of the legality of the sentence to a Division Bench for determination, as under the rules of this Court he had himself no jurisdiction to interfere therewith.

There can be no doubt that the sentence passed by the Sessions Judge is illegal, as under section 75 of the Code (as amended by Act III of 1910), the Court, if it awards a sentence of transportation, must sentence the convict to transportation for life [see Arura v. Emperor (1) and Queen v. Naiada (2)].

In lieu, however, of such sentence, it may sentence the convict to imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and under the provisions of section 59 of the Code, it may, in every case in which the offender is punishable with imprisonment for a term of seven years or upwards, instead of awarding sentence of imprisonment, sentence the offender to transportation for a term not less than seven years and not exceeding the term for which under the Code such offender is liable to imprisonment.

In the present case the appellant undoubtedly deserves a severer punishment, but as the Sessions Judge was apparently of opinion that it was necessary to sentence him to transportation for life, we do not propose to enhance the sentence awarded. The provisions of the law must, however, be observed, and we, therefore, so far accept this appeal as to set aside the sentence passed by the Sessions Judge and in lieu thereof we sentence the appellant, under the combined provisions of sections 380, 75 and 59 of the Code, to transportation for ten years. In all other respects the appeal is rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 125, 406, scope of—Order to execute bond for keeping peace—District Magistrate's power to cancel bond.

The terms of section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code are sufficiently wide to cover a case where the District Magistrate finds that the materials before the Subordinate Magistrate were not sufficient to justify an order for taking security.

Section 406 of the Code gives an appeal to the District Magistrate from an order to furnish security for good behaviour, while section 125 relates to orders for keeping the peace as well as to those from which section 406 allows an appeal.

Nabu v. Emperor, 4 C. L. J. 428; 11 C. W. N. 25; 34 C. 1 (F. B.); 4 Cr. L. J. 399; 1 M. L. T. 368, referred to.

Case reported by the District Magistrate of Balaghat under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.—Two persons, who had been ordered by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Balaghat, to execute bonds for keeping the peace, moved the District Magistrate under section 125, Criminal Procedure Code, to cancel the bonds on the ground that they ought not to have been required. The District Magistrate considered the evidence for the prosecution too weak to justify the order complained of, but held that under the section cited he could not direct the cancellation of the bonds except on the ground that they were no longer necessary. He has, therefore, reported the case for the order of this Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code.

The learned District Magistrate holds that section 406 of the Code would be superfluous if section 125 confers a power of cancellation. The former section gives an appeal to the District Magistrate from an order to furnish security for good behaviour, while the latter relates to order for keeping the peace as well as to those from which section 406 allows an appeal. It is evident that the decision of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Nabu v. Emperor (1) was not brought to the District Magistrate's notice. I agree with the view there expressed that the terms of section 125 are sufficiently wide to cover a case like the present, where the District Magistrate finds that the materials before the Subordinate Magistrate were not sufficient to justify an order for taking security. The need for a right of appeal from orders to give security for being of good behaviour is doubtless based on the fact that persons affected by such an order are often unable to give any security and so never execute a bond at all. On the other hand, persons ordered to execute a bond for keeping the peace have generally no difficulty in meeting the requirement.

The case is remitted to the District Magistrate for disposal of the application made to him under section 125, Criminal Procedure Code.

Ordered accordingly.

Press Act (I of 1910), ss. 4 (1), Expl. II, 20—Particular passages, whether to be specified in notice—Evidence—Proof—Other articles in paper, admissibility of—Disaffection to be excited must be against Indian Government—Relevancy of disaffection excited against other authorities.

The particular passage objected to in an article need not be specified in a notice issued under section 4 (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910. [p. 828, col. 2.]

Mahomed Ali v. Emperor, 20 Ind. Cas. 977; 14 Cr. L. J. 497; 18 C. W. N. 1, referred to.

AMAR SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Explanation II to section 4 of the Act does not apply to a case where the gravamen of the charge made by Government against the article is not so much that it contains 'comments' on the acts of the authorities, as that it consists of an account of certain events so inaccurate, so misleading and so unfair to those authorities as to be likely, apart from all 'comments', to excite the feelings mentioned in the notice. [p. 828, col. 2.]

Other articles from other issues of the paper containing the article in question are admissible for the purpose specified in section 20 of the Act alone, i. e., 'in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency' of the said article. [p. 828, col. 2.]

The hatred and contempt and disaffection likely to be excited must be shown to be against the Indian Government, and not against the Canadian authorities or the Governor of Hong Kong, is true in a sense, but where the article complained of in giving an account of the voyage and adventures of the "Komagata Maru" and of the Budge Budge riot, aimed at literary effect and worked up to a climax by narrating the alleged oppressive conduct of Canada and Hong Kong and distinctly leaving the impression of a massacre by the Police in India of a number of unarmed and helpless man, the inaccurate and unfair statement of that conduct becomes relevant. [p. 829, col. 1.]

Application under section 17 of the Indian Press Act, 1910, to set aside an order of the Local Government, dated 14th October 1914, forfeiting the security deposit of Rs. 1,000 made by the Loyal Printing Press of Lahore.

Bawa Sewa Ram Singh, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—On 6th October 1914 the Urdu paper Sher-i-Punjab, published in Lahore and printed in the "Loyal Printing Press" at that place, included an article headed "The Victims of Suspicion"; and 8 days later the Local Government, by notice under section 4 (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910, confiscated the Press's security deposit of Rs. 1,000 and declared all copies of the paper of 6th October 1914 "forfeited to His Majesty," the reason stated being that the article aforesaid was, in the opinion of the Local Government, likely to bring into hatred and contempt the Government established by law in British India and to excite disaffection towards the said Government.

Under section 17 of the same Act an application to set aside the Local Government's aforesaid order has been filed on behalf of the Proprietor and Keeper of the said press, and we have heard the arguments laid before us on his behalf by his learned Pleader, Mr. Sewa Ram Singh, with the result that, in our opinion, the order of forfeiture was fully justified and that the application must fail. The matter, indeed, seems to us so clear that we have not thought it necessary to call upon the learned Government Advocate to answer Mr. Sewa Ram Singh.

A few of the principal points raised in argument may be touched upon. It is complained that the particular passage objected to in the article should have been specified in the notice; but the ruling Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (1) fully meets this contention. However, in order that the applicant might suffer no unfair disadvantage, the Government Advocate at our suggestion indicated the specially objectionable passages, at the same time saying that the whole tone of the article was bad.

Then Explanation II to section 4 of the Act was invoked; but it seems to us that the gravamen of the charge made by Government against the article is not so much that it contains "comments" on the acts of the authorities, as that it consists of an account of the voyage and adventures of the "Komagata Maru" and of the Budge Budge riot so inaccurate, so misleading and so unfair to those authorities as to be likely, apart from all "comments", to excite the feelings mentioned in the notice.

In the printed paper-book we have, at the instance of the applicant, some five other articles from other issues of the paper, put forward as showing that the general tone of the paper is, if anything, extravagantly loyal. The learned Government Advocate objected to the admissibility of these articles, pointing to certain remarks in Ghulam Kadir Khan v. Emperor (2). As to this we must lay it down that the articles are admissible for the purpose specified in section 20 of the Act alone, i.e., "in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency" of the article of 6th October 1914; and after reading the said articles we can only express the view that they do not in any way prove that the article now under consideration is harmless or innocent.

Then Mr. Sewa Ram Singh contends, on the strength of the wording of the Act, that the hatred and contempt and disaffection likely to be excited must be shown to be against the Indian Government and not against the Canadian authorities or the Governor of Hong Kong. This is true in a sense; but the article aims at literary effect and works up to a climax thus—first, the Hong Kong people tried to prevent the ship from sailing to Vancouver, owing to "suspicion"; secondly, the ship arrived at Vancouver, the passengers were not allowed to land, they made a strike "from starvation," the people of Canada were callous to their sufferings, and the Police there "attacked the passengers at the dead of night," the ship being driven away next day by a parade of warships; thirdly, arrived at Yokohama, the passengers, called "oppressed (sitam rasida) and unfortunate men", were ill-treated by the Japanese and told they would not be allowed to land at Hong Kong, though never before had the laws of Hong Kong been used in this way; fourthly, the "bad end," "the plainful and dreadful circumstance the poor victims of suspicion had to face, on reaching their home, owing to mere suspicion. The end of their hardships at last came in the form of bloodshed at Budge Budge, where 16 of these affliction-stricken men were hit by gun bullets and gave up their lives writing with pain. Many were wounded, etc., etc."

When the alleged oppressive conduct of Canada and Hong Kong is made use of in this way, we cannot accede to the contention that the inaccurate and unfair statement of that conduct is irrelevant in such a case as the present.

We need not, however, labour this point, for the part of the article given in brief above as "fourthly" proves Government's case without more. The Editor knew, for he had full cognizance of the Government Communique of 2nd October 1914, printed in the Civil and Military Gazette and in many newspapers, and reproduced (so Mr. Sewa Ram Singh tells us) in the Sher-i-Punjab itself on October 5th, that it was the returned passengers who opened fire on the Police and on the British officers at Budge Budge, that many of them were armed with deadly weapons, and that they were not fired upon "owing to mere suspicion." Instead of telling the story in a fair and impartial way, the article entirely suppresses all mention of the weapons in the hands of, and used with deadly effect by, the passengers, and distinctly leaves the impression of a massacre by the Police of a number of unarmed and helpless men. The feelings such a story, if believed, must arouse against the British authorities are obvious.

The last paragraph of the article, which consists of "comments," makes the matter even worse. "They were not given an opportunity for trying to remove the suspicion." It is idle for the apologist of a body of men armed with loaded guns and pistols to talk of those men removing the suspicion resting upon them. "The barbarians of Kabul and Yaghistan are not accorded such treatment.....are free to move about and go anywhere they like, etc?" It is hardly fair comment for the paper to try to make its readers think that it was barbarous and oppressive for the Government of India to take order with a gang of armed desperadoes, and, under a lawful Ordinance, to arrange for their return to their homes under special control in special trains. "In short, these affliction-stricken men became victims of suspicion and had to face this last calamity without any fault?". As to the last three words we need only say that they may be in keeping with the facts as given in the article, but they are not in keeping with the real facts as known to the Editor, and the "comment" proves to the hilt the evil intention in the misstatement of the facts. These men committed a 'fault" in landing in British India with arms, for which they had no licenses; and they went further, and, in using those arms to kill Policemen, who were merely doing their duty, they committed another and greater "fault," which proved their undoing.

The application is dismissed with costs, Rs. 80.

Application dismissed.

Agra and Oudh Water Works Act (I of 1891), s. 46—Waste water used in garden—Offence.

Waste water may be used for the purposes of a garden as it cannot be used for a second time for domestic purposes.

In cold weather the garden of the applicant was found well watered but the pacca reservoir and channel connected with a well in the garden were dry and full of leaves:

Held, that this circumstance was not sufficient for conviction of the applicant for having used for gardening the water supplied for domestic purposes.

Criminal revision from an order of a Magistrate, first Class, Allahabad.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This application arises out of a conviction under section 46 of the Water Works Act. The facts on which the conviction is based are as follows:—

The applicant, Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, has a house and a garden. In the garden there is a well, attached to it there is a pucca reservoir and a pucca channel. Part of the garden is used for the purposes of growing vegetables. The Chairman and Assistant Secretary of the Municipal Board visited the premises on the 5th December 1914. They saw that the vegetable garden was well watered and found the reservoir dry and the channel containing a large amount of leaves. They saw a pair of bullocks entering the compound. Half an hour before this the Chairman and Assistant Secretary had been visiting the other houses in the neighbourhood.

The Court below has drawn, on these facts, the inference that the water which was supplied for domestic purposes had been used for the purpose of watering the garden. The Assistant Secretary stated that in his opinion the reservoir and the channel could not have been used for a fortnight because they were dry and there was a large amount of leaves in the channel. I take it for granted that waste water may be used for the purpose of the garden as it could not be used for a second time for domestic purposes. In my opinion these facts do not legitimately raise the inference that Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh had used the Municipal water. It was cold weather when the premises of the applicant were visited and land watered then continues to be wet for a considerable length of time and the bare fact of the garden being wet at the time is not in itself a sufficient fact even with the presence of leaves in the water channel for the conviction of the applicant of the offence of which he has been convicted. I am, therefore, of opinion that the facts found are insufficient to support the applicant's conviction. I set aside the order of the Court below. The fine will be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

In re NATESA PADAYACHI.

The power of a Court to stop a case if it thinks it a waste of time to go on with it is undoubted and, therefore, where in a Sessions case two of the important witnesses for the prosecution were disbelieved by the Judge and the Assessors and the prosecution was stopped, there was no such patent miscarriage of justice as to call for interference by the High Court. [p. 831, col. 2.]

It is very doubtful if a private party should, as a matter of right, be allowed to move the High Court in such cases. [p. 831, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of Session of the Trichinopoly Division, in Sessions Case No. 52 of 1914.

Mr. R. Kuppusawmi Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—This is a petition to revise the order of the Sessions Judge of Trichinopoly acquitting the accused. The chief ground is that the Judge did not examine all the prosecution witnesses but made up his mind after two of them were examined.

As both of the Assessors were of the same opinion as the Sessions Judge, it would require very strong grounds for the High Court to interfere even if such a power exists. It is significant that the Government has not appealed against the acquittal.

It is very doubtful if a private party should, as a matter of right, be allowed to move the High Court in such cases. In Thandavan v. Perianna (1) it was held that an appeal against an acquittal by way of revision was not contemplated by the Criminal Procedure Code, and their Lordships refused to hear the petitioner's Counsel. In the case of Sinnu Gounden, In re (2) Mr. Justice Miller observes as follows:—"It seems to me that to entertain proceedings by way of revision on a District Magistrate's report in a case when an appeal would lie from an acquittal is contrary to the spirit, if not, to the letter of sub-section 5 of section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code".

The restricted view taken by the Madras High Court as to the scope of sections 417 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, in Thandavan v. Perianna (1) has not been accepted by other Courts and while the power of the High Court is recognised, it has been confined within very narrow limits. I need only refer to Sukho v. Durga Prasad (3); Queen-Empress v. Ala Bakhsh (4); Emperor v. Madar Bakhsh (5): In the matter of Sheikh Amin-ud-din (6); Heera Bai v. Framji Bhikaji (7); Municipal Committee of Dacca v. Hingoo Raj (8); Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Karuna Baistobi (9); Rupa Mandal v. Keshab Mandal (10); Bellew F. D. v. Mrs. Parker (11); Rakhal Das v. Kailash Banu (12); Kangali Sardar v. Bama Charan Bhattacharjee (13); Sheikh Bazu v. Raika Singh (14).

Though in some of the cases above cited the Calcutta High Court went much further than the other Courts as to the extent of the powers of the High Court, the latest case on the point, Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Choudhui (15), lays down that the powers of revision should be exercised when it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice.

I entirely agree with the following observation, of Jenkins, C. J., in the above case: "I am not prepared to say that the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere on revision with an acquittal, but I hold it should ordinarily exercise this jurisdiction sparingly and only where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice."

In the present case I do not think that there has been such a patent miscarriage of justice as to call for interference by the High Court. Two of the important witnesses for the prosecution were disbelieved by the Judge and the Assessors and I cannot say they were wrong. The power of the Court to stop the case if it thinks it a waste of time to go on is undoubted, though the stage at which it ought to do so may be a matter of opinion.

I do not think this is a fit case for interference and dismiss the petition.

Petition dismissed.

In re VENKAPPA AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 283—Obstruction left on public road—Obstruction likely to be caused—Inference—Individual obstruction, proof of, necessity of.

Where a prabha left lying in a public road could not fail to cause obstruction to any person who had occasion to pass along that road:

Held, that though obstruction to any individual was not expressly proved, it was a matter of necessary inference.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Head-quarters Deputy Magistrate, Kurnool Division, in Calendar Case No. 1 of 1913.

Mr. K. B. Ranganadha Ayyar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. C. Adam, for the Public Prosecutor.

ORDER.—The petitioners have been convicted of an offence under section 283, Indian Penal Code, by leaving a "prabha" lying in a public road for 24 hours so as to cause obstruction.

The first point argued is that the abandonment of the "prabha" was due to the action of the Sub-Magistrate (prosecution witness No. 2), who stopped the procession of the accused and others accompanying it and that, therefore, the accused committed no offence. It is certain that the Sub-Magistrate apprehending a breach of the peace stopped the progress of the procession. According to his own account (which there seems no reason to distrust), he simply told the accused to go and bring their elders. According to the defence version, he threatened to fire on the processionists if they persisted in going on. In neither case can it be said that the Magistrate's action justified or excused those carrying the "prabha" in leaving it in the middle of the street in such a way as to cause obstruction even for a short time, to say nothing of 24 hours. This plea cannot be accepted.

It is next represented that the accused were prejudiced by the hurried nature of the trial. I find no ground for holding that this was the case.

Lastly, it is argued, on the authority of Queen v. Khader Moidin (1), that in the absence of evidence of obstruction to any particular individual a conviction under section 283, Indian Penal Code, cannot stand. The evidence on record shows that the road at the place in question is three yards wide, while the "prabha" was two yards wide. Consequently as long as the "prabha" remained on the road no vehicle could pass, and even a foot passenger could not pass without inconvenience. This amounts to saying that the "prabha" could not fail to cause obstruction to any person who had occasion to pass along the road, which is admittedly a public one: and though obstruction to any individual is not expressly proved, it is a matter of necessary inference. I very much doubt whether the ruling in the case above quoted was ever intended to apply to a case of this kind: and, if it were, with due deference to the learned Judges responsible for it, it seems to me to go too far (cf. Mayne's Criminal Law of India, 3rd Edition, paragraph 403). The only other Madras case quoted to me is Queen-Empress v. Virappa Chetti (2). That was an appeal against acquittal. The Court, while expressing some doubt as to the applicability of section 283, Indian Penal Code, pointed out that the case undoubtedly fell under section 290, Indian Penal Code, and ordered a re-trial.

In the present case also, there is clear evidence to support a conviction under section 290, Indian Penal Code, which renders the offender liable to exactly the same punishment as section 283.

Under these circumstances there seems to be no ground for interference, and the petition is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought a suit to recover khas possession of some land. The Court of first instance held that the suit was not barred by limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, held that it was barred by limitation. The matter turns upon the question whether the law applicable to the case is the present Limitation Act or the Act of 1877. The argument of the lower Appellate Court is that according to the old Limitation Act, the defendants' possession became adverse to the plaintiff from the date of the sale and that, therefore, when the suit was instituted more than twelve years had already expired. So that the defendant's title by adverse possession was complete. The plaintiff contends that he is entitled to the benefit of the new Act and he quotes in support of his view the case of Lala Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (1). In that case it was said by their Lordships of the Privy Council that "the High Court rightly held that the law of limitation applicable to a suit or proceeding is the law in force at the date of the institution of the suit or proceeding, unless there is a distinct provision to the contrary." Adopting that principle it appears that the plaintiff is right in contending that he is entitled to the benefit of Article 138 as it now stands and that he has twelve years from the date from which it was confirmed instead of the date on which the sale actually took place. I, therefore, set aside the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge holding that the suit was barred by limitation, and remand the appeal to be heard by that Court in regard to the other contentions.

As nobody appears on behalf of the respondents the plaintiff will bear his own costs in this Court, whatever the result may be.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12 (2)—Appeal—Exclusion of time requisite for obtaining copies.

The judgment of the first Court was delivered on the 15th May, and the decree was signed late on that day. The Courts were closed, except for copying purposes, from the 16th May to the 15th June, inclusive. The defendant applied for copy on the 16th June, received it on the 18th, and filed the appeal to the District Judge on the 19th idem:

Rao Bahadur V. R. Pandit, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. B. Dadabhoy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the merits the appellant has no case in second appeal. She is admittedly the daughter of Musammat Kega and Raghoba. Musammat Kega was the widow of Dhondu, the absolute occupancy tenant of the field in suit. The District Judge has held that Musammat Kega was not married to Raghoba. She, therefore, held the field as a Hindu widow and not adversely to the reversioners, the respondents-defendants.

But it is urged that the appeal to the District Judge was time-barred. The facts are that the judgment of the first Court was delivered on the 15th May, and the decree was signed late on that day. The Courts were closed, except for copying purposes, from the 16th May to the 15th June inclusive. The defendants applied for copy on the 16th June, the day the Court opened, they received the copy of decree on the 18th and filed their appeal on the 19th. The appeal would have been in time if presented on the 16th June, according to section 4 of the Limitation Act, 1908, without any deduction made for the time occupied in obtaining copies under section 12 (2). The right of appeal thus subsisted on the day on which application for copy was made, and as the day on which the copy was granted was rightly excluded, Vide Maharajah Beer Chunder Joobraj v. Mohamed Asgur (1), the appeal was in time, according to Tukaram v. Pandurang (2) and Pandharinath v. Shankar (3). The case of Venkata Row v. Venkatachella Chetty (4) is to be distinguished, as in that case the judgment was not delivered on the last day before the vacation. It makes no difference that in this case the appeal was presented on the day after the day on which copy was granted, since that day was properly excluded. Moreover, the Madras case is in conflict with the Bombay cases, and also with Siyadat-un-nissa v. Muhammad Mahmud (5).

The appeal to the District Judge was in time. This appeal is dismissed with costs.

BROJABASI KOER v. RAM SANKAR DAS.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in an action in ejectment by the plaintiff, who holds a putni from a purchaser at a sale, for arrears of revenue of the residuary share of an estate under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, and seeks to evict the defendants as trespassers. The defendants resist the claim on a two-fold ground, namely, first, that the lands are included within, not the residuary estate purchased by the grantor of the plaintiff, but a separate account which has not been sold, and secondly, that they are, in any event, occupancy raiyats as they have been in possession as cultivators for more than twelve years. The Courts below have concurrently found that the disputed lands lie within the residuary estate, but while the trial Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for ejectment, the Subordinate Judge has taken a contrary view. On the present appeal, the decree of the lower Appellate Court has been assailed substantially on two grounds, first, that as the land has been used for grazing purposes, the defendants are not occupancy raiyats, and secondly, that as the defendants claimed to hold the land under the proprietor of the separate account, they cannot set up a right of occupancy within the residuary estate. In our opinion, there is no foundation for either of these contentions.

As regards the first ground, we observe that section 71 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation provides that property sold under section 70 for arrears of revenue shall be sold free of all incumbrances previously created therein by any other person than the purchaser. But this rule is not to apply to entitle a purchaser to eject any tenant having a right of occupancy under the rent law for the time being in force or to enhance the rent of any such tenant, otherwise than in the manner prescribed by that law. The rent law in force in the district where the land is situated is contained in Act VIII of 1869 (B. C.). Section 6 provides that every raiyat who shall have cultivated or held land for a period of twelve years shall have a right of occupancy in the land so cultivated or held by him, whether it be held under pattah or not, so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same. In the present case, it has been found that the defendants are cultivators; they are consequently raiyats within the meaning of section 6. It has also been found that they have held the entire tract for a period of more than twelve years, a portion has been used for grazing purposes while the remainder is still covered by jungle. The question thus arises, whether the use of the land for grazing purposes entitles the defendant to claim a right of occupancy under section 6. The answer must be in favour of the defendants, on the principle explained in Hedayet Ali v. Kalanand Singh (1) where reference is made to the earlier decisions in Fitzpatrick v. Wallace (2) and Latifar Rahaman v. Forbes (3). The true test is to determine whether the user of the land has been for an agricultural purpose. The land may have been used for the grazing of cattle required for an agricultural pursuits, or it may have been used for the grazing of cattle required for avocations totally unconnected with agriculture. In the former contingency, but not in the latter, the holding has been used for an agricultural purpose and a right of occupancy has been acquired therein. The mere fact that a part of the land is still covered by jungle and has not been actually brought under tillage does not take the case out of the operation of section 6, which applies to land "cultivated or held." The first ground assigned to support the contention that a right of occupancy has not been acquired in the land cannot consequently prevail.

As regard the second ground, we find that the defendants have been in occupation of the land from at least 1876. Since 1900, when the separate account was opened the defendants have, it appears, on some occasions, paid rent to the proprietor of the separate account under the mistaken notion that the land was comprised in that account and not in the residuary estate. This, however, does not affect their position, because as was pointed out in Zoolfun Bibee v. Radhica Prosonno Chunder (4), Ameer Hossein v. Sheo Suhae (5) and Sheo Prokash Misser v. Ram Sahoy Singh (6) a raiyat who has occupied and cultivated land for more than twelve years under a landlord who had no title to the land, nevertheless acquires a right of occupancy under section 6 of Act X of 1859 or Act VIII of 1869, B. C. Consequently the defendants have acquired the status of occupancy raiyats.

The plaintiff-appellant has finally asked that a declaration may be appended to the decree to the effect that as proprietor he is entitled to realize rent from the defendants. The defendants do not object to this prayer. We direct accordingly that a declaration to this effect be added to the decree. Subject to this adition, the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Central Provinces Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 88—Ejectment—Claim by sub-tenant to recover compensation for crops—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court.

The method by which a tenant gets compensation for crops raised by him and reaped by the landlord is laid down in section 88 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, which is plainly a section, when the ejectment is on a decree for arrears of rent, in relation to the execution of decrees transferred to a Revenue Officer. [p. 837, col. 2.]

An ejectment of a tenant on legal grounds is binding on a sub-tenant, and the sub-tenant is not entitled to any remedy not open to the tenant. His only valid cause of action is as representative of the tenant within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 837, col. 2; p. 838, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, dated the 20th March 1913, confirming that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Wardha, dated the 30th August 1912.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.- The circumstances out of which the suit and appeal arise are as follows.

Babusa Teli sub-leased his ordinary holding to the plaintiff by a registered deed of lease for the year 1910-11. The defendant is the malguzar. The defendant had a decree for arrears of rent against Babusa, and in execution of that decree ejected Babusa (and the plaintiff) on the 11th October 1910. Babusa was restored to possession in May 1911, but in the meantime the defendant malguzar had removed the crops raised by the plaintiff sub-tenant. The plaintiff sued the malguzar for the value of the crops so reaped, and got a decree for Rs. 550, which sum represented the value of the crops less the expenses incurred by the defendant in harvesting the crops. The 3rd and 4th issues were:—

III.—Did the Commissioner pass an order of reinstatement of the tenant and was that, if any, subject to any qualification, and if so what?

IV.—Will the present suit lie for restoration of the crops, or will section 88 of the Tenancy Act bar the present suit?

The learned Subordinat Judge held there was nothing in the order of the Commissioner to favour the view that the reinstatement was conditional. As to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court the Subordinate Judge said: "The order of ejectment was set aside by the Tahsildar and Deputy Commissioner, so that in fact there was no ejectment at all. The provisions of section 88 only apply when an order of ejectment is passed. In this case the order, if any, was cancelled, so that the parties are relegated to their former position and there can be no bar to the enforcement of their civil rights in a Civil Court."

On appeal the learned Divisional Judge discussed these questions as follows: "It is first argued that the suit is not cognizable by a Civil Court, a remedy being given for such cases by section 88 of the Tenancy Act. Section 88 directs that expenses should be repaid to the tenant when a proper order for ejectment is passed. It is true that the Commissioner has suggested that the Revenue Court should determine these expenses. But apparently rent was still owing, a fresh application for execution was to be expected and in equity the Revenue Court would have to consider the re-payment before ordering execution. The Commissioner's order is not based solely on the Tahsildar's neglect to consider the question of standing crops and it is, therefore, clear that it was not conditional on Babusa satisfying the present plaintiff and recovering only the expenses of sowing, etc. It must be held then that the defendant's possession was wrongful and he is bound to compensate the plaintiff. I add that fortunately no injury has been inflicted on the defendant as the result of the Tahsildar's order, and its subsequent reversal: the plaintiff is suing for the crops which the defendant admittedly gathered, and which he would not have gathered had the Tahsildar not passed the order. It seems to me that in equity the appellant has no case, particularly as his expenses in gathering the crops are allowed. A civil suit then lies, and I see nothing in the provisions of the Tenancy Act to obstruct the suit."

The only order of a Revenue Officer on the record being the order of the Commissioner, I called for the whole of the revenue records in the case. On the 8th October 1910 the Tahsildar passed an ex parte order, under section 85 of the Tenancy Act, to eject the tenants. They were actually ejected on the 11th October. On the 14th October the Tahsildar dismissed as too late an application asking to set aside the ex parte order and offering to pay the claim in full. On the 22nd December 1910 the Deputy Commissioner ordered that the tenant's application to set aside the ex parte order of ejectment should be disposed of on the merits. The Tahsildar set aside his own ex parte order on the 20th May 1911. On the 26th May 1911 Babusa deposited the amount due by him and he was reinstated in possession. Meanwhile the malguzar had harvested the crops, as appears in the present suit. The malguzar appealed against the order setting aside the ex parte order of ejectment. The Deputy Commissioner declined to interfere, and in the course of his order remarked that whether the reasons for non-attendance were sound or not, the Tahsildar was inconsiderate in passing an ex parte order of ejectment, as the arrears of rent were Rs. 288 or so, the property was worth about Rs. 4,000, and one of the judgment-debtors (Babusa Teli's nephew) was a minor. The malguzar appealed to the Commissioner, whose order runs as follows: "I am unable to hold that the Tahsildar exercised a sound discretion in ordering the immediate ejectment of the tenants at the very first hearing on the 8th October 1910. The land is rented at Rs. 76, and is situated near Arvi. One of the judgment-debtors was a minor, and though his uncle, the other judgment-debtor, may have represented him in the Civil Court, the fact of his minority required consideration. Also in the beginning of October the question of standing crops (section 88) had also to be considered. Babusa's statement that he appeared on the 10th October is apparently contradicted by the Tahsildar's order, dated the 14th October 1910, but the contradiction is not direct and it seems rather improbable that Babusa should state in writing on the 11th that he appeared before the Tahsildar on the very day before without any foundation. However, it seems to be unnecessary to call for a specific answer from the Tahsildar as to Babusa's appearing on the 10th, as it seems to me that the order of the 8th was passed without due consideration. I dismiss the appeal.

"As the Revenue Court ordered ejectment without regard to the provisions of section 88 it seems to me that the Revenue Court should settle the amount payable by the landlord under that section, in respect of the ejectment ordered by it. But this must form the subject of a separate application."

The Financial Commissioner finally refused to interfere with the order setting aside the ex parte ejectment order.

It appears from the above orders that the Divisional Judge was wrong in thinking that any rent was still due from the tenant.

The decree for ejectment was dated the 26th June 1910, the sub-lease to the plaintiff was effected on the 9th June 1910, during the pendency of the suit.

The principal ground of appeal to this Court is that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

Under section 95 of the Tenancy Act no Civil Court can take cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which authority is given to a Revenue Officer. The method by which a tenant gets compensation for crops raised by him and reaped by the landlord is laid down in section 88, which is plainly a section, when the ejectment is on a decree for arrears of rent, in relation to the execution of decrees transferred to a Revenue Officer. Any dispute in connection with the execution of a decree must be dealt with by the officer executing the decree, and cannot form the subject of a separate suit. An ejectment of a tenant on legal grounds is binding on a sub-tenant, and the sub-tenant is not entitled to any remedy not open to the tenant. His only valid cause of action is as representative of the tenant within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. The ejectment order of the Tahsildar put an end to the tenancy and hence also to the sub-tenancy. There was no privity of contract between the landlord and the sub-tenant. The decree for ejectment was as binding on the sub-tenant as it was on the tenant. Here the tenant was a defaulter, and the Tahsildar had the power under the decree to eject him. He was ejected by due process of law and by an executing Court and it was the same executing Court which reinstated him. Any question, therefore, which arose as the result of the action of the executing Court would have to be determined by that Court and not by a separate suit. Moreover the principles of section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code as to restitution seem to be applicable.

The sub-tenant (especially as he got his lease after the institution of the suit against the tenant) claims through the tenant, and cannot possibly be in a better position than the tenant. The dispute is between the parties to the decree of ejectment, as a result of the action of the Revenue Court executing the decree, and, therefore, cannot, under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, form the subject of a separate suit in a Civil Court.

For these reasons I reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.—This case is really concluded by the finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court, and nonetheless so, because that finding may have been very timidly expressed. It is objected that the defendant cannot rely on fraud in the absence of a suit brought by him to set aside the decree. But that does not seem to be a sound appreciation of the position. It has been decided otherwise in the case of Rangnath Sakharam v. Govind Narasinv (1).

The words 'adjustment of a suit' in section 375, Civil Procedure Code, refer not only to the form in which the decree is to be drawn up but also the manner in which the rights of the parties are to be enforced in the execution proceedings of that suit. Therefore, under section 91 of the Evidence Act, no extraneous evidence, oral or Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, West Berar, dated the 24th June 1913, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Khamgaon, dated the 29th April 1907.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents, Sitaram and Gulab Chand, filed Civil Suit No. 402 of 1906 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Khamgaon, on the basis of a mortgage executed by the defendant-appellant, Hukam Chand. One Ram Gopal Beharilal, who was the purchaser of the mortgaged property other than the house and stables in dispute, was the second defendant in the suit. On 29th April 1907 Hukam Chand filed an application to the effect that he has compromised the suit and prayed that a decree may be passed in the plaintiffs' favour as claimed in the plaint. The Court then recorded the statements of the Pleaders for the parties regarding the compromise. An issue, however, had to be framed as between the plaintiffs and the second defendant regarding the latter's right to the marshalling of securities.

On the same day, judgment was delivered. The judgment recites that the compromise entitled the plaintiffs as against the defendant No. 1 to a decree for Rs. 4,000 and costs to be passed against the mortgaged property, in case the sum is not paid within six months. A decree for sale was drawn up for Rs. 4,000 and costs declaring the entire mortgaged property liable to sale. This decree has been executed from time to time. In 1908, when the house of the judgment-debtor was attached, the latter applied for its release on the ground that on account of the famine, the house was not then likely to fetch a proper price. The judgment-debtor, therefore, prayed the Court to sell the fields first. This has been now done, and the decree is still unsatisfied. The decree-holder has again applied for the attachment of the house and stables. On the 18th January 1912, Hukam Chand for the first time pleaded that prior to the passing of the decree on the 29th April 1907, there was an agreement between the plaintiffs and himself to the following effect:—

1. That in satisfaction of the amount of rupees three thousand out of the decretal amount of Rs. 4,000 the decree-holder was to purchase the mortgaged fields by bidding at the auction sale.

2. That the decree-holder was to give up his claim for Rs. 1,000.

3. That in satisfaction of the amount of costs the decree-holder was to take the stables.

On this ground Hukam Chand has applied for the release of the house from attachment. The Courts below have held that such an agreement cannot be inquired into under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Hukam Chand has filed this second appeal. His learned Counsel relies on the Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court in Laldas Narandas v. Kishordas Devidas (1). But the weight of authority is distinctly in favour of the opposite view. I need only refer to the following decisions of the Calcutta High Court:—Benode Lal Pakrashi v. Brajendra Kumar Saha (2), Chhoti Narain Singh v. Musammat Rameshwar Koer (3), Hassan Ali v. Gauzi Ali Mir (4).

I entirely agree with what has been laid down by Pratt and Mitra, JJ., in Chhoti Narain Singh v. Musammat Rameshwar Koer (3). An extract from that judgment is given below:

"A contract made between the parties to a suit in derogation of a decree which may be passed in future cannot form the subject of an inquiry under section 244, Civil Procedure Code, in a proceeding for the execution of the decree. Questions under section 244, clause (c), relating to the execution of a decree and arising between the parties to a suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives, must be such as have reference to matters arising subsequent to the passing of the decree and not antecedent to it. An agreement not to execute a decree, if effect is sought to be given to it in execution proceedings, must be a transaction between the parties subsequent to the decree: Mukund Harshet v. Haridas Khemji (5) and not one which would make the decree itself void as being in contravention of the agreement."

There is an additional ground for dismissing this appeal. The agreement now pleaded in bar of execution was arrived at on the 29th April 1907, when the compromise was recorded by the Court under the provisions of section 375, Civil Procedure Code, 1882. It was part and parcel of the same compromise which was recorded that day. I think the words "adjustment of a suit" refer not only to the form in which the decree is to be drawn up but also the manner in which the rights of the parties are to be enforced in the execution proceedings of that suit. In other words, an agreement not to execute the decree is part of the adjustment of the suit within the meaning of section 375. It was the duty of the parties to have set forth the terms of the compromise fully and to have got them recorded. This was a matter required by section 375 to be reduced to the form of a document, namely, the record of a Court. Therefore, under section 91 of the Evidence Act, no extraneous evidence, oral or documentary, regarding the terms of the compromise is admissible in that suit and its execution proceedings. Parties cannot under section 375 ask the Court to draw up a solemn decree which is not meant to be enforced in execution.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

RULE NO. 58 OF 1915.

This Rule was issued on the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Munsif, dated the 22nd October 1914, should not be set aside on the ground that the opposite party was not the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It appears that the petitioner obtained a decree against an occupancy ryot for arrears of rent and in execution of that decree, the holding was sold on the 8th September 1914 and was purchased by the petitioner. On the 22nd October 1914 a deposit of the decretal amount was made by the wife of the transferee of the tenant in question and on that day in consequence of the deposit thus made, the sale was set aside by the Munsif of Katihar in the following terms: "The judgment-debtor has deposited the entire decretal amount and compensation within time. Let the sale be set aside and the case dismissed after full satisfaction of claim."

The petitioner obtained the present Rule on the ground that section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act under which the deposit in question was made, refers only to a deposit by the judgment-debtor himself and hence the transferee of the judgment-debtor does not come under section 174 of the Act. It was contended that the deposit that was made by him was no deposit by the judgement-debtor and that the sale, therefore, should not have been set aside.

In Ranjit Kumar Ghosh v. Jogendra Nath Roy (1) it was held that the application under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be made by the judgment-debtor alone and by no other person.

We, therefore, make the Rule absolute, set aside the order of the Munsif and confirm the sale.

This order will govern the other Rule No. 59 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff for declaration of title to land and for recovery of possession thereof. The property in dispute admittedly belonged to a family of Jhas, now represented by the defendants second party. In 1881 the Jhas mortgaged the property to Manoji Narain Singh, the predecessor-in-interest of the first party defendant. The mortgagee sued in due course, obtained a decree, and at the sale which followed thereon purchased the mortgaged property on the 27th July 1891. The sale was confirmed on the 26th September 1891. There was some delay in the issue of the certificate of sale, which was not granted till the 26th April 1892. Symbolical possession was thereafter delivered to the purchaser on the 4th February 1894. Meanwhile, on the 28th March 1892 the purchaser included the property in a mortgage executed by him in favour of one Barhamdeo Prosad, now represented by the plaintiff. A decree was obtained on this mortgage on the 29th April 1897 and at the execution sale which followed, the decree-holder became the purchaser on the 10th May 1904. The sale was confirmed on the 19th December 1904 and symbolical possession was thereafter delivered to the purchaser on the 18th January 1905. The plaintiff was, however, unable to obtain actual possession, and consequently instituted this suit on the 27th August 1909. His claim was resisted by some of the defendants, who claimed to have acquired the right, title and interest of the Jhas by various transactions subsequent to the mortgage of 1881. Their defence was substantially two-fold namely, first, that the mortgage of 1881 which is the root of the title of the plaintiff was a fictitious transaction and, secondly, that the suit was barred by limitation. The Courts below have concurrently found in favour of the defendants upon each of these points and have dismissed the suit. On the present appeal the decision of the District Judge on both the points has been questioned as contrary to law.

As regards the first ground of defence, it is plain that the defendants, who have derived title from the Jhas subsequent to the mortgage of 1881, cannot be permitted to impeach the genuineness of that transaction to the detriment of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. It may be conceded that as between the mortgagors and the mortgagee of 1881, the former could show against the latter, so long as the rights of no third party intervened, the fictitious nature of the transaction; but they cannot be allowed to do so when an innocent stranger has in good faith acquired a title for value on the faith of the reality of the mortgage. This position is amply supported by the decisions in Ram Charan Das v. Joy Ram Majhi (1), Radha Madhab Paikara v. Kalpataru Roy (2) and Akhil Prodhan v. Manmatha Nath Kar (3). To the same effect is the decision in Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Crowther (4). The situation here is, in fact, stronger than even a case where the true owner has placed an ostensible transferee in a position to mislead a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the secret title; the mortgage, the suit thereon, the execution sale, and the delivery of possession through Court, constitute an elaborate network of devices sufficient to induce the belief that the title of the Jhas has vested in Monoji Narain Singh. Consequently the rule applies by which a bona fide transferee for value from an ostensible owner is allowed to protect himself against a claim by the real owner. Ram Coomar v. John and Maria Mcqueen (5), Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishore Mohun Roy (6), Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder (7); Varden Seth Sam v. Luckpathy Royjee (8); Colonial Bank v. Cady (9) and Cairncross v. Lorimer (10). We must, consequently, hold that the title of the plaintiff is not impeachable at the instance of the defendants as the representatives of the original proprietors.

As regards the second ground of defence, it is plain that Article 137 of the first Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, governs the case. That Article provides that a suit by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree for possession of immoveable property, when the judgment-debtor was out of possession at the date of the sale, must be instituted within twelve years from the date when the judgment-debtor is first entitled to possession. The Courts below have concurrently found that notwithstanding the delivery of symbolical possession to Monoji Narain Singh on the 4th February 1894, the Jhas continued in possession, and they were in possession even when symbolical possession was delivered to the predecessor of the plaintiff on the 18th January 1905. This latter delivery of possession was operative as against the then judgment-debtor, namely, Monoji Narain Singh, but was wholly ineffectual to affect the title or interrupt the actual possession of the Jhas. Juggobundhu Mukerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (11) and Joggobundhu Mitter v. Purnanund Gossami (12). The plaintiff was subsequently bound to sue within twelve years from the date when his judgment-debtor, Monoji Narain Singh, was first entitled to possession, i.e., within twelve years from the 4th February 1894 when symbolical possession was delivered to Monoji Narain Singh as against the Jhas. The plea of limitation would have been of no avail if the suit had been instituted on or before the 4th February 1906. The inference follows that the suit, instituted as it was on the 27th August 1909, is barred by limitation under Article 137. In this view it is needless to consider a question of considerable nicety which was argued at the Bar and which has led to considerable divergence of judicial opinions, namely, whether possession adverse to the mortgagor also operates to the prejudice of the Mortgage-bond, suit on, for recovery—Hard and unconscionable bargain—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 16—Security, if ample, effect of—Undue influence, presumption of—Rate of interest, excessive, effect of—Personal loans—Compound interest, stipulation of, when a penalty—English Money Lenders' Act compared—English Judge's dicta to be followed.

The Courts have ample powers under the amended Contract Act to go behind hard and unconscionable bargains on the ground that where there is ample security, the exaction of excessive and usurious interest in itself raises a presumption of undue influence which it requires very little evidence to substantiate. [p. 844, col. 1.]

The attempt to conceal the real rate of interest by describing it as one pice in the rupee per mensem or, as in the present case, Rs. 5 per mensem is evidence of an intention to get the better of the debtor, and the law seems to be that there must be a footing of complete equality between debtor and creditor and they must be, so to speak, at arm's length to make a bargain, which is in itself harsh and unconscionable enforceable at law. [p. 844, col. 2.]

Carringtons Limited v. Smith, (1906) 1 K. B. 79; 75 L. J. K. B. 49; 54 W. R. 424; 93 L. T. 779; 22 T. L. R. 109 and In re a Debtor, (1903) 1 K. B. 795; 72 L. J. K. B. 382; 51 W. R. 370; 88 L. T. 401; 19 T. L. R. 288; 10 Manson 130, referred to.

Under the amended section 16 of the Contract Act the question of a harsh and unconscionable bargain can only be considered in reference to undue influence. [p. 844, col. 2.]

Where there is ample security an excessive rate of interest has been held to be anything over 10 per cent. Where there is no security, no rate of interest can be considered excessive. There can be no standard rate on personal loans. [p. 844, col. 2.]

Where the parties are reasonably on terms of equality, a Judge cannot do better than adopt what they themselves have agreed on. [p. 845, col. 1.]

A presumption of undue influence could arise from the fact that a security of over Rs. 3,000 with mortgage already on it for a much smaller amount was given for a loan of Rs. 80. [p. 845, col. 1.]

Where a contract is for a temporary accommodation, the stipulation that interest is to run at Rs. 5 month, is one which necessitates the payment of interest not at 60 per cent. per annum but at Rs. 5 in each month, and a stipulation that in default of 12 months' instalments of interest compound interest would begin to run at 60 per cent. is in the nature of a penalty. [p. 845, col. 1.]

It is the duty of the Courts in India to enforce the letter of the law against obviously harsh and unconscionable bargains of this nature. [p. 845 col. 1.]

Avathani Muthukrishnier v. Sankaralingam Pillai, 18 Ind. Cas. 417; 36 M. 229; 13 M. L. T. 20; 24 M. L. J. 135 and Samuel v. Newbold, (1906) A. C. 461; 75 L. J. Ch. 705, 95 L. T. 209; 22 T. L. R. 703, followed.

Excess of interest or charges may itself be evidence of a harsh and unconscionable bargain and particularly, if it is unexplained. If no justification be established the presumption hardens into a certainty. [p. 845, col. 2.]

The amendments in the Indian Law of Contract go further in the direction of relief against harsh and unconscionable bargains than those of the English Money Lenders' Act and, therefore, the dicta of English Judges under that Act might be accepted. [p. 846, col. 1.]

Where it is found that there is technically a penalty in the bond, Judges should go behind the contract, which is one and indivisible, as to interest and refuse compound interest altogether. [p. 846, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover Rs. 1,300 being principal Rs. 80, and interest, Rs. 1,220, on a mortgage bond executed by three defendants on 1st Jaistha 1312.

The transaction was an unusual one and the facts found require to be carefully stated as well as the circumstances which are admitted in connection with the giving of the mortgage-bond and recited in the bond itself.

It appears that Abdul Majid, defendant No. 1, mortgaged 6 annas of a raiyati jote in which his brother, defendant No. 2, was also interested while defendant No. 3 a relative, mortgaged three 6-anna shares of jotes and an 8-anna share of a howla belonging exclusively to him.

The three defendants had bid successfully at a sale of the land of one Nagarbashi Kundu and had deposited the earnest money.

They were in immediate need of Rs. 80 to complete the purchase and applied to the former creditor of defendant No. 3, one Harish Chandra Pal who had a mortgage on properties Nos. 1 to 4, on which he has according to the plaint recently got a decree for a heavy claim, and by him they were introduced to the plaintiff, another moneylender. The Rs. 80 was obviously only required as a temporary accommodation and the security given was worth over Rs. 3,000, for the property No. 5 was sold under Harish Chandra Pal's decree for Rs. 650 and there are three similar jotes and a larger taluki interest also mortgaged. Yet interest at 60 per cent. with compound interest was agreed to. The defendants' story is that the land they had purchased was released from sale by deposit of the decretal money by the original owner and they, therefore, tendered the principal Rs. 80 and Rs. 8 interest to the plaintiff who took the Rs. 8 and pursuaded defendant No. 1 to let the principal sum stand over on promising to forego compound interest and to reduce the simple interest by half. This story has been disbelieved by the lower Courts as far as the payment of Rs. 8 and the oral agreement is concerned, but no finding has been come to as to the probability of the defendants having desired to pay off the debt when they had the money.

The lower Court has also held that no fraud was practised on the defendants because defendant No. 1 is a very clever man and able to take care of himself and entered into the bond with his eyes open. But here the lower Court has fallen into the error of not considering the position of defendant No. 3, who had a far larger interest in the property mortgaged than anybody else and who is an ordinary cultivator.

Every presumption must be made in his favour and the lower Court appears to have erred in not applying the doctrines of undue influence and penalty very strictly to his case. The trend of modern decisions is to hold that the Courts have ample powers under the amended Contract Act to go behind harsh and unconscionable bargains on the ground that where there is ample security, the exaction of excessive and usurious interest in itself raises a presumption of undue influence which it requires very little evidence to substantiate. Further, it has been held that the attempt to conceal the real rate of interest by describing it as one pice in the rupee per mensem or, as in the present case, Rs. 5 per mensem is evidence of an intention to get it better of the debtor and the law seems to be that there must be a footing of complete equality between debtor and creditor and they must be, so to speak, at arm's length to make a bargain which is in itself harsh and unconscionable, enforceable at law. We may refer to the case of Carringtons Limited v. Smith (1) and the discussion at page 87 of the meaning of the terms 'harsh' and 'unconscionable'. It is pointed out that in In re a Debtor (2) the Master of the Rolls and Cozens Hardy, L. J., each say that under the section of the Money Lenders Act which deals with harsh and unconscionable bargains the interest charged might be so excessive as of itself to render the bargain harsh and unconscionable. This does not mean that if only it is shown that a high rate of interest has been charged by a moneylender a Judge has complete power at his discretion to make a new contract for the parties. But it may mean that a very high rate of interest might raise a presumption that that rate had been extorted by conduct harsh and unconscionable, or it may mean that the same circumstances which showed that the rate was excessive might and often would show that the transaction was harsh and unconscionable. At the end of the judgment of Cozens Hardy, L. J., he expressly says that the Court must have regard to all the circumstances of the case and this, says Channell, J., is the proposition upon which the whole matter turns.

Now under the amended section 16 of the Contract Act, this question of a harsh and unconscionable bargain can only be considered in reference to undue influence. Where there is ample security an excessive rate of interest has been held to be anything over 10 per cent., where there is no security no rate of interest can be considered excessive. There can be no standard rate on personal loan; and where the parties are reasonably on terms of equality, a Judge cannot do better than adopt what they themselves have agreed on, though of course when that is not the case he has to adjudge what is reasonable as best he can under all the circumstances.

Applying these principles to section 16 and to the case before us, we think that a presumption of undue influence could arise from the fact that a security of over Rs. 3,000 with mortgage already on it for a much smaller amount was given for a loan of Rs. 80 and although on the findings of fact of the lower Courts such a presumption would in no way help defendant No. 1 nor possibly his brother, defendant No. 2, who is his co-sharer in property No. 5, it certainly applies in full force to defendant No. 3 against whom there is no finding that he knew what he was doing and who gave the greater part of the security without any idea that 60 per cent. compound interest would be running against him for six years. We must take it from the terms of the bond that the intention of the parties was to pay Rs. 5 a month interest for a few months until the small principal of Rs. 80 was paid off, and we cannot believe that no attempt was made by defendant No. 3 to pay this money and there is no finding whatever against him in either of the judgments.

Further, the contract being for a temporary accommodation the stipulation that interest was to run at Rs. 5 a month, was one which necessitated the payment of interest not at 60 per cent. per annum, but at Rs. 5 in each month and a stipulation that in default of 12 months' instalments of interest compound interest would begin to run at 60 per cent, is in the nature of a penalty.

However technical this may be, we think it is the duty of the Courts in India to enforce the letter of the law against obviously harsh and unconscionable bargains of this nature. The contract failing, therefore, as regards defendant No. 3 and being a joint mortgage, it equally fails against the other defendants.

Our view upon both these points has recently been propounded by the Madras High Court. In the case of Avathani Muthu Krishnier v. Sankaralingam Pillai (3) the question of penalty was dealt with and the remarks of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in making the reference to the Full Bench have our entire concurrence. If we may respectfully say so, it is a masterly exposition of the intentions of the Legislature in India and a complete answer to the somewhat timid reluctance of the Courts in the earlier decisions to take a more extended view of their powers under section 74 of the Contract Act. We entirely agree that "the exploitation of the necessitous, the careless and inexperienced is a trade to be extirpated in the interest of the whole community as contrary to individual morality as well as to public policy."

At the risk of repetition we cite the words of Lord Loreburn, L. C., in Samuel v. Newbold (4): "In my opinion this contention cannot be maintained, nor ought a Court of Law to be alert in placing a restricted construction upon the language of a remedial Act. The section means exactly what it says, namely, that if there is evidence which satisfies the Court that the transaction is harsh and unconscionable, using those words in a plain and not in any way technical sense, the Court may re-open it, provided, of course, that the case meets the other conditions required. There are many illustrations and as in the case of fraud, it is neither practicable nor expedient to attempt any exhaustive definition. What the Court has to do in such circumstances is, if satisfied that the interest or charges are excessive, to see whether in truth and fact and according to its sense of justice the transaction was harsh and unconscionable. We are asked to say that an excessive rate of interest could not be of itself evidence that it was so. I do not accept that view. Excess of interest or charges may itself be such evidence and particularly, if it is unexplained. If no justification be established the presumption hardens into a certainty".

Now in the case before us no explanation whatever is offered of the harsh and unconscionable interest charged in a case where the fullest security covering the loan forty times over was given and no explanation is given why the money-lender whom the defendants apparently trusted, handed them over to another shark who was able to ruin them entirely. It was the opinion of the Full Bench that the amendments in the Indian Law of Contract went further in the direction of relief against harsh and unconscionable bargains than those of the English Money Lenders' Act and that, therefore, the dicta of English Judges under that Act might be accepted and Sadasiva Aiyar, J., summed up the judgment of the Full Bench by saying, "I do not intend to go further than I have done in my reference order into all the English and Indian cases in which learned Judges have, by the use of refined, subtle language and the enunciation of variously worded tests and principles, tried to persuade themselves that they were acting on any other principles in giving relief against prima facie unconscionable bargains, except the one intelligible principle that the provision relieved against was unreasonable in the view of ordinary men of the world possessing the usual quantum of common sense."

Having found that there is technically a penalty in the bond before us, we propose to go behind the contract as to interest and to refuse compound interest altogether.

But we would go further in reference to section 16 which was dealt with in the case of Kesavulu Naidu v Arithulai Ammal (5).

The learned Chief Justice points out that the Judge in the Court of Appeal below found against fraud as in this case and does not find that there was undue influence, but he assumes for the purposes of the appeal before him, as we must assume in this appeal, that it is open to the High Court to deal with the case as if there had been a plea of undue influence raised. In the end the learned Judges held that the presumption arising from the unconscionable nature of the bargain for 60 per cent. interest had been rebutted and gave the plaintiff a decree, but the principle that such a presumption would arise was upheld and on the facts found in this case, we cannot say that it has been rebutted.

The parties were not at arm's length. The defendants needed the money on the spot, their own money-lender took advantage of them and made them over to a confederate who, by representing that the loan was a temporary one at 5 per cent. per mensem was enabled to pile up 60 per cent. compound interest by not asking for payment. Had it been open to us to go into the facts we should probably have been able to find that only Rs. 88 was due and had been tendered, but we are precluded from doing this in second appeal. We can only find that having regard to the very large security given, to the ignorance and want of knowledge of defendant No. 3 and to the conduct of the parties even if defendant No. 1 has no defence, it must certainly be held that defendant No. 3 did not enter into a valid contract to pay 60 per cent. compound interest. The contract being one and indivisible, we must go behind it as a whole and give reasonable interest, which we fix at 30 per cent. simple interest as that was what defendants themselves were prepared to admit. This will work out at Rs. 80, principal, and interest for seven years 6 days, Rs. 168-6-5. There will, therefore, be a mortgage-decree for Rs. 248-6-5 with costs to the plaintiff in proportion to his success.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 will get no costs on the amount disallowed. The defendant No. 3 will get costs on the sum disallowed in proportion to the amount of his security.

Decree medified.

A single Judge of the High Court, when disposing of an application to exercise the High Court's revisional jurisdiction over a subordinate Court under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), exercises "appellate jurisdiction" within the meaning of section 13 of the High Courts Act and his order is a judgment even when the Judge merely declines to interfere in revision, and it is immaterial whether before such refusal the records were called for or notice issued to the other side, and an appeal lies from such an order under section 15 of the Letters Patent. Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondent.

This Letters Patent Appeal coming on for hearing on the 3rd March 1915, the Court (the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Napier), made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO THE FULL BENCH.

In this case Mr. Justice Miller sitting in the Admission Court rejected the petition filed by the petitioner to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction. The question for consideration is, whether the said order of the learned Judge is a judgment within the meaning of section 15 of the Letters Patent. On the principle of stare decisis, I am inclined to the view that it is a judgment: but as my learned brother takes the contrary view, it is desirable that the question should be referred for the decision of a Full Bench. The point on which the opinion is requested is "whether the order of a single Judge of the High Court rejecting the petition to send for the records and to revise the judgment of the lower Court exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction, is a judgment within the meaning of section 15 of the Letters Patent."

This Letters Patent Appeal coming on the 22nd March 1915 on the question referred to the Full Bench for decision, upon perusing the order of reference and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, Counsel, for the Appellant, and of Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, Vakil, for the Respondent, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court expressed the following OPINION.—We are bound by the decision of the majority of the Full Bench of five Judges in Chappan v. Moidin Kutti (1) to hold that in disposing of an application to exercise the High Court's revisional jurisdiction over a Court subordinate to it, a single Judge acts in the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of the Court within the meaning of section 13 of the High Courts Act, and consequently that, if his order of disposal amounts to a judgment, an appeal lies from it under clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

We also think that we are bound by the decision of the Full Bench in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (2) to hold that such order is a judgment even when the Judge merely declines to interfere in revision, and that it is immaterial whether before such refusal the records were called for or notice issued to the other side. The decisions in Venkatarama Ayyar v. Madalai Ammal (3) and Puthukudi Abdu v. Puvakka Kunhi Kutti (4) must, therefore, in our opinion, be treated as overruled.

At the same time we think it right to say that in matters of discretion such as this, the Court will not ordinarily interfere on appeal though it has jurisdiction to do so. This is the practice of the Court of Appeal in England [See Annual Practice, 1915, page 1911, citing Golding v. Wharton Salt Works Co. (5)] and should, we think, be followed here.

This Letters Patent Appeal coming on for hearing on the 29th April 1915, after the return of the opinion of the Full Bench referred by this Court, the Court (Seshagiri Aiyar and Napier, JJ.) delivered the following.

JUDGMENT.—We see no sufficient reason for interfering with the discretion of the learned Judge in refusing to send for the records.

The appeal is dismissed. There will be no costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit by a principal against his agent for accounts. The agency was created on the 24th May 1896, for management of immoveable property. In 1897 the principal transferred the property to his wife and two years later the wife re-transferred the property to her husband. The agent, however, continued to manage the properties as if no transfer had been effected. The agency was finally terminated in 1910, and the present suit was commenced on the 22nd March 1911 for accounts in respect of the years 1306 to 1317. The Court of first instance held that the terms of the agreement were enforceable and made a decree accordingly. By the agreement, which was embodied in a registered document, immoveable property had been hypothecated and the Court of first instance held that the suit was in essence a suit to enforce a charge against immoveable property within the meaning of Article 132 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge has held that effect of the transfer of the property, for management whereof the agent was appointed, was to terminate the agency, and, that when the property was re-transfered by the wife to the husband, a new agency was created independently of the terms of the original contract: Behari Lal v. Hara Kumar (1). In this view, he has held that Article 132 was not applicable; he has thus treated the suit as one for accounts by a principal against his agent. At the same time, he has held not quite consistently with his view as to the effect of the transfer, that as under the original agreement accounts were to be rendered at the end of each year, the plaintiff was entitled to accounts only in respect of the three years antecedent to the suit. On the present appeal, it has been argued that the judgment is inconsistent and that if the transfer by the husband in favour of the wife was a real transaction which terminated the agency and if a new agency was created in 1899 on the re-transfer by the wife to the husband, no reference can legitimately be made to the terms of the original agreement. The argument in substance is that Article 89 is applicable to the suit and that as it has been instituted within three years from the date of the termination of the agency, the plaintiff is entitled to the accounts claimed. In our opinion this contention is well founded and must prevail.

Article 89 provides that a suit by a principal against his agent for moveable property received by the latter and not accounted for must be instituted within three years from the date when the agency terminates or from the date when there has been a refusal to render accounts during the continuance of the agency. As in this case, there was no demand and refusal during the continuance of the agency, and as the suit has been instituted within three years of the date when the agency terminated, the plaintiff is clearly entitled to the accounts claimed. On behalf of the respondent it has been contended, however, that the accounts should be limited to the three years antecedent to the suit. For this proposition no authority has been cited and the terms of Article 89 do not support the contention; on the other hand, the view we take is supported by the decisions of this Court in the cases of Shib Chandra Roy Chowdhury v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (2) and Hafezuddin Mandal v. Jadu Nath Saha (3). Reference has been made to the fact that a different view was taken in Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (4), where the decision in Mati Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhay (5) was accepted as good law. As pointed out, however, in the case of Troilukhyanath Mandal v. Abanish Chandra Roy(6), the attention of the learned Judges who decided the case of Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (4) was not drawn to the earlier decision in Hafizuddin Mandal v. Jadu Nath Saha (3), and we are not prepared to accept it as good law.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Court below discharged. A preliminary decree is made in favour of the plaintiff for the accounts claimed in the suit. This decree is made on the assumption that a new agency was created in 1899 irrespective of the agreement of 1896. The case will now be remitted to the Court of first instance in order that the accounts may be taken. The appellant is entitled to his costs both in this Court and in the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 21st April 1913 and the 3rd December 1913, and having stood over for consideration till 17th December 1913, the Court (Sir Arnold White, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tyabji) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

TYABJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed to be mutawalli of the lands which admittedly formed part of waqf lands prior to Exhibit I, dated 27th May 1867, and which were then admittedly attached to a mosque. The lands referred to in the plaint formed a portion of those lands and are now in the possession of defendants Nos. 4 and 5. The issues raised in the suit, so far as at present material, are as follows:—

(1) "Whether the plaintiff is the present mutawalli of the plaint-mentioned Masjid and as such entitled to the possession of the suit lands;

(2) whether the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are entitled to hold and enjoy the lands as managers of the plaint mentioned Masjid;

(3) is the suit barred by limitation?"

The District Musif found—

(1) that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he was solely entitled to the mutawalli-ship of the Masjid;

(2) that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 had acquired a title as against the plaintiff to hold the lands as trustees of the Masjid; and

(3) that the suit was barred by limitation.
